Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished in plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.
Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.
REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET
Chicago (Established 1853),
Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.
It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.
Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS
—IN—
POPULAR SCIENCE.
EDITED BY DANA ESTES.
The growing demand in this country for books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.
25 cts. per Part; $2.50 for twelve consecutive Parts.
No. 1. STRANGE DISCOVERIES RESPECTING THE AURORA AND RECENT SOLAR RESEARCHES. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
No. 2. THE CRANIAL AFFINITIES OF MAN AND THE APE. By Prof. Rudolph Virchow, of Berlin, author of Cellular Pathology. Fully illustrated.
No. 3. SPECTRUM ANALYSIS EXPLAINED, and its Uses to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood-cuts.
No. 4. SPECTRUM ANALYSIS DISCOVERIES, showing its Application in Microscopic Research, and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen, Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins, and others.
No. 5. NEBULÆ, METEORIC SHOWERS, AND COMETS.
No. 6. UNCONSCIOUS ACTION OF THE BRAIN AND EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS. By Dr. Carpenter, author of The Microscope and its Revelations, Human Physiology, etc.
No. 7. THE GEOLOGY OF THE STARS. By Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of Sketches of Creation.
No. 8. ON YEAST. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.
No. 9. THE CIRCULATION OF THE WATERS ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH. By Prof. H. W. Dove.
No. 10. THE STONE AGE, PAST AND PRESENT. By Edward B. Tylor, author of Primitive Culture.
No. 11. THE RELATION BETWEEN MATTER AND FORCE. By Prof. John H. Tice, of St. Louis.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1874. WHOLE NO. 231.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

HENRY JAMES says: "Genius is God's spoiled child in the world." Every naturally dull person ought to be assuaged by this remark.

IN THE LIBRARY presented by Senator Sumner to Harvard College is Robert Burns' own manuscript of his poem entitled, "Scots who hae wi' Wallace bled."

THE MASSACHUSETTS Registration Report shows the average age of cultivators of the soil to be 65:13 years,—being 14:19 years more than the average of all occupations.

IT IS NOT the "melancholy days" that have come now, but the beautiful ones; when Nature is in her irresistible mood, and all true hearts are glad to yield to her sweet blandishments.

WOODHULL and Claflin's Weekly says: "In cases [in our courts] in which both sexes are concerned, both sexes ought to be represented, not only in the jury-box, but on the bench." And does not the common sense of justice say Amen?

"PRINCESS" Nellie Grant had "fifty silk dresses" and a "trunk full of stockings" to get married with. Mary Clemmer Ames says this fact severely exercised the feminine mind at Washington.

THE EDITOR of the American Sportsman has recently purchased a dog, in England, at a cost of six hundred dollars. Such reckless expenditure proves that this editor is going to the dogs rapidly.

A PROMINENT American literary gentleman, who thoroughly knows Mr. Thomas Carlyle, admirably describes the famous Scotchman thus: "A roaring, riotous, most benighted, but not unbenignant brother."

MR. AGASSIZ once said of animals: "In some incomprehensible way, God Almighty has created these things; and I cannot doubt of their immortality any more than I doubt of my own." The same reasoning that would make man immortal would surely seem to presume for animals the same chance.

"THE PROMISES of happiness in life," says one, "are like those of our greenbacks—lies 'fra end to end,' false promises never to be redeemed." This seems to us rather a strong statement. One should reckon one's happiness by quality rather than quantity; for sometimes the experience which we have in one moment is worth more to us than that of many days.

LOOKS, glances of the eye, shiftings of thought-shadows on the face, are wonderful things; more wonderful than words are they. For better than words, and swifter, they telegraph the thoughts of the mind and the feelings of the heart. Words at the best are halting and awkward messengers, often spoiling what they undertake to carry; but looks are subtile and facile, and land us straightway in one another's meaning.

THE NATIONAL House of Representatives, in voting recently upon the admission of Mr. Cannon of Utah (the objection to him being that he was a Mormon, with four wives), decided that a man's moral character, or conduct, does not prevent him, Constitutionally, from being entitled to a seat in Congress. We are surprised that this should have needed a formal vote, since the eligibility of immoral Congressmen has been practically decided for a long time.

MR. GLADSTONE is reported as telling his friends that he regrets having given so many years of his life to politics. "How little," he remarks, "do politics affect the life, the moral life, of a nation! One single good book influences the people a vast deal more." The ex premier, we believe, is right. Faith in truth, and promulgation of ideas, is what the world needs; not a resort to party-making and political contrivances. In the school house, not in the State house, is our national salvation. An inspirer more than a statesman is the desideratum of this country to-day!

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB had its last regular meeting of the season, last Monday evening; and the occasion was a delightful and memorable one. The past season has been one of unusual interest and profit to the Club, and all its members enter upon the present vacation with most pleasant memories of the season just closed. This last night was a Festival Night. Simple refreshments were furnished, which were followed by short speeches and poems from the members. Abbot, Gannett, Verity, and Miss Hotchkiss contributed poems which were most cordially received; while Morse, Park, Wetherbee, Prof. Gunning, Ranney, Kendall, Mrs. Dr. Safford-Blake, and Stephen Pearl Andrews made brief but acceptable speeches. Before closing, the Club voted to have a picnic sometime during the summer.

MR. BEECHER'S eleventh Yale Lecture was on Christian Manhood. In the course of it there occurs the following striking and vigorous sentence:—

My conception of a perfect man is one who is strong; who is full of energy; full of appetites and passions, and, therefore, of that wonderful force which is wrought by them, or which transforms itself into auxiliary forces; full of life; full of thought-power; full of æsthetic excellences; and full of that central element of love to which all other influences are subordinated, and which is itself subordinate to God. Now, give me a man like this. Where do you find him?—the man of liberty; the man of infinite largeness; the man that goes freely whither he will, up and down, all the faculties playing in harmony with the concert-pitch of the universe, which is love? Show me that perfect man. I have never seen him.

And we probably never shall see him until we have the "liberty" that is necessary as a condition to make him.

MRS. ZINA FAY PIERCE, a very able and thoughtful woman, thinks that temperance reformers should make a distinction between the milder and more fiery liquors; that beer-drinking and billiard-playing are in themselves conducive to morality, and should be rescued from their present disrepute; that the true way to promote temperance is to establish good beer-gardens, where young people may drink moderately of mild liquors, dance, play billiards, and have a good time generally; that tea-drinking is ruinous to women, and they would be much better off if they would drink it but once a day, and take a pint of mild beer every noon; that the total-abstinence pledge, except for people in whom drunkenness is a disease, is a "stigma upon the Communion, and a direct accusation against the wisdom and morality of our blessed Saviour himself." It is well to listen to the opinions of all sincere and capable persons, when we are called upon to decide any important matter.

OUR FRIEND, W. H. Spencer, who was recently called to take charge of a new Liberal Society in Sparta, Wisconsin, writes to us from that place, under date of May 6, as follows:—

"We commenced our services last Sunday. Over two hundred and fifty present. We were refused by the churches a shelter under their wings, and so must preach the new gospel in a hall. I never saw such liberality of mind and purse anywhere in the East. There isn't a single traditional Unitarian among them,—for which I thank God, THE INDEX, and common sense. I have had several invitations to join the Western Unitarian Conference; but since Potter has been read out, especially, do I feel nevermore like permitting that name to be applied to me."

Mr. Spencer is pretty certain to succeed with his society, for he is a man of ability, earnestness, and devotion. We trust that many other Liberal Societies like his may spring up in both East and West; and that they must do so, we think, is only a question of time.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Worster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.

[For THE INDEX.]

Senator Sumner's Religion.

BY JOHN WEISS.

The public career of our great statesman has been the theme of eulogy from many lips and pens; and it will continue to be traced and illustrated as long as the subjects to which he devoted his life are kept green in memory by his death. We may be sure that ample justice will be done to the foresight and valor of his arraignment of the barbarism of America, to the fortitude that sustained his defence of human rights, to the prophetic temper in which he reiterated the truth that freedom was national and slavery sectional. The nation, predominating over the section by a great revulsion from error to truth, has decreed to him one of history's rarest triumphs, the concession of a prophet's discernment during his lifetime. For commonly the age to which his warning is addressed stops its ears and runs upon him with one accord. But the flaccid drum of our hearing was tightened by the rude fingers of civil strife; our menace was set to the pitch of his warning; and his own words taken up by the thunder of battle returned to him in an echo of victory that pronounced his name. Now every year will lend some fresh emphasis to his record by fresh testimony to the wisdom of his trust in the safety of justice. The echo will reverberate from fact to fact, and keep his fame alive.

It is the task of the publicist to explain his relation to the questions which developed into the irrepressible conflict of his time, to fix his share in the creation of a sentiment for equal rights, and to show how abstract ideas of peace and justice were the pith of all his expedients. This is not our task, but rather to trace, if we can, his public morals down to the roots of private faith, in order to discover, with the providential aid of such a marked example, what spiritual essentials are sufficient to breed and maintain a spotless life, a martyr's fidelity, a prophet's confidence. In discovering these we make another discovery by the light of his life, that the virtues which redeem the individual and the race are not indebted to sectarian methods. Their quality is native to the soul of man, their quantity is proportioned to men's various structures. And as Nature provides the germs which become developed into good men and glorious States, she is also provident of the elements which contribute to this development, and has not fallen into the decay of dependence upon the artificial stimulus of theology, whose schemes are the afterthoughts of a metaphysical method inherited from fathers and schoolmen of the Christian Church, and which is more and more each day showing its incompetence to cover the phenomena of matter and mind with their respective laws.

Our Senator's personal religion did not rest upon any assumption of a supernatural revelation in the Scriptures. He revered the Great Teacher, but never in public or private commended him as the Savior of mankind. He had no theory concerning that lofty character which set it apart from the course of history and the natural possibilities of human nature. His pew by inheritance was situated in a Unitarian meeting-house where the doctrine of theology and of political ethics was uniformly conservative; so that he was seldom seen to occupy it. Born into Channing's household of faith, he found nothing there so congenial as the sweetness and light of that great preacher's morals. He had no taste for any description of public worship. Private friendship carried him once to an ordination; it was that of the poet Longfellow's brother. And the only page of the discourse upon that occasion which he cared for was the one that emphasized freedom of speech in the cause of humanity. He enjoyed none of those emotions which a technical religion claims to derive from setting up relations with invisible beings. For ideal convictions seemed to him the natural thoroughfare between the finite and the infinite, and to suggest to man the most religious gesture he can make, that of walking to and fro in child-like simplicity. Let us see if we cannot justify the superiority of this above the conventional attitude, and show its independence of sentiments which are miscalled spiritual.

A definition of religion must be unsatisfactory when it secludes that word within a class of emotions which are felt by some people and cannot be felt by others who are not born with a temper to correspond. There are some states of mind which enjoy the popular advantage of being called religious because they seem to connect the individual with invisible origins of love and power; there is a broad tract of feeling through which he passes to discover the source of inexplicable longings, the fountain that keeps life young and thoughts perpetually blooming; it is warmed by a sun that does not set with visible twilight, but moves without respect to the periods of the material day, and often is in the zenith when our clocks mark midnight. And that is marked at any time when things grow dark, affections pass into eclipse, hopes are clouded and cares become oppressive. Every imperfection challenges the idea of perfection, and calls it out for justification in the lists of the world, to give an account of itself, whence it came, why it disturbs us if it does not mean to be fulfilled. The soul attributes the idea to a Soul of souls, and in that direction its instinct travels, like the migration of birds which has elemental force in it and cannot be checked. The soul escapes from every inclemency in quest of more genial feeding-grounds beyond its sere horizon. The tendency sometimes develops into great emotion; the soul overflows with confidences; its sorrows and aspirations run for sympathy beyond the earth; gladness is the approval, regrets the disapproval, of something that can only be seen, touched, authenticated by these inward moods. Let it be far from us to discredit the genuineness of these human impulses, or depreciate the part they play in the minds where they originate. But they are not of universal efficacy, nor can they claim to be organic states that are indispensable to virtue. For since they depend partly upon the mental structure as each individual receives it from his ancestors, they can no more be exacted from every temperament than a talent for business, music, or the arts. And they are more cherished among women, whose natures least crave expedients to effect a change of heart, or to preserve the unspoiled felicity of their sex. Therefore these moods cannot be tortured into tests of the religious state without running to abuse in the individual and to bigotry in popular opinion. They congest and soften some brains, set up hallucinations, drain the life into ecstasies.

The tendency toward something that is superior to ourselves generally settles into a conviction that an idea of what was going to be just, right, pure, honorable among men, existed before the men did. We cannot believe that mankind created by slow development an ideal that is far above the condition into which it has developed. We attribute this unattained standard, which disturbs, mortifies, stimulates us, to an immutable Something beyond ourselves, and always in advance of our latest attainment; to some Power superior to society that selects heroes and martyrs from the average conditions of mankind to become the progenitors of better ones. Society is contented with the moral proficiency it has attained. What breeds, then, discontent? In what line of inheritance does the protester stand who hazards his own peace to disturb the content of others, and improve the grounds of that content? He stands in the line of that ideal power which breaks up the strata of the earth, prepares improved surfaces for better breeds of plants and animals, and introduces at length a creature, capable of discontent, who takes up the thread, pursues the old ideal method, and values a period as men value rounds to a ladder or steps before a door, to mount with, not to stay upon. So that every period has a twofold character; it is satisfied with its condition, and yet it carries along the element of dissatisfaction. The strange creatures of the primeval world never chafed at their prospects and circumstances; the effort which compelled a better creature to succeed them was not originated by themselves. Each growth settled down into sure and friendly relationship with its own elements. No fish ever sighed to crawl instead of swimming, no reptile ever aspired to lift its vertebræ into a perpendicular spine; creatures with rudely sketched and awkward wings never cherished an ambition for a broader pinion, to be launched and float in air. When we speak of the graduated scale of succession which is visible in Nature, it is only by a figure of fancy that we attribute the impulse of this succession to the forms themselves. They were nothing but the raw material of an impulse which could not be hurried nor retarded. They moved in the line of an idea, which took its own time, because it is something previous as well as contemporaneous.

So every period of society, far from struggling to improve its condition, cannot conceive of improvement; it has the temper of a saurian, to stay where something has put it. When something inclines to put it elsewhere, it only contributes inertness to the movement, and is incapable of rising into any emotion save dread and wrath at being disturbed by the fanatical exigency of something that is beyond itself. And every successive advantage defends itself against an ideal power, denies assistance to it, and dies hard.

Therefore every age of human society claims to be the latest possible result of a creative power. Looking backward, it alludes felicitously to the superiority of the present, and attributes it to admirable forefathers; it cannot look forward, for its own present is a wall built across the prospect. The ideal man who describes a horizon beyond the coping of this wall is a leveller of limits. His report is an indictment of the virtue which through much toil and blood has been attained. Let him be rapidly suppressed. "It is trite," says the author of Ecce Homo, "that an original man is persecuted in his lifetime, and idolized after his death; but it is a less familiar truth that the posthumous idolaters are the legitimate successors and representatives of the contemporary persecutors. Gradually, about the close of his career, or, it may be, after it, they are compelled to withdraw their opposition, and to imitate the man whom they had denounced. They are compelled to do that which is most frightful to them,—to abandon their routine. And then there occurs to them a thought which brings inexpressible relief. Out of the example of the original man they can make a new routine. They may imitate him in everything except his originality. And thus the second half of the original man's destiny is really worse than the first, and his failure is written more legibly in the blind veneration of succeeding ages than in the blind hostility of his own. He broke the chains by which men were bound; he threw open to them the doors leading into the boundless freedom of Nature and truth. But in the next generation he is idolized, and Nature and truth as much forgotten as ever; if he could return to earth he would find that the crowbars and files with which he made his way out of the prison-house have been forged into the bolts and chains of a new prison called by his own name. Who are found building his sepulchre? Precisely the same party which resisted his reform; those who are born for routine and can accommodate themselves to everything but freedom; those who in clinging to the wisdom of the past suppose they love wisdom, but in fact love only the past, who set Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in opposition to Christ, and appeal to the God of the dead against the God of the living."

This dread of innovation equips itself with many admirably sounding maxims drawn from the arsenal of common sense. Without a spark of poetry in its composition it will quote poets for its purpose, provided they have been a long time dead, and cannot contradict the inferences drawn from their words. Then we are informed that it is better to bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of. It is also a favorite mental exercise to distinguish between the highest abstract good and the highest good which is, in the circumstance, attainable. Every social period makes this objection to the prophet, that the average head is not strong enough to bear the wine of his ideal; it must be watered at the common pump, and distributed through successive dilutions; so that in the long run the community will have managed to absorb the whole strength of the idea. The politician undertakes this mitigating process. No doubt, twice two are four, eventually, but in the meantime the people must acquire that total by making all the fractions four provisionally.

Jack Cade's proclamation to his followers ran thus: "There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops." The Jack Cades of politics issue half-penny loaves with instructions to call them penny loaves while we eat, and they will be quite as filling. So there is a Utopia above and one beneath the true ideal quantities. And one Jack Cade who declares that two and two must be six is just as practical, just as safe a leader, as the Jack Cade who wants to convince us that two and the next attainable fraction make the four that ought to be.

There are in politics a great many values which fluctuate; they are quoted by circumstance, can be adjusted to serve the public good. They are market values whose rate of exchange was never fixed by the divine standard beyond the reach of compromise; and those men are valuable who are fitted by nature to deal with all such matters of the public welfare and convenience. But as soon as they begin to apply their method to some question that involves immutable morality their structural defect appears; and men whose distinction is to be practical become impracticable.

Doubtless, for instance, a man has an inalienable right to his life, his labor, his love, and his religion. The politician himself will concede the abstract right, but, he goes on to say, in this realistic world a man can only enjoy a fraction of each right; for the enactment of his circumstances is incompatible with the law of his being. Therefore, bring the slate, and let us fall to figuring: a man is his own master; his ideal traits when added up will come to four; but practically the man has a master who makes four, in point of fact, and scores the sum on the back of his man's ideal. The problem is to hit upon the intermediate fraction that shall be a temporary four. The compromising figures cover the slate with unavailing shifts and truces, till suddenly an impatient sponge descends to obliterate the scrawling—and it was wet in blood. Nothing is left standing on the slate but God's eternal equation, two and two equal four; and that must rule the working out of every problem. The politician rallies very soon to acquiesce in this result; but when he buries with laudation the statesman who wrote God's immutable decree at the top of the country's page, he protests that he too was devoted to the abstract truth, but distrusted the statesman's uncompromising method of applying it. It is the self-deception of a man who is incapable of ideal inspiration, who is the child and favorite of the present, the flattering annalist of the past, the pet of a society that dreads to be disturbed, and shrinks from the bad manners of a prophet crying in the wilderness with the flavor of locusts and wild honey in his talk. A divine truth does not come into a man on any other terms than exacting the whole of him, to drench him clear through, from the top of his imagination to the bottom of his common sense, and drip into the public streets whether they hinder or help its running, where a heap of rubbish is a mark for its current, and not a warning of "No Thoroughfare." It has been the curse of American politics that uninspired men have claimed to be as good idealists as anybody, so good, indeed, that they could not bear to make an application of abstract truth lest it should incur the odium of the people, and be rejected by them. Tenderness for human rights has been the pretext of the compromising mind; as we might suppose a Judas so inflamed with love for a rejected Master as to plan betraying him to make him show his hand. Upon what a crucifix did this transitional policy hang a bleeding country!

What kind of mental disposition is it that shows a lack of judgment? who is the impracticable man, neglectful of methods and disdainful of expedients? It is he who represents the average sentiment of a society that is wedded to usage, that idolizes laws which protect and prolong it, that has grown up into a comfortable maturity of dislike to abstract truth. An age that hates to be disturbed will honor and reward the lack of judgment which protects it against the assaults of God, who is history's unsparing critic, the perpetual enemy of comfort, the violator of every truce we make with error, the Being who is first pure, then peaceable. He has been the almighty innovator through an immense career which extends along the discontent of all his prophets.

Our statesman was not the child of his age; if he had been we should not have yet buried him, nor heard the tributes of those who garnish the sepulchres of the righteous. His parent was not of this age but of that eternity which travailed with his elder brethren, the Isaiahs of Holy Writ, and with that man whose sad courage cried,—

"Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast born me, a man of strife and contention."

"For surely," as his favorite Milton said, "to every good and peaceable man, it must in nature needs be a hateful thing to be the displeaser and molester of thousands; much better would it like him, doubtless, to be the messenger of gladness and contentment, which is his chief intended business to all mankind, but that they resist and oppose their own true happiness. But when God commands to take the trumpet, and blow a dolorous or jarring blast, it lies not in man's will what he shall say, or what he shall conceal. If he shall think to be silent as Jeremiah did, because of the reproach and derision he met with daily, 'and all his familiar friends watched for his halting,' to be revenged on him for speaking the truth, he would be forced to confess as he confessed: 'His word was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones; I was weary with forbearing, and could not stay.' Which might teach these times not suddenly to condemn all things that are sharply spoken or vehemently written, as proceeding out of stomach, virulence, and ill-nature. For me," continues the poet, "I have determined to lay up as the best treasure and solace of a good old age, if God vouchsafe it me, the honest liberty of free speech from my youth."*

His spirit underscored such kindred pages which are the Scriptures of Puritan heroes. They were his solace in a time that furnished him with few companions, few comrades in arms for his incessant battle. The austere and biting quality of Milton's page braced his own temper against the flatteries of a society that relished his gifts and was anxious to mortgage his conscience. As door after door slammed in his face, puffing out for him the lights of polished intercourse in his own city, he turned toward the source of a steadier ray.

> "So much the rather thou, Celestial Light,
> Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
> Irradiate; there plant eyes, all mist from thence > Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
> Of things invisible to mortal sight."

I incline to call him the most religious statesman of this or any age, because his life was devoted to the ideal method of Deity. Can any definition of the word religion be more comprehensive and satisfactory? To his early years belonged an instinct that he must seek a career that would test his sense of truth, of loyalty to some principles which stand at the centre of human well-being. So he put aside with little difficulty the calls which various mental attainments brought to him, declined the functions of literature and law, to devote his competent knowledge of both to the service of morals. They became exalted to religion in his soul, because he always wore the ample presence of justice untrammelled by expediency, humanity unbounded by the customs of nations. His doctrine was pure, like his life; very athletic, trained to wrestle with ideal champions before he measured his strength with men. Familiar to such encounters, his tight hug, unconscious how formidable it had grown in those private exercises, crushed out of the politician every breath except abuse, and reduced the resources of slavery to a bludgeon. His own weapon was the Logos, the Word, or Discourse, of an ideal Will. Fiat, Fiat, he continually exclaimed, "let it be done." Let the full and perfect form of righteousness be born. Let this sordid clay, this barbarism of America, liberate its man, and be a living soul breathed into him. He put his lips to the unconscious nostrils, and sent his speech to thrill through the frame, and set the prostrate mould of manhood on its feet. It was a divine work, such as only a religious soul can dedicate itself to and carry out to the end.

If aspiration after the Highest, toward the Unattained, in the path of the noblest thing made known to him, be a religious gesture and motion, he incessantly performed it, climbing up with every limb of a clean body and an ardent mind, and not reaching up with single sentiments, or flying the kite of prayer. As he quoted once to a young minister who had been just ordaining one of the brethren,—

> "He prayeth best who loveth best,
> All things, both great and small."

He sank deep into meditation, as a diver who leaves no part of himself behind; through his sense of absolute rectitude he went deep into inward communing, out of the daylight to reach silence, self-recovery, certainty of being in the right. But this movement toward the invisible was not converted from light into heat; none of it was squandered in the emotion which is claimed for piety, and which is not so easily reconverted back again to light. He was not a pious man. If he had tended to piety by nature, he would have been saved from it by grace, when he saw how piety rode in Omnibus-bills after fugitive slaves. He never became enamored with American piety, nor eager to be admitted to its pew. The politicians who found fault with the methods of his statesmanship, and devoted all their talent to letting things alone, were scrupulous in liturgies and creeds. Members in respectable standing of various churches, believers in supernatural theories of religion, subscribers to the Bible Society, disciples of Christ, communicants of the Lord's Supper,—they paid the price, the precious body and blood of humanity for peace and union. It is not necessary to attribute dishonorable motives to men who are predestined by native defect of structure to be the defenders of the existing state. They are the spokesmen of a society which shrinks from the cost of regeneration. Their instinctive work they do, with a profound dislike for the ideal instinct of the men of different structure. We need not convert the grave of our statesman into a retort of personal imputation. But this we have a right to say with emphasis, that the popular religion proved inadequate to bear the strain of righteousness which the ideal exigency put upon it; and the leaders of American opinion were not illuminated by their piety. We may borrow too the spirit of that parable of the Great Assize, when the Son of Man separates the gathered souls to the right hand and to the left. Those are repudiated who never recognized their Lord; these are made welcome who found him in hunger, nakedness, and bonds. Our statesman seldom aired his Christianity; no man could draw up a statement to which he would subscribe; he never attributed any of his internal feelings to intercourse with Christ, and never believed that he had met that august brother. "Lord, when did I ever see thee naked, sick, in prison; what alms had I for thy dejected state?" "Four million times you saw me; detected me beneath four million dusky skins." Was he not a man of prayer? He kept the hands of these lowly wards of his continually stretched toward the Throne of Grace.

And it devolves upon us to secure remembrance for this appeal to the divine justice from the contempt of men. He also was a victim of the contempt which he labored to remove from that race, despised and rejected. For its sake he defended a sentiment that was despicable to his country; and his manner of doing this seemed to be animated by an eagerness to divert toward his own strength all the affronts which were put upon the weakness of his clients. Every inch of that superb presence of body and soul was interposed with an urgency which invited us to strike, not them, but him; and our prejudices were not backward to take him at his word. How can we best celebrate this temper of genius which assumed the sins of the people in protracted humiliation, trusting that heaven would make it a ransom for many? By a monument reared on the stone which the builders rejected, wrought out of the race itself whose advocate he was before the throne of justice, so that our children, and those visitors of the republic, in some later day, asking to be shown his monument, shall hear the voice of every State directing them to look around and view those liberated bronzes in every public place, conspicuous records of admission to all the customs of business and pleasure, to any house of God, to any schoolhouse, inn, carriage, and cemetery of the people, to share with every other race in the conveniences of liberty.

His was a strenuous religion, drafting the clearness of the understanding into statements which fell in rain of sentences to soften and quicken the clods of his country; taxing memory and the literary art to grace his style; borrowing the scourge which lashed the scribes and money-changers out of a temple less holy than ours of freedom; exacting from the moral sense its uttermost farthing of justice, to reveal to the men of his generation the will of an uncompromising God. Religion never soars higher in the pleas of pulpits, the choirs of worship, and the awed responses of men, nor do its stated observances implicate such gifted heroism. It never presses sharper crowns of tribulation, contempt, malice, scorn, and pain upon the brows of its disciples. Christianity "never knew a whiter soul," more purged at critical moments from foibles of disposition, fear of men, and the innate love of fame, "that last infirmity of noble minds." He dealt in the ultimates of morals and justice; their tide came somewhat slowly landward in the cumulative effort of his speech, but at length it was heard along the foot of the cliff, bringing a deep, fresh breath of a mid-ocean of principle, that sent the long billow breaking, and the spray to lash; then we felt that morals could exhale in emotion without borrowing conventional sentiment, or turning religious rhetoric to use.

While he exposed his soul to heaven's most stringent sincerity, and freely suffered from its lightning while it condensed in him to pervade and overflow, to leap out of his person into the equilibrium of a million hearts, other men were bottling up the effervescence of internal moods, to enjoy them in secret, to shake and instigate to a kind of faded briskness the notions which pretend to communion with Deity. The gymnastics of popular devoutness draw the strength from all the limbs which most need training and development; the conscience spindles, stays at home shivering over fervor that is nothing but a painted fire. The nerves which were ordained to transmit thrills of indignation into muscles which were ordained to smite, defend, ward off the blows of wrong, soon shrivel into strings that cannot be tuned higher than the weak ditty which regales some vestry's limits. The soul's great gifts of confidence, dependence, veneration, trust in heaven's highest, devotion to earth's lowest, are overwatered with effusive phrases, and yield undaunted juice no longer. Sumner's emotion was liberated when his passion for justice and liberty, for the thing most righteous, for the thought most noble, for the morals most redemptive, filled up his brain to its discharging; the flash was manward, the moisture was the shower that followed. He lavished the tenderness of conscience upon mankind, and left it to evaporate skyward afterward as the sky might please.

Let the young men who are sought by the blandishments of different sects to adopt their various styles of salvation consider the force and breadth of this example. Rectitude cannot be taught to draw a straighter line; physical virility cannot wear a finer bloom of temperance and chastity; the will cannot pass through the forge of emotional piety into stiffer fortitude and tenacity of fibre, to spin the stuff that is capable of bearing the greatest strain, no matter of how many tons to the square foot; the moral sense cannot be prayed or preached into closer continuity with the golden rule. Consider then what was the theology of this man who wore the breastplate of righteousness, and cut sheer through principalities and powers with the sword of the spirit, and from whose brain came a grip mighty to the pulling down of a stronghold. If moral principle in action be a thing worth coveting, consider at what expense it must be gained, and emulate the faithfulness to death of a man who simply trusted God, had a passion for justice, and saw in collective humanity the savior of the race; who was no respecter of persons, but followed the divine paternity across the frontiers of the nations with tidings of peace and good-will to all. You have just seen his way of putting God into the Constitution; by putting into it the sense of justice which no preamble can secure. Uphold his method, perpetuate his policy, take care of his Civil Rights Bill, and finish the work that he has given you to do.

The three Americans whom we can separate from our history on the strength of their character for being righteous men are the three who could never have received clean bills of health from any theological council; they are Washington, Lincoln, and Sumner. Washington was the only one of these three who by birth rather than training maintained some formal connections with the prevailing ritual of his time. He preserved a social rather that a theological relation to the English Church. He was a vestryman of two Episcopal churches, by virtue of gravity and character, and was "attentive to those externals, which, with ministers and reporters for the newspapers, pass for the substance of religion. It does not appear that he took a deep and spiritual delight in religious emotions. His disposition did not incline that way. But he had a devout reverence for the First Cause of all things, and a sublime, never-failing trust in that Providence which watches over the affairs alike of nations and of men. He had a strong, unalterable determination to do his duty to his God, with an habitual dread of aught unworthy of that holy name."* So had President Lincoln, so had Senator Sumner; both of them pure theists, and Washington also one, if it be just to distinguish spiritual habit from formal tenet and observance. They stood, like every modern theist, in the current of Christian ethics, but not indebted to the Christian artifice which throws a doctrine across that element of Nature, controls its fulness, and delivers the water only to subscribers. They were descendants of the original dwellers by that stream, tenants in fee-simple, with no conditions annexed to the tenure save that of keeping the banks in cultivation and the current unobstructed. Such theists are Nature's aborigines who transmit a reluctance to yield their right of eminent domain to speculators claiming by certificate all their land and water, to dictate the terms on which a natural proprietor shall plough and drink. The most characteristic men of America paid the truest reverence to their great brothers of the past, redeemers of humanity, who drank directly from the hollow of a divine hand; whose moral and spiritual superiority was not laid down on plans of salvation, nor held by patent from atoning grace; who suffered in person for being incorruptible, and let their rectitude be stretched upon the crosses of their public career, to bear the sins of the people. They were lifted up by native elevation of character, and drew all men unto them.

It is a curious fact for the American theologian to consider, that our men who have been most distinguished for righteousness have been most poorly off for creeds. Born of healthy stock, and bred to self-reliance, practised in honesty by homely exigencies, and defended from formalism by the disdain that a robust nature will always feel when assailed by catechisms, their minds remained as untainted as their hearts; they were never infected with the debilitating fancy that the supreme and absolute virtues of a man must depend upon making a sectarian subscription. They belonged to the men, by birth, by culture, by instinctive taste for good and noble things, by natural reluctance to become degraded, by spontaneous longing to set the manners of a righteous Commonwealth. Their theology might be all comprised in the artless text of the apostle, whose summary is the appeal of Nature to itself: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Every country and every age of the world have contributed examples of men, some living previous, and

* The Reason of Church Government Urged Against Prelaty. Book II.

* Theodore Parker's Historic Americans.

others subsequent, to the inventions of schemes for saving souls, who have left illustrious records of the soul's native independence of such schemes. Their names are outposts pushed to history's front, hardy and venturesome, detached from the rank and file of many other souls of like obedience, whose humbler success survives in their reputation. For the virtue of a few famous men expresses the capacity of all who have been obscurely great and good. This it does, as much when Socrates, Pythagoras, Franklin, Lincoln, Sumner are the names, as when we recall the heroes of doctrines, Paul, Fénelon, Oberlin, Martyn, Edwards.

It only needs some one to say that the former were exceptions who attained to the glory of goodness in spite of their deficiency of belief in doctrines, to suggest the reply that the latter belong to the constants of all creeds whose virtue is simultaneous with their doctrine, but no more derived from it than that of the former. A man may verbally refer his excellences to his technical beliefs, and put them into a sequence of effect and cause with great mental strenuousness; but the pure theists of every age are the recurring refutations of this supposed necessity; for Socrates cannot be an exception, save in the quantity of his light and obedience, not in the laws which provide its quality. A creed cannot stipulate to save mankind upon conditions if they exempt one Socrates of any race. It has been the mental custom of every age, while creeds much older than Socrates prevailed, to identify spiritual superiority with intellectual beliefs; but this contemporaneousness of goodness and creed has been supposed to include the priority of the creed. Virtue must always wear the costume of its age's knowledge; it will adopt the intellect's interpretation of the visible and invisible words. If the gem which slipped from Zoroaster's crumbling finger could be found it would have to be reset to suit a pope; but Nature conceived the color which beams without change of tint and lustre through successive periods of the goldsmith's art, to decorate the successive hierarchies of the soul.

The burden lies with the popular theology to show how the three unique representatives of absolute morality could cultivate those qualities which are for the healing of the people without the aid of schemes of doctrine. How did they become possessors of these essential attributes of salvation without passing through experiences of conversion and the technical emotions of evangelical life? These men were worthy to be first in the hearts of their countrymen, models of upright behavior; let us know, therefore, how far opinion means that their example shall extend. Upon all the other points of these men's practice there would be an agreement that their excellence can be acquired by their method. Does their spiritual greatness yield an exception to this rule? Are the most illustrious men exempted from the training which is imposed by theological fiction upon common men? Is there one way to produce the highest style of virtue in our heroes and martyrs, and another way to secure a lower average of morals in ordinary persons? We should reply that there can be but one faith in God, but one direction of the soul toward the source of its light and power, but one constitution of the moral health, but one condition for the maintenance of such fortitude, valor, obedience, and worship of the highest things, which have just ceased in the presence of Sumner, to revive, we trust, and to be majestically incarnated in the hearts of the people. Can we commend to them a more excellent way than the one which led him into pure and undefiled religion?

When his death surprised us there was but one voice to recognize his admirable qualities; it has been lifted unconsciously by every sect and creed. In a moment of enthusiasm for goodness, and of gratitude for the deeds which it accomplished, men have unguardedly betrayed their instinct that salvation comes by righteousness. Did it so come to him, unhampered by after-thoughts, uncontrolled by schemes, sustained and encouraged by nothing less than Deity, whose direct communion crowded the intrusions of theology out of his soul? If so to him, why not to all? And in this moment of a people's splendid admiration, that melts all distinctions into the color of his own white soul, why cannot the common instinct venture to declare itself, to acknowledge its consciousness that a character so stately, sound, symmetrical, was not founded upon a quicksand, but sunk upon the primitive granite of immutable morality which runs everywhere beneath our feet, and offers to be the natural foundation of each man's house, whether it be a hut or palace he can rear. Let the people escape out of the cramped enclosures of doctrine; trust the God who made them, as you trust equality and civil rights; give them liberty to build on the wide, open common, in the soil which holds the roots of Sumner's acceptability to heaven.

THE ADVOCACY of the recognition of God in the Constitution is not always accompanied by a sense of his present existence, to judge from the remarks of a speaker in the Ohio Constitutional Convention in favor of this project. The Supreme Being appears to have been considered as a past agency, in the rather turgid declaration that, "The memory of God remains embalmed in the hearts of men, and shines clearer, and man's love for him looms brighter, amid the ruins of revolution than in the luxuriance of an unbounded prosperity."

SCENE IN CHEMISTRY.—Student attempting to recite, but wanders strangely from the subject. Professor interrupts and gives a long and lucid explanation. Student listens attentively, and at its close, throwing his head back in the direction of the phrenological organ of self-esteem, modestly replies, "Yes, sir; yes, sir; you get my idea."

THE LAST WORDS OF AN ENGLISH SECULARIST.

[The following "Thoughts in a Sick Room," by Austin Holyoake,' were published in Mr. Bradlaugh's paper, the National Reformer, of April 19.—ED.]

April 8, 1874.

All those persons who have taken the trouble to read what I have written in the National Reformer for some years past, and also published in pamphlets, will know what my opinions on death and immortality recently were. Those views were formed when I was in perfect health, and after years of reflection and inquiry. I am now about to state how my views remain after protracted suffering.

Christians constantly tell freethinkers that their principles of "negation," as they term them, may do very well for health; but when the hour of sickness and approaching death arrives, they utterly break down, and the hope of a "blessed immortality" can alone give consolation. In my own case I have been very anxious to test the truth of this assertion, and have therefore deferred till the latest moment I think it prudent to dictate these few lines.

I was born of religious parents, my mother being especially pious, belonging to that most terrible of all sects of the Christian body—the Calvinistic Methodists. From my earliest childhood I remember being taught to dread the wrath of an avenging God, and to avoid the torments of a brimstone hell. I said prayers twice a day, I went to a Sunday-school where I learned nothing but religious dogmas, and I had to read certain chapters of the Bible during the week. My Sundays were mostly days of gloom; and I may sincerely say that up to the age of fourteen I was never free from the haunting fear of the devil.

About this period new light began to break in upon me. Robert Owen and his disciples first appeared in Birmingham, and attracted much attention. My eldest brother and sisters went to hear the new preachers, and what they had heard they came home and discussed. I listened with all the eagerness of an enthusiastic boy, and from that hour my mental emancipation set in.

My belief in the infallibility of the Bible first gave way. Soon after commenced my disbelief in the possession of any special knowledge on the part of the preachers of the Gospel of the God and immortality of which they talked so glibly. But it was years before I thought my way to atheism. It cannot therefore be said that I never experienced religious emotions.

For twenty years past my mind has been entirely free from misgivings or apprehensions as to any future state of rewards and punishments. I do not believe in the Christian Deity, nor in any form of so-called supernatural existence. I cannot believe in that which I cannot comprehend. I shall be accused of presumption in expressing disbelief in an idea which has commanded the faith of some of the best intellects for centuries past. This I cannot help. I must think for myself; and if each of those great men had been asked to define his God, it may safely be predicted that no two would have agreed. I may also be reminded that "the fool hath said in his heart there is no God." This would imply thought, and it is doubtful whether a fool ever thought upon the subject at all; but his idea of a Deity, if it could be got at, would no doubt be as coherent as most other men's. Many fools have written and spoken as though they had penetrated the secrets of the inscrutable, and many wise men have lost their reason in endeavoring to solve the insoluble; and the world remains just as ignorant on the subject as it did at the earliest dawn of civilization.

I do not believe in a heaven, or life of eternal bliss after death. There is nothing in this world to induce me to give credence to the possibility of such a state of human existence. Wherever there are living organisms there are suffering and torture amongst them; therefore analogy would go to prove that if we lived again we should suffer again. To desire eternal bliss is no proof that we shall ever attain it; and it has long seemed to me absurd to believe in that which we wish for, however ardently. I regard all forms of Christianity as founded in selfishness. It is the expectation held out of bliss through all eternity, in return for the profession of faith in Christ and Him crucified, that induces the erection of temples of worship in all Christian lands. Remove this extravagant promise, and you will hear very little of the Christian religion.

An eternal hell seems to me too monstrous for the belief of any humane man or sensitive woman; and yet millions believe in it. Like heaven, it is enormously disproportionate to the requirements of the case; as man can never confer benefits deserving an eternal reward, so it is impossible for him to commit sins deserving eternal punishment. The idea must have had its origin in the diseased imagination of some fanatic; but it has been carefully cherished and improved upon by priests in subsequent ages, till it is now incorporated in the creed of all Christian churches. Father Pinamonti's Hell Open to Christians, and the Rev. Mr. Furness's Sight of Hell, show to what a fearful extent this diabolical idea can be used in warping and stultifying the minds of the young.

As I have stated before, my mind being free from any doubts on these bewildering matters of speculation, I have experienced for twenty years the most perfect mental repose; and now I find that the near approach of death, the "grim king of terrors," gives me not the slightest alarm. I have suffered, and am suffering, most intensely both by night and day; but this has not produced the least symptom of change of opinion. No amount of bodily torture can alter a mental conviction. Those who, under pain, say they see the error of their previous belief had never thought out the problem for themselves.

I cannot conclude without expressing the gratification I have received from my connection with the National Reformer. My work on it has indeed been a labor of love, and my association therein, with my esteemed friends Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Charles Watts, for the past eight years, has been of the most harmonious nature. My extreme regret now is, that I cannot do my full share in the work the "Trinity" has hitherto performed; but I must bend to inevitable fate, and content myself by knowing that an abler and better man may be found to take my place. However, of this I am sure, that my colleagues will never meet with a more faithful and ardent friend.

To the true courage and patience of my dear and devoted wife I owe my present tranquillity. In my little son and daughter I have all a father's hope and confidence, and it softens the pain of parting when I contemplate leaving them with one who has all the—[Mr. Austin Holyoake commenced the dictation of this last paragraph a few hours before he died; but, being soon exhausted, had to break off, and was not able to resume it.—ED. National Reformer.]

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN ILLINOIS.

There is a bill for compulsory education now under consideration in the Illinois Legislature, which, by the moderation of its provisions and the simplicity of its details, presents the entire question of enforced instruction freed from most of the complications which embarrass it in other places. It provides that every parent or guardian of a child between the ages of nine and fourteen, who resides in a district where there is a school within two miles, shall send the child to some school for at least three months of each year, unless an equal amount of instruction is given at home, or unless the child is reasonably proficient in the ordinary branches of English education. It is made the duty of the school officers to prosecute for any violation of this duty occurring in their respective districts, the penalty assigned being from one to five dollars for each week (not exceeding thirteen weeks in any year) during which the law is violated. A neglect of this duty, after proper notice has been given, subjects the school officers to a penalty of from five to twenty-five dollars for each neglect. Provision is made for the supply of books to indigent children, and in cases where they have not suitable clothing, to supply that also. This bill was somewhat fully discussed in the House of Representatives, and, although it met with considerable opposition, it finally passed. It has received its first reading in the Senate, but has not yet come up for final action.

The opposition to this and to similar measures rests, of course, upon the broad principle, which is now never denied, that the ideal of government is the least possible interference with the individual and the family. But it is evident, on the other hand, that there are certain matters of such vital interest to the very existence of society that the State cannot remain stranger to them. The public health is one of these interests. No plea of individual rights is ever considered valid to uphold a man in sustaining a nuisance which is likely to breed a pestilence among his neighbors; and no man is justified in resisting any scheme of sanitary regulations which has been adopted by the body politic for the protection of the general health. It may be said that ignorance is an evil of such dangerous importance to the public welfare that the same compulsory measures of correction are necessary. No man can be a safe citizen of a republican government who votes for the enactment of laws which he is unable to read; and the State, as a matter of self-preservation, may seem to have a right to demand that his child shall not grow up in equal ignorance. All, or nearly all, agree in regarding a system of gratuitous education as desirable, but there is still some difference of opinion in regard to the desirability of a system of compulsory instruction. We have little doubt that the power to provide for it does come within the legitimate province of the State, but the expediency of exercising that power is a matter requiring the most thorough consideration. We have no doubt of the right of the Legislature to regulate the traffic in ardent spirits; but the experience of years has shown that it is almost beyond the reach of human intelligence to say just what degree of severity in the law is most effectual and most easily executed. The details of any law for compulsory education are therefore of the utmost importance. If the law be oppressive or vexatious in any of its provisions, so as to excite against it the hostility of the ignorant classes for whose benefit it is intended, it will be virtually impossible to carry it into effect. In a country the basis of whose political system is the independent township, it is impracticable to carry any law into effect the details of which are in conflict with the general domestic sense of the citizens. Such laws, when they are passed, after a short period of annoying and rather demoralizing contests, remain as dead letters upon the statute books, to the scandal and the detriment of good government.

In the State of Illinois, the matter is free from some of the complications which attend it here, and the need of some such measure is very apparent. In 1870, out of an aggregate population of two millions and a half, 86,000 could not read, and 133,000 could not write, making an illiterate total of nearly ten per centum. This is a state of things which demands the exercise of all legitimate means of remedy. The bill proposed seems to be, on the whole, a moderate and prudent measure. If it is adopted, the whole country will be interested in watching the success of this attempted solution of a most momentous question, from a State which has already given us the benefit of several curious and important studies in political science.—New York Tribune, March 18, 1874.

IF YOU INTEND to do a mean thing, wait till tomorrow. If you are to do a noble thing, do it now.

BEARS AND BABIES.

That bear-cubs are born into the world as shapeless as they are helpless, and that they are licked into form by their dams, is a theory which used at one time, we suppose, to be regarded as an established truth of natural history. If, however, an elementary school teacher in these days were solemnly to communicate to his pupils as a fact this exceedingly suggestive piece of folk-lore, he would, we may hope, excite the incredulity of his elder scholars, and, if the matter were talked about, would certainly bring on himself a vigorous remonstrance, or something more, from the school managers. And yet, taking the country over, whether in denominational or in board schools, teachers are required, as a condition of their engagement, to teach as actual facts stories of past time, and views of Nature, which have even less to recommend them than this venerable superstition about young bears. For, indeed, as suggestive of edification, that old-fashioned notion has very much in its favor. Babies are certainly born into the world helpless, and all but their own parents think them shapeless. At any rate, they owe more to their mothers' care than young bears possibly can. And infants might probably be consoled and sustained under the disagreeable incidents which maternal anxiety for their comeliness and character does sometimes involve, if they were duly impressed with the docility displayed by little cubs while they are being licked into shape. It would perhaps be replied that such edification, however laudable and desirable in itself, ought not to be gained by false statements of fact which must very much confuse a child's notions of the world where it has come to live. It would be suggested that the old superstition might be mentioned, simply for what it is worth, as a piece of exploded folk-lore, and that, regarded in this light, it would serve all the purposes of illustration just as well. This is very much our own opinion, and we wish that all enlightened and liberal friends of elementary education would seriously consider the practical bearing of the principle.

We have before us a list of Bible lessons to be given in an infant school, which, with the exception of a few miserable pence from the children, amounting perhaps to one-twelfth of the cost of maintenance, is supported wholly out of rates and taxes. We mention this, because in such circumstances there can be no plea of the right of voluntary subscribers to take out their money's worth in the extension of their own dogmas. In that list of lessons—for an infant school be it remembered—we find the following: "Punishment of Ananias and Sapphira," "Elisha mocked by the children," "Short and simple history of Jonah." Now we wish to speak with unfeigned respect of all genuine religious belief. There are, doubtless, a considerable number of people who believe not only that the above-mentioned narratives are literally true, but that they record solemn interventions of divine judgment, and are parts of an infallible revelation of God's nature. Such people have every right to make use of their own money for the maintenance and propagation of their own opinions. But there is a very much larger number of people who have never seriously considered the question whether those stories describe facts or not, and who take up with any view that happens to be favored by fashion and conventional authority. There is, however, a third class of people, confessedly increasing in number every day, who are strongly convinced that such narratives are either merely myths, or parables, or some other variety of imaginative invention. Nor do these people all, or even most of them, belong to the class which is summarily designated by the insulting term "infidel." How many clergymen of the Established Church really believe that there is any such thing as a "history" of Jonah, properly so-called, at all? How many think in their hearts that the Almighty Father of mankind inspired two she-bears to fall upon a number of naughty children, and to "tear forty and two of them"? Some of them believe these things, no doubt. But of this we are sure, that a large and increasing proportion of them do not. And if this is the case with the clergy, how much more is it true of the laity? It is not going too far to say that in the minds of some millions, including all the foremost representatives of science and literature, all the most thoughtful of the middle classes, and all the artisans whom it is customary to compliment as "hard-headed," such traditional stories are regarded as no less mythical than the folk-lore about young bears. Many of these unbelievers are disposed, indeed, to think, as the present writer certainly does, that, belonging as these traditions do to a sacred folk-lore of many suggestive imaginations, they ought to be carefully and judiciously used for the purpose of helping the new generation to understand the spiritual life of past ages. But when such spiritual liberals are made accomplices in imposing upon young children a hard system of dogma from which it has been an agony to many of them to wrench themselves free, they think they have quite as much reason to complain of the wrong done to their conscientious convictions as an Orangeman would if forced to pay Peter's Pence.

The list of lessons to which reference has been made shows that there is nothing frivolous in such a complaint. So far as most of us are concerned, school managers might compel their teachers to teach sublapsarianism or supralapsarianism, homoousianism or homoiousianism, without a word of protest except on the score of wasted time and squandered money. As Mr. W. E. Forster once judiciously observed, theological teaching of that exalted range penetrates the minds of children no more than water does a duck's back. But consider the subjects above mentioned, and, bearing in mind the biblical infallibility which is the main article in the unwritten creed of school boards, can any one doubt the use that would be made of the supernatural terrors suggested? Are liars who are struck dead, and little children torn to pieces because of a prophet's curse, and a disobedient messenger swallowed by a whale, the best means we can think of for conveying moral instruction to infant minds? True, foolish mothers tell their little ones that if they are not good a black man will take them. But it was not for the training of another generation of foolish mothers that school boards were established. True, wiser mothers in half-playful mood remind Master Tommy, who says he "doesn't care," of the lamentable end to which Don't-care came. But there is an agreeable understanding that the "lion" is, after all, only mythical, or, at worst, symbolical of painful consequences. But such narratives as those of Ananias, and Jonah, and Elisha, told to young children as sober and simple fact, can have no other than one of two effects. They either surround the child with supernatural terrors, or they beget an early habit of regarding solemn words as meaningless, and the most sacred endorsements as unreal. The latter effect is much the more common, and therefore, perhaps, the more dangerous. But the cruelty inflicted on the more sensitive and imaginative children is in some respects even more disastrous. For it distorts and perverts the most promising minds at a most critical period of growth. It is no light matter to abuse the confidence of a young child with stories only half believed by the teacher himself, but which must necessarily perturb and darken the pupil's idea of the laws which govern the world. And it is perhaps even worse in an infant school to tell a tale which ought to excite pity, indignation, and abhorrence, yet so to tell it that these feelings are wholly perverted and misdirected.

Suppose, now, that in the neighborhood of any school a number of impudent little boys were to shout derisive cries after a testy old gentleman. Suppose, farther, that he were in revenge to set a bull-dog on them which worried even a single one of them to death. We think it exceedingly probable that the testy old gentleman would be hung. And at any rate, if the school teacher found it necessary to point the moral of such an occurrence, he would dwell far more on the wickedness of ungovernable passion than on that of impertinence. To teach infants to regard such a crime with anything but indignation and horror would be to do them a wrong which no amount of "secular instruction" could rectify. But does any one doubt the moral that is drawn when the biblical story is read by a teacher committed to Cowper-Templodoxy? "There came forth little children out of the city and mocked him, and said unto him, 'Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.' And he turned back and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the LORD. And there came forth two she-bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them." Other parts of the story of Elisha are exceedingly beautiful and suggestive. But of this part, so oddly selected for the instruction of infants, it must be confessed that it is a tradition tolerable only to a race but half-emancipated from savage superstitions. The writer clearly means that God sent the bears in answer to Elisha's vindictive curse. And would any teacher under the Cowper-Temple clause venture to say that the story was not true? Is it to be expected, then, that we shall stand by with indifference, while in this age of Jowett, Colenso, and Huxley, our little ones are taught to impute a deed like that to the Ruler of the world? The folk-lore notion of the education of young bears is rational compared with the expectation that such teaching will quicken moral feeling. We protest against it, not merely because we are most unjustly wronged in being made against our will accomplices in a far-reaching mischief, but because boards have no right to teach children as literal fact what they only believe in some modified sense themselves; and least of all have they a right to bring up the infants of this nation in terror of a Power who kills liars on the spot, or shuts up disobedience in the belly of a whale, or tears naughty children to pieces by means of raging bears.—London Examiner.

THE HUMANE SOCIETY of Chicago has by formal resolution made some rather odd suggestions to the people of its city and State. In the first place, it wants the Chicago Board of Education—which has just declared itself in favor of whipping in schools—to adopt such series of readers, other requirements being equal, as shall have the best lessons upon humane subjects in each reader of the series. Clergymen likewise are urged by the Society to aid the cause of gentleness and good-will by preaching one or more sermons each year upon the subject of cruelty to the brute creation. And the society ends its long list of resolutions with the declaration that, in its opinion, if the teachers in all the schools, public and private, the authorities in Sunday-schools, and the clergy, would do what they might to inculcate principles of humanity, the strange little demon of cruelty wouldn't long abide with mankind. We heartily approve these hints; the teachers of men and of children sadly need to be reminded that true and genial living is the first and grandest thing they have to teach.—New York Tribune.

A MEETING FOR prayer, conducted in a strange and novel fashion, was held a few days since in the schoolroom of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. After a brief address, Mr. Wilkinson, the Vicar, requested those present to kneel in silence while he pleaded their cause at the Throne of Grace. This having been done, they were requested to listen for the answer, when presently a voice arose from some mysterious part of the room, declaring, "I have heard thy prayer," &c.! The Rock remarks that, if this is to be regarded as a mild preparation for the mission week, we may look for some very exciting scenes indeed.—London Graphic.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE TRIUMPH OF TRUTH.

O, Truth, thy triumph is tardy,
The reign of Error is long;
The weak are oppressed by the mighty,
And the arm of Injustice is strong.

The wail of suffering innocence
Disturbs the quiet of night,
And Wrong, with traditional usage,
By daylight insults the Right.

In vain do the friends of mercy
For helpless humanity plead;
The strong and selfish still revel,
Nor the cries of the perishing heed.

In vain do the hands of freemen
The banner of Liberty raise,
The grey-bearded tyrant, Custom,
His time-honored sceptre sways.

Oh! when will the time be present
That faith through the future descries,
When Might shall cease to be cruel,
Nor the rights of weakness despise?

Though slow is the good time coming
Which hope has promised so long,
When love shall supplant all hatred,
And right shall prevail o'er wrong,

Yet still, through the mist of the future,
The dawn of its morning we see,
And the darkness and chaos around us
From the light are beginning to flee.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo., May 3, 1874.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One share,		$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 23.

John Weiss, $3; D. S. Grandin, $1.60; W. H. Boughton, $3; E. B. Wolcott, $3; J. R. Hawley, $2; James F. Brown, $3; C. H. Denison, 75 cents; Alfred Warren, 90 cents; Mark T. Adams, $3; A. J. Davis & Co., $1.35; J. F. Hamilton, $2; New England News Co., $14.72; G. S. Hall, $6; American News Co., $18.50; Clemens Vonnegut, $6; G. W. Topping, $4.50; Henry Villard, $6; John Ploughman, $3; E. K. Hart, $6; Anna E. Thompson, $3; Patrick McDonald, $3; Jonas Decker, $2; P. H. Magnus, $3; Mary H. Orton, $3; J. M. Hawks, $3; Christopher A. Day, $10; Geo. Lewis, $20.35; A. M. Purdy, $6; P. L. Sherman, $1; T. A. Kinney, $3; Oscar Roos, $2.50; N. S. Townsend, $10.25; V. B. Martin, $2; Chas. Nash, $44; Chas. Storrs, $100; A. L. Richmond, $50: Cash, $5; L. O. Bass, $5; J. T. Dickens, $20; W. I. Bowditch, $25; Gerrit Smith, $50; Photius Fisk, $100; J. K. Rose, $9.50; Mary Gifford, $70; Elizur Wright, $100; K. G. Wells, $20; Chas. Gurley, $200; J. L. Cutler, $100; John Wilson, $10; G. H. Foster, $1.30; M. S. Knaggs, 25 cents; James Stott, 75 cents; Wm. C. Moore, 75 cents; Lewis G. Janes, 50 cents; Wm. F. Perkins, 50 cents; E. B. McKenzie, 70 cents; Wm. B. Taylor, 80 cents; Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., $100; F. E. Abbot, $450; Cash, $2.40; A. K. Loring, 48 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

RECEIVED.

Books.

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Executive Committee of the Prison Association of New York, and Accompanying Documents, for the year 1870. Albany: 1871.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

SIXTEENTH, TWENTY-FIRST, TWENTY-SEVENTH, TWENTY-EIGHTH AND TWENTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORTS of the Prison Association of New York.

ANNUAL REPORT of the State Prison Commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, for the year ending December 31, 1859.

THE LAW OF HABIT. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, in New York, April 19, 1874. New York: D. G. Francis.

THE DISPOSAL OF OUR DEAD. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, in New York, May 3, 1874. New York: D G. Francis.

THE PRINCIPLES, METHODS, AND HISTORY OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS. A Discourse delivered in the Church of the Disciples, in Boston, on First Day, 2nd Mo. 8, 1874. By Augustine Jones, of Lynn, Mass. Lynn: G. C. Herbert.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London. April 5: "Easter-Day." April 18: "Immortality." April 25: "The Eternal Silence." May 2: "What Theism Teaches on God, and Evil, and Suffering."

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. June, 1874. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH. June, 1874. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, MAY 28, 1874.

N.B.—Any person whose name is now on our mail-list will receive a second copy of The Index, mailed to the same address, for a year, on pre-payment of One Dollar. This offer is made to accommodate those of our subscribers who wish to increase our circulation by sending extra copies as samples to their friends.

NOTICE.

The Third Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 48 Summit Street, on Saturday, June 6, 1874, at 10 o'clock, A.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

GLIMPSES.

The nineteenth National Sängerfest is to be held at Cleveland, from June 22 to June 27.

An Orthodox correspondent breathes this complaint into the editorial ear: "It dos not seam rite that all the talent in the lant should bee araid against the scripturs." We pity his sorrows, but do not see how to assuage them.

Miss Anna C. Brackett and Miss Ida M. Elliot, at No. 9 West 39th Street, New York, will reopen their excellent school for girls on October 1. Personal application before June 16 and after September 16; application by letter at any time.

Rev. John Weiss is open to engagements to lecture, his health being now sufficiently restored to permit this; and his brilliant lecture in this number of The Index shows what noble service he can render to the cause of high thinking and brave speaking.

The Civil Rights Bill has passed the United States Senate by a large majority, after a struggle of twenty hours. The House will probably make the bill a law at an early day. If the shade of the great Senator looks down still upon the scene of his long warfare with human slavery, what joy must it bring to him to witness the final triumph of the measure for which he pleaded so touchingly even in his dying hour!

At Bay City, Mich., on Sunday, May 3, a new "Liberal Association" was organized, with the following list of officers: President, Hon. S. M. Green; Vice-President, J. M. Allen; Secretary, Miss S. M. Johnson; Treasurer, Mrs. George Blackman; and an Executive Committee of five members (names not reported). The Secretary writes under date of May 18 as follows: "It was formed especially to put in practical execution the Demands of Liberalism, as set forth in The Index."

The Amherst Student thus chronicled the dedication of the new church at Amherst College: "Every recent graduate will regret to learn that the Faculty thought it necessary to stultify themselves, at the dedication of the new church, by forcing all the students to attend. We were informed how much better deportment was expected of us than in the chapel, and that all secular thoughts must be laid aside. On top of all that, we were driven into the edifice like a flock of sheep, under the direction of gym. captains and monitors."

The London Morning Journal says with reference to the disposal of surplus funds raised for sufferers by colliery accidents:—

"We have not much faith in the ultimate disposal of the large surplus of the present Oaks (accident) fund; for we cannot forget that, whilst the few managers of it quite recently purchased a cart-load of handsomely bound Bibles to present to the children and others who were connected with the Oaks, they at the same time refused to give anything towards purchasing bread for the widows and orphans of men killed by the Morley explosion."

On Monday, May 18, in the House of Representatives, Hon. George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented the "Congressional Petition" for the repeal of the Act of June 17, 1870, by which church property is exempted from taxation in the District of Columbia. The petition was ordered by the House to be printed, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and published in the Congressional Record; for a copy of which, containing the petition, we acknowledge our indebtedness to Mr. Hoar. Will the friends of the measure in Washington please watch the Committee, and inform the readers of The Index what action, if any, is taken with reference to it?

A contributor in another column makes inquiries touching our recently expressed views of the "praying crusade," and quotes its seemingly successful working in one of the small towns of Ohio. But the subjoined telegraphic despatch to the Boston Globe, dated Worcester, Mass., May 1, illustrates so pointedly the darker side of the "crusade" in arousing bitterness and even violence, that further comment seems scarcely needed. It is enough to say that, much as we regret the occurrence described, it yet follows almost inevitably from the character of the "crusade" itself: "One of the most disgraceful scenes in the crusade movement took place, this evening, in Joseph Riedi's saloon, on Pearl Street. The women were there three hours and a half, headed by Mrs. McGregor, Chairwoman of the Saloon Committee. During the last hour and a half, the scenes were too disgraceful for publication, for the credit of the city. In spite of the request of Mr. Riedi to have the women treated civilly, the dense crowd were uproarious and unmannerly in the extreme, pushing, jostling, hallooing, and using all manner of profane, obscene, and otherwise improper language. Brisk sales of lager were going on most of the time around the counter. It required the utmost efforts of several men to keep the crowd from crushing the women. One curious specimen of a man, having been accidentally hit by one of the women in the jam, addressed the leader of the praying band in the most indecent and profane language. This was the sad finale of the affair, after which, with the aid of several gentlemen keeping the crowd back from them, the women slowly made their exit from the saloon through a dense throng filling the sidewalk."

Last winter a course of lectures was given in the church of James Freeman Clarke by representatives of many different classes of religious believers. One of these was by Mr. Augustine Jones, of Lynn, Mass., on the "Principles, Methods, and History of the Society of Friends." It was a calm and winning presentation of the doctrine of the Inward Light of Christ, universal in all men, and saving all who are obedient to it. The breadth of the lecture is patent in such sentences as this: "A heathen may worship his idol, and, if obedient to his conviction, he is saved by the Inward Light." Of course, this Inward Light is taken to be supernatural, not natural, as is explicitly avowed. Mr. Jones sent this lecture to the Friend's Review, a weekly journal of Philadelphia, which refused it. The Christian Worker, published in Indiana, was denounced by one of its contributors, Thomas Kimball, Jr., for printing even an advertisement of an incendiary and unsound discourse which was delivered in a Unitarian meeting-house! The author has received scores of letters from England as well as this country in approval of or protest against his liberal construction of Quakerism; and the staid Friends are getting profoundly stirred up about it. John G. Whittier partly endorses it; others even denounce the motives of the lecturer. In consequence of all this turmoil, a new paper, the Occasional Observer, is to appear in June under the editorial charge of John Foster Mitchell, in defence of Liberal Quakerism. The gentleman who furnishes us with this information says there is a new Methodistic tendency in Quakerism which is a manifest retrogression; and the controversy now turns on the issue between inward and outward Christ-worship. To the liberal wing, Christ is the Inward Light of God, saving all obedient followers of it both before and after the coming of Jesus; this is the burden, they think, of Fox's Journal, Barclay's Apology, Bates' Doctrines, Tuke's Principles, J. J. Gurney's Observations, Clarkson's Portraiture of Quakerism, and various other Quaker classics. So the process of disintegration goes on in the old sects, and will go on till every man is "a church of one member," as Mr. Alcott says. Then will come a new union of all souls in the spirit of perfect freedom; and men will forget to put the label of any teacher's name on the pure and impersonal Truth.

THE "PROHIBITORY" PRINCIPLE.

When the miseries entailed by intemperance on men, women, and children are considered in their true and horrible proportions, there is little reason to wonder that sheer desperation drives so many excellent people to seek a remedy for them in a forcible suppression of the liquor traffic. If no liquor or intoxicating drink of any sort were sold at all, none could be consumed, unless each consumer undertook to manufacture his own; and this could be done only by a very few. Hence it appears to multitudes of persons that the most radical cure for intemperance, and the wretchedness, pauperism, and crime it is well known to cause, is to prohibit by statute the sale of alcohol in all its forms. This course is thought to aim a fatal blow at the very heart of the evil; and the adoption of it is considered so clear a duty that whoever distrusts the efficiency of the prohibitory method runs a great risk of being ranked among the open or secret enemies of the temperance reform. Nevertheless, we ask candid attention to some thoughts on this subject which, at least to one mind, seem true, and therefore entitled to great weight.

1. It is the abuse, and not the use, of alcohol which constitutes the evil of intemperance. Experience does not confirm the opinion that the drinking of a glass of pure wine, or pure beer, or pure liquor, is a sin per se. The great danger of the habitual use even of perfectly pure drinks of an intoxicating character may, and should, be admitted; but the tendency of use to run into abuse does not destroy the distinction between them. At least, thousands of the best people believe this, and their views cannot be sneered or exclaimed down.

2. The prohibitory principle aims to suppress the use as well as the abuse of alcoholic beverages, or must tend to produce this effect, even if not designed. That such beverages are used without being abused by many persons, is a fact which only a fanatic will deny. Yet the prohibitory principle can make no discrimination between users and abusers; the obstacles it interposes to the sale of these beverages operate equally against both classes; and it therefore punishes the users in order to prevent the abusers from becoming subjects of punishment. There is inherent injustice in such a principle as this, and it will make itself felt as surely as human nature is human nature.

3. The crime of intemperance, with which alone society has the right to deal, is the abuse, and not the use, of alcohol: if it were always used without being abused, no one would venture to claim the right to suppress the sale of it. The right of suppression is supposed to be grounded on the right to prevent the causes of crime in order to prevent crime itself; and the cause of intemperance is supposed to be the simple fact of drinking. Now if the mere drinking always led to drunkenness, society would have an undoubted right to prevent the mere drinking. But it does not always lead to it. In attempting to suppress all drinking of alcohol, therefore, by making it unobtainable for drinking purposes, prohibition attempts to suppress drinking which does not, as well as that which does, lead to drunkenness. Those persons who never drink to excess, never become guilty of the crime of intemperance, and therefore never become amenable to society for any criminal consequences of drinking, with which alone in themselves or in their causes society has the right to deal, feel naturally enough that society is infringing on their personal liberty; and the plea that it is done to prevent crime is felt to be worthless, because it is evident that, while drinking which leads to crime may be justly suppressed, drinking which does not lead to crime is beyond society's jurisdiction. It is perfectly true that there is a possibility of any drinking leading to crime; but since not all drinking actually leads to it, society suppresses more than the cause of crime when it suppresses all drinking, and this "more" is personal liberty. A man has a right to drink, so far as society is concerned, if he never drinks so much as to be guilty of intemperance; he may or may not be wise in doing it, but he never becomes amenable to society till he violates the rights of some other person or persons. Consequently, when the prohibitory principle declares that he shall never drink alcohol at all, regardless of whether he uses or abuses it, he properly considers his reserved rights invaded, and will feel himself aggrieved.

4. It is as an earnest friend of true temperance that we deplore the results of thus arraying one of the most powerful and most sacred instincts of humanity, the love of freedom, against the temperance reform. Unless the temperance reform can so shape its measures as to respect this instinct to the uttermost, it can never succeed. The personal liberty of the whole community cannot be permanently sacrificed, even to secure the abolition of the most frightful evils; for no evil is more frightful than this very sacrifice, which brings uncounted other evils in its train. The reaction against all measures which demand it will be as sure as gravitation, and as mighty. However temporarily successful, the prohibitory principle transcends the limits of free individuality, and will excite resistance in proportion to the strength of the liberty-loving spirit. In coarse or ignorant people, this resistance will take coarse or ignorant shapes. One of the worst of these is the defiant determination to drink, simply because prohibited. Experience shows plainly enough that the prohibitory principle is never carried out, because men will not submit to dictation with regard to matters so purely personal as eating and drinking; and, if driven to do their drinking in secret, and in violation of law, the danger of their becoming intemperate is increased tenfold. You may denounce this defiant spirit as much as you please; but it exists inevitably wherever prohibition prevails. The worst of it is that its root is a good one—resentment against injustice and infringement of personal rights; and temperance reformers have themselves to blame when this good root bears such evil fruit. The progress of their reform is delayed and stopped, when they are so rash or so over-eager as to crush the freedom of the individual under the votes of the majority. No good man can see his fellows plunging into the gulf of intemperance without deep sorrow; but no good man can see them driven to this suicidal course by ill-judging philanthropy without still deeper sorrow. It must surely be possible to find a remedy for this monstrous evil without trampling on the sense of personal freedom. If not, there is no remedy for it; for this will never cure it.

5. The prohibitory principle treats the liquor-seller as the criminal; whereas, if drunkenness is the crime, the criminal is the drunkard. Under certain circumstances, liquor-selling may be indeed a crime: as when liquor is sold to a man already half-intoxicated. But there will be no real temperance reform till public opinion stamps its unqualified reprobation on drunkenness itself, and holds every man to a rigorous responsibility for the preservation of his rationality at all times. If the drinker never forgot the duty he owes to himself, to his family, to society, he would never be a drunkard, and no one would dream of condemning the seller. Is an act of sale made a crime by the use afterwards made of the article sold? No. Unless the seller knows or suspects the buyer's intent to be criminal at the time, he is guiltless; and the guilt belongs to the buyer alone. Not the sale, but the purchase,—not the seller, but the purchaser,—ought to be condemned, if the transaction is wrong per se; and the prohibitory principle, even if it were justifiable in treating the transaction as a crime in itself, lays it at the door of the wrong party, when it punishes the liquor-seller rather than the liquor-drinker. The greater expediency or feasibility of this course is no justification of it.

6. The truth is that no temperance reform can be permanent or general till the people themselves resolve to be temperate. You may try to make it impossible for them to get drunk by abolishing the liquor-traffic; but you will fail just so long as the people are determined to buy the liquor. This reliance on external safeguards as a substitute for internal self-restraint is what prevents the true principle of temperance—self-government under all circumstances by conscience and reason—from making real headway. There is no such thing as a short cut to universal temperance, —no such thing as a speedy abolition of all intemperance. It is a matter of slow and painful growth to eradicate so inveterate a disease from the social system; and we should be wise to face this fact calmly and fully. A new public opinion must be formed; a new habit of self-government must be cultivated; a new reverence for reason and conscience must be created and fostered. All this takes time,—yes, a great deal of time. Intemperance is at least as old as human history, and one must be more enthusiastic than wise to expect that any political measure whatever can take the place of a universal elevation of moral motives. Not prohibitory laws, not the establishment of woman suffrage (though sanguine woman-suffragists expect incredible efficacy from that measure), will make any appreciable reduction in the long run in the amount of drunkenness. The dissemination of true principles on the subject, and reliance on better education, together with such indirect external helps as the providing of cheap and innocent amusements for the people and the establishment of equity in social and industrial relations, will do all that can be done to drive this demon of inebriation from the homes and haunts of men. But all this is a slow process, which cannot but be retarded by enlisting noble sentiments like the love of freedom on the wrong side. We deeply sympathize with the desire of prohibitionists to protect wives and mothers and helpless children from the woes of the drunkard's home; yet we believe that the method of coercion, whether applied in the form of stringent statutes or in the milder form of "praying" intrusion and religious brow-beating, will fail totally of its object in the final upshot. The actual condition of human nature must be taken into the account; and one of the surest ways to defeat reform is to create a protest against it on the score of personal liberty.

CREMATION.

The subject of cremation is plainly destined to occupy a fair share of attention in America. The most intelligent people are interested in the discussion, and their interest is of the serious kind that betokens active conviction, and looks to practical achievement. The society in New York, though of recent formation, as yet unincorporated, and engaged in preliminary inquiries, officered too by quiet, unobtrusive men, who have confined themselves to private or quasi-private efforts, numbered, three weeks ago, more than eighty members; among them men of different professions, lawyers, physicians, clergymen, merchants, and of religious opinions running all the way from Episcopacy to bald rationalism. By this time the list must be much longer. It is designed to secure an act of incorporation. In a week or two, the subject will be presented to the community at a public meeting, to be addressed by speakers fully acquainted with all the aspects of the question; and then the attempt will probably be made to raise funds for the purpose of instituting the practice for all such as approve of it.

It is particularly desirable that the custom of burning instead of burying the dead, if worthy of adoption, should be adopted as soon as may be in a new country like ours, in order that the evils of interment, so disastrously felt in old countries, may be prevented. Already, in our more populous cities, they are painfully apparent, and populous cities grow in our climate very rapidly. No municipal limits contain the people long; they overrun the country like grasshoppers; the interval between the city of the living and the city of the dead shrinks visibly; the cemetery in the fields is a cemetery in the town before we think of it; and the intramural mischief is upon us almost without warning.

There is a small district in New York City that is never free from disease. The health inspector naïvely reports "eight vacant lots occupied as coal-yards, storage for lumber, etc.," as "in fair sanitary condition." The rest of the quarter is unhealthy, with a large and constant sickness-rate. In the summer months diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera-infantum prevail. Purulent ophthalmia continually exists. In this district, forty feet under the ground, is an old negro burial ground. That the sickliness of the district is chiefly or largely due to this old burial place cannot be affirmed, for it is in other respects a filthy, miserable quarter, inhabited by the least caring and cared for part of the community; and the poisons of the old cemetery are perhaps, by this time, discharged. But who knows whether they have been or not? At all events, before they were discharged, they must have been responsible for a good deal of the same kind of sickness as prevails now. A single cemetery of Brooklyn,—Calvary,—the principal cemetery of the Roman Catholic Church,—there were, in a single year, nine thousand interments,—about forty per cent. of the whole city dead. The procession of hearses thither is incessant. The ground is not a large one, and the dead lie there in layers three or four deep in places, the upper ones being so near the surface that the effluvium taints the air. Yet the medical inspector who gives the numbers contents himself with remarking: "The records of this city of the dead exhibit singularly instructive records of the nationalities and ages of the decedents belonging to that religious denomination!" That here is a pressing danger who will deny? That other cities of the Union are exposed to similar dangers who can doubt? If prevention be better than cure, and we know that it is, then the subject of cremation is of as much importance here as in old countries, so far as the future is concerned; and we should be stimulated to its practice by the consideration that by timely measures we may wholly escape evils that elsewhere cannot even be remedied.

To religious reformers the subject of cremation ought to be peculiarly interesting, for it comes under the head of their general reform. The practice of interment is associated with the popular notions of resurrection, and these imply a theory of immortality that we regard as irrational. The alteration of the custom would indirectly effect our alteration in the belief. The doctrine of the resurrection of the body may be reconciled with the practice of burning as well as with the practice of burying. But it is not so reconciled at present, in any but enlightened minds. The ignorant will, for many a day, refuse to believe that fire does not render a resurrection in form impossible, the resemblance between dust and ashes being beyond their appreciation. They who perceive the resemblance, and frankly concede the equal possibility of ascension from the pyre as from the mound, probably entertain a conception of the risen form more than usually spiritual, and, in consequence, anticipate a more spiritual future. As the matter stands with the multitude, the substitution of burning for burying would imply the substitution of a new faith for an old one. The practice of interment is the refuge of superstition. With the practice the superstition will cease. If the arguments against cremation, on sanitary and social grounds, should be found stronger than the arguments in its favor, this last consideration will of course have no weight. But should cremation commend itself on sanitary and social grounds, the fact that it discourages superstition, and lends support to more rational views on an important subject, will whet the interest of reformers in it, and make them actively favor its adoption.

O. B. F.

THE THEATRE AS A MORAL FORCE.

The papers announce that the Globe Theatre is to be rebuilt, owned, and managed by gentlemen of high standing. Is it a vain hope that they will give us a theatre which shall do justice to the drama as a fine art, as well as a great educational force in the State?

It is the imagination which excites and directs the passions, and we can no more place ourselves under its sway and revel in its delights without being affected by the thoughts, the sentiments, the emotions it presents to us, than we can breathe the atmosphere without being strengthened and elevated, or enervated and weakened, or even fatally poisoned by it.

A miscellaneous audience of men and women, many of them young and impressible, cannot listen to the gross sensuality and meaningless absurdities of an opera bouffé, applauding the worst portions and calling for a repetition of the coarsest scenes, without being debased and degraded by the influence that fills the theatre. Compare the sound of the applause, the tone of the voices which cry encore, with that of some audience lifted to enthusiasm by a generous sentiment, and the ear will detect the difference of discernment which animates them.

We might take the "New Magdalen" as the type of another class of drama which deeply affects an audience, and whose moral influence is perhaps of a mixed character. The play abounds in excellent sentiments; and it is said that many desolate and unhappy women have written to thank the accomplished actress for her admirable representation of the reformed sinner, which has given them strength and hope to struggle upward. This is a great good. But yet who has not felt, in witnessing the play, its want of truth to nature and to life, and that the hopes it would excite might prove wholly unreal in the hour of trial?

It is not the beautiful, gifted girl only, driven to wrong by outside influences impossible to resist, and aided by the most devoted admiration and love, when the struggle comes, that needs help and assistance. It is the poor, wretched one, whose own weakness is her worst enemy, and whose progress upward must be slow and painful, that requires our help.

If the drama, or any form of art, quits its own ground of influence by simply elevating and ennobling the whole being, and attempts to work out a distinct moral problem, it must then take all the conditions of the problem, and stand the test of the political economist and the moralist, as well as its own.

This is not quite the service we demand of the drama. We do not ask it to enlighten the understanding or direct the conscience, but to elevate and purify the imagination, so that it will hate vice for its grossness, and shrink from the discord of evil for its own sake.

How simple are the situations in Beethoven's one opera of "Fidelio"! The sentiments of loyalty, of filial duty, of pure love, have no novelty to recommend them; but they are set to a music which thrills us through and through with all the grandeur which virtue can give to human nature. There are souls which can resist such influences (as we once knew a young man to insult a most respectable colored woman as he was coming out from hearing the "Messiah"); but the mass of appreciative hearers are at least for the time lifted up into a mood of sublimity and heroism which is never wholly forgotten. And the pleasant comedy, pure and sparkling, loving and genial, kindles a glow of good feeling and human love which refreshes the tired brain, lightens the weary heart, and makes us love each other the better for the pleasure we have enjoyed.

But there is one thing absolutely necessary to the success of a theatre in any effort to raise its performances above the present low standard; and that is the coöperation of the public. Our politics are corrupt, because the best men abstain from politics; our theatres are low, because those who can enjoy better things do not make their proper demand for them. The former proprietor of the Globe Theatre gave us Shakspeare's charming "As You Like It," without great leading stars, but with a grace and beauty which suited that lovely work of art. He would gladly have continued the experiment by putting on the stage all of Shakspeare's best comedies in the same admirable style; but, alas, the receipts did not warrant it. The theatre must pay, and the apathy of the public too often compelled him to take the second best, the burlesque or the sensational drama, that would fill the house, though it did not gratify his own taste or elevate that of the public.

This influence of the theatre for good or for evil is greatly increased by the prevailing fashion of private theatricals. Wisely conducted, this amusement is admirable for its physical training of voice and gesture, for its exercise of the memory and the inventive powers; it gives a great amount of innocent pleasure, and is often successfully connected with interest in philanthropic work. But it is exceedingly difficult to find any play simple enough for the narrow conveniences of the private stage, which is not either vapid in its sentimentalism or coarse and low in its tone. Many attempts have been made to supply this want; but the plays usually lack all the higher qualities of wit, sentiment, or imagination, and fail to attract the public. If we could get the good qualities of French comedy, its simplicity of scene, its naturalness of acting, its sparkling vivacity, without its conventional immorality and covert coarseness, we should have nearly what we want. Some of the French plays written for schools are very simple and charming; but we must have an original growth from our own soil. It is always difficult to transfer any work from another language with perfect success.

If the many gifted women who look to literature as an intellectual resource or a profession would turn their thoughts seriously to supplying this need, they might achieve a great success for themselves, and do a great service to the public. E. D. C.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston on the 28th and 29th of May. The meeting will open with a session for business and addresses on Thursday evening, the 28th, at 7 3-4 o'clock, in Horticultural Hall (lower). At this session the following Amendments to the Constitution are to be acted upon:—

1. In the statement of the objects of the Association in the First Article, to change the phraseology so as to read thus: "Its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history."

2. To change the number of Directors, now limited by the Second Article to "six," so that the number shall be "not less than six nor more than ten."

At this session brief addresses are also expected, on various local and special phases of the FREE religious movement, from Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rowland Connor, Rabbi Sonneschein, R. H. Ranney, and others.

On Friday, the 29th, there will be sessions at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., in the upper Horticultural Hall. The morning session will be opened by an address from the President, O. B. Frothingham, on "The Validity and Necessity of the Free Religious Platform." Speeches will follow from S. R. Calthrop, T. W. Higginson, and F. E. Abbot. The three latter speakers are to represent, respectively, the "Christian," the "Extra-Christian," and the "Anti-Christian" attitude of believers in religious freedom. At the opening of the afternoon session, Rev. Dr. Bartol will read an essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times;" addresses expected from Rabbi S. H. Sonneschein, Bishop Ferrette, and C. G. Ames. In the evening, at the new Parker Memorial Hall, a Social Donation Festival is to be held. Brief addresses, music, conversation and refreshments will be provided for, and donations are hoped for from the friends of the Association.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, Secretary.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Articles for this department should be SHORT, and written only on one side of the sheet.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

N. B.—No responsibility will be assumed for unused manuscripts.

THE PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

OZARK, MO., April 18, 1874.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—In THE INDEX of April 9, under the caption "The Praying Crusade," you criticise the late outburst of religious fanaticism in attempting to suppress the liquor traffic in a spirit and style which I consider characteristic of a rational thinker. Had you not alluded disparagingly to another method which has been employed to extirpate the debasing vice of intemperance, I should have read your article with sincere approval, and treasured its thoughts among the many expressions of truth which I receive from THE INDEX.

In speaking of the "Crusade" you say: "It is only a new phase of the prohibitory movement—prohibition taking a religious instead of a statutory form. Much as we respect the motives of many prohibitionists, their principle seems to us to begin at the wrong end of human nature." What your objections to prohibition are, not having heard you express your views on the subject, I do not know; but that you deem a legal interdiction of the sale of intoxicating liquors inadequate to the prevention of intemperance, is patent to my understanding, or I do not comprehend the meaning of "prohibition." That intemperance is a demoralizing and derationalizing vice whose prevention should be sought by every friend of human happiness, all readers of THE INDEX must think you believe. But since you teach the supremacy of reason in the rulings of society, and know that those who yield to the siren voice of intemperance are persons in whom the rational sovereign has been supplanted by a blind and reckless appetite, I cannot conceive how you can consistently oppose the forceable prohibition of a traffic which indulges a depraved passion whose victims confess themselves incapable of averting their own doom.

Is it rational or philanthropic in the class of society capable of self-government to suffer temptations to be alluringly placed before the ignorant, weak, and vitiated, who have not the moral power to resist them? Do we not protect our children from evil by force, and does not the State owe the same protection to its helpless subjects? What treatment of this vice does rationalism dictate?

Yours truly, H. CLAY NEVILLE.

"THE PRAYING CRUSADE."

TIPPECANOE CITY, O., April 16, 1874.

MR. EDITOR:—

I see in your last issue that you strongly condemn the ladies' movement in the cause of temperance. Perhaps, if you were more truly informed of its workings you would think better of it. In our little town we had eight saloons, all retailing intoxicating liquors as a beverage to be drunk on and about their premises. Most of such selling and drinking was contrary to law. There had been numerous efforts made by the citizens to bring the offenders to justice, nearly all of which had failed; and many of the husbands, brothers, sons and fathers of our place and vicinity were frequently returning to their homes late of nights in a worse than beastly intoxicated condition. The ladies called a meeting to consult as to what they should do to protect their firesides from such afflictions; and they drew up in substance the following:—

"To the saloon-keepers of Tippecanoe City, Ohio: We, the ladies of Temperance League 35, request of you the following:—

"1st. That from this time forward you will not buy or cause to be bought any more intoxicating drinks, to be sold or given away as a beverage in or about your premises.

"2nd. That from this time forward you will not sell or give away, or cause to be sold or given away, any intoxicating drinks whatever, except in strict compliance with law.

"3d. That, as soon as your present stocks are exhausted or sold according to law, you will quit the business entirely, never to resume it again in this place.

"We simply ask your promise to the above requests. We ask the above of you, our brothers, because the business you follow is sending to our homes intoxicated husbands and fathers, unfit members of any family. The places you keep are decoys to our little sons, leading them to destruction. We ask this because intemperance is a disease which becomes hereditary, thus endangering every family in all our land. We ask it because it may sometime come to your own homes in a most crushing reality. We propose to sing and pray with you occasionally, until we have your answers, or until we are satisfied our efforts in this way will be unavailing."

The result was, in less than two weeks every saloon-keeper gave a favorable answer, and three of them quit the business sooner than requested, with stocks of liquor on hand. The leaders of the league have made two festivals in honor of, and for the benefit of, those complying with their requests.

The festivals were very largely attended, and a more cordial, social, and affectionate gathering was never before seen in our town. Victors and vanquished clasped each others' hands in friendship.

Mr. Editor, do you think "superstition" did all this? Don't you think there was a suitable adaptation of means to the end? Free Religionists, of all people in the world, I think, should shout Amen to such means and such results. And don't you think the results will be more lasting than if crushed by law? E. L. CRANE.

[There can be no objection to private appeals to the reason and conscience of any one. But the threat (for it was one) to "sing and pray" with the saloon-keepers until they yielded or proved hopelessly obdurate, whatever its immediate success, is but a transient expedient little likely to produce lasting effects. It is much too soon as yet to talk of the "success" of this "crusade." Whatever really tends to reduce the evil of intemperance, provided it does not create other evils as grave, we heartily wish well to; but the evils entailed by too great reliance on coercion, even that form of it which consists in overwhelming the individual with a resistless weight of public opinion, are too subtile to be immediately apparent. Especially do we distrust the permanency of the results attained by revivalistic furor. We certainly cannot "shout Amen" to the firing-off of a volley of prayers at any man's head, for the purpose of coercing him against his will to change his business. Prayer put to such uses may be "efficacious" at first, but it is superstitious nevertheless; and we suspect that praying will itself be worse hurt than liquor-selling in the end.—ED.]

LABOR THE ONLY GROUND OF PRICE.

BY JOSIAH WARREN.

It is folly to expect that men will prefer starved, ragged, insulted labor, however useful it may be, rather than an easy situation with a sufficient income and the respect of their fellow-men. It is not surprising that the ranks of the respected pursuits are crowded till their followers are tempted to live by fraud—that we are overrun with speculators, thieves, defaulters, counterfeiters, burglars, robbers, murderers, incendiaries, rapacious officials, and other vagabonds; or that the Bible is tortured into the defence of slavery and poverty by those who are revelling in idleness and luxury; or that, when the opportunities for speculations and office-holding opened by one war are all filled, the next step is to appeal to "patriotism" to get up another war. This pandemonium of ours miscalled society will continue, in spite of all conscience, all preaching, and all law-making, as long as men are tempted to live by profitable crimes rather than to starve in useful pursuits.

The immense advantages derived from the division and exchange of labor are so overwhelming that they have almost extinguished the idea of people in the midst of them making everything that they use; we depend on buying all our supplies with money from those who can produce them to better advantage. Hence money is the all-in-all—the pivot upon which everything and everybody turns. So we return to money.

Money should be a representative, and nothing but a representative, of property or wealth. Let us see what kind of property it should represent. Sunshine, the air we breathe, the water in a river, are wealth of great value; but, not being the product of any one's labor, they are not legitimate subjects of price, even if it were possible to command a price for them.

The man who should stumble upon a coal mine, without having taken any pains or trouble to find it, would not be equitably entitled to any compensation for that accident. His true ground of price begins when he commences to take trouble to make it known or to get it out. If he only superintends or gives directions, if this function is not as disagreeable (all things considered) as that of digging and wheeling the coal, his compensation would not be as great, on the principle of equivalents, as that of the humblest coal-digger.

With regard to the ownership of the mine, like the water in the river, nobody owns it—everybody owns it. It is equitably the inheritance of all mankind, and it makes no difference who undertakes to work it, if the price of the coal is simply compensation for the labor of the mind and the hand in superintending, digging, delivering, and all other contingent COSTS. If the men were obliged to work in water six inches deep, their pay, to compensate them, must be more than if there were no water, and more in cold weather in the water than in warm weather.

It would be the same with any other mines, whether of lead, copper, gold, silver, or any other natural wealth,—such as land, stone, wood, spontaneous fruits, etc.; there is no just ground for price till labor comes to be bestowed upon them.

If one should accidentally see a good site for a city he is not equitably entitled to pay for a discovery which has cost him nothing. If he undertakes to lay it out into lots, and to sell them, he is equitably entitled to pay according to the costs of his labor compared with other labors, and all contingent expenses; and these being paid, there is no just ground for any further price or compensation.

If an acre in that city would make a desirable home for a nabob, he should give for it only as much of his own labor as it has cost. If some other one wishes to possess it after the nabob has fixed his mind upon it, and prefers it to any other situation, he can equitably consider what would compensate him for the cost or sacrifice he might incur in parting with it; but he cannot equitably have any reference to the value of the lot to the applicant, or what he might extort from the "demand" or necessities of the purchaser.

Thus far, then, we have found no equitable ground of price, except labor, or costs incurred.

THE REVIVAL MOVEMENT IN SCOTLAND AND THE REV. GEORGE GILFILLAN.

As a result of the visit to Scotland of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the famous "American revivalists," great religious excitement has, for upwards of six months, prevailed in that country. The culminating point of this so-called "revival movement," however, seems to have been reached during the early part of March, when an address, signed by about two hundred ministers of various denominations, was issued for the purpose of calling upon the recipients thereof to participate in a proposed week of united prayer on behalf of the young men of Scotland. This address (which was of considerable length) was somewhat peculiar in its phraseology, and contained not a few absurdities. It commenced with these words: "The Lord has visited the land. What shall we render to Him for His mercy? He has graciously rebuked the scepticism of the age and given token that, of a truth, He is the answerer of prayer." An enumeration, from a believer's standpoint, of the leading features of the movement was given as proof that (to quote the words of the address) "the efficacy of the heavenly influence has been evinced;" and this was followed by these remarks: "Surely, it is matter for glowing thankfulness to ministers, office-bearers in churches, parents and Christian philanthropists, that such a glorious tide in the direction of our dear young men has set in. Is it not the part of true wisdom to make the most of the present opportunity?" It then stated that, "amongst other expedients," it had been "suggested by our brethren from America, who have so lovingly, unsparingly, and successfully labored amongst us, that a united cry should go up from congregations and families for a mighty blessing to come down on the young men, not of one city alone, but of all Scotland." The importance of "believingly turning the golden hour to best account" was urged, said the address, by "the beneficial effects to be looked for, from"—amongst other things—"the Christianization of society at large," and "the evangelization of the world by the life and service of Scottish merchants, engineers, planters, artisans, farmers, soldiers, seamen, and residents abroad." It concluded as follows: "Let us in faith ask great things. Is it not better so to cry to our Father in heaven than to have to lift up such wail as that uttered by Israel's king? 'And the king was much moved, and went up to the chambers over the gate, and wept; and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!'"

The following outspoken letter, sent to the Glasgow Herald by the Rev. George Gilfillan, of Dundee, in response to the address, deserves an especial acknowledgment from the friends of religious freedom. Mr. Gilfillan is a member of the United Presbyterian sect, and is well and widely known, not only as an eloquent preacher and lecturer, but also as a most brilliant writer and critic. His Gallery of Literary Portraits is, perhaps, the most popular of his works; and his standard edition of the poets, with lives, critical dissertations, etc., (18 vols. in all) has been published in this country by the Messrs. Appleton:—

"I am favored—in common, I suppose, with most clergymen in Scotland—with a document inviting me and all others to unite this week in prayer for our young men. That young men, like all other classes of the community, may require to be prayed for, and may be the better of being prayed for, I do not deny. But a week of prayer for young men does not strike me as the most felicitous of the novelties which have lately been imported from America. And apart from this, I certainly do not like the very fanatical and silly terms in which the document preceding the invitation is couched. I am told there that the Lord has visited the land, as if we were a land of heathen darkness, and had not been visited till the year of grace 1874, when Messrs. Sankey and Moody stepped down on our shores. I am told also that the Lord has rebuked our scepticism. I thought, sir, that scepticism, being an intellectual matter, should be rebuked by argument and not by excitement. I am not aware that Messrs. Moody and Sankey have answered Matthew Arnold, Leslie Stephen, or William Rathbone Greg. If their answers have appeared, I shall be most happy to read them, and to hand them on to the young men I know here. I do not think, sir, that the doubt of the age is such a shallow matter, after all, as can be disposed of by a few well-played tunes and a good many earnest and not very well-digested harangues. I saw recently my name mentioned in a letter in your columns as one of those who seemed by their silence to have given their sanction to recent revival doings. To those residing in Dundee it is unnecessary, to others it may be requisite, to say that, while I say nothing against the motives of our visitors, and while I believe they have showed more sense than many of their satellites, I decidedly disapprove of the general system they have followed, and look upon the results they have produced, as I did upon those of their predecessors, with very little faith or expectation, and I am not alone, by hundreds of Scotch ministers I know, in thinking so. I believe every one who did not approve of their measure has to signify the same by letter, else silence might have implied consent—I have acted on this hint, although some have thought it an attempt to steal a march upon all Scotland."

It remains to be seen what action, if any, the Rev. gentleman's presbytery, or sect, will take in the matter of such suspicious utterances; but that the odium theologicum has been invoked by the revivalists may be inferred from the report of an evangelical meeting conducted by Messrs. Dunn and Scroggie. According to the Harwich Express, Mr. Scroggie said, speaking of Mr. Gilfillan:—

"If there was any one courting popularity, it was that minister; and if any one dared to express different views [from those of Mr. Gilfillan], no one would be more ready to resent such an insult."

W. B. G.

LIBERALISM---HOW TO SPREAD IT.

St. Joseph, Mo., May 5, 1874.

Mr. F. E. Abbot:

Dear Sir,—After finishing reading Mr. Stevens' very satisfactory address on "Free Religion" in last week's Index, I could not but think with regret of the very limited circulation and influence of such noble and elevating opinions, especially in view of the fact that thousands are hungry, yes, suffering, for just such food, who have escaped from the pale of Orthodoxy, but who have not gained manhood enough to avow their opposition to its tyranny; who dare not place themselves on record as heretics.

For example, in this township there is a population of some three thousand; and I know that not more than one-half are in the habit of attending church, and many that do are freethinkers; yet such is the influence of the Church that very few could be induced to sustain such a paper as The Index. Nor do I believe that this locality is peculiar.

To meet the cases of such—to train or educate them in independence,—it seems to me it would be wise in our liberal writers to make use of our independent journals having large circulations—as much as possible such as the New York Tribune, Chicago Tribune, and Times, New York World, etc., etc.

The papers above mentioned publish the sermons of the most liberal preachers, as well as others, weekly.

They offer a fine field for the criticisms of Liberals, and one, if possible, that should be reaped.

If the anti-Christian sentiment of our people of all shades of opinion were fully known, and the holders thereof could be counted, in my opinion it would astonish Liberals almost as much as it would the Church.

What is to be deplored in connection with a large number of the people referred to is that, in casting off the authority of the Church, they have not accepted something better, and are now drifting about—without compass or rudder.

Yours for Free Religion,
E. C. Alphonse.

INSPIRATION.

Editor of The Index:

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to make one single remark on Mr. Hoover's letter in your issue of 30th April? Inspiration, though claimed for the historical writers of the Old and New Testaments, is not claimed by even one of them.

To the truthful historian, inspiration is superfluous, since it cannot make truth more true, or wisdom more wise; and it is useless to the untruthful historian, as it cannot change fiction into fact, folly into wisdom. The introduction of the absurd, the marvellous, the improbable, is primâ-facie evidence against historical veracity; hence the claim for historical inspiration is an ingenious invention to ensure belief in the absurd, the foolish, the incredible,—none of which can have been "inspired" by divine wisdom and truth. D. E. de L.

P.S.—Neither the writings of the prophets nor the epistles are historical.

DO THEY BELIEVE IT?

Editor of The Index:—

I clip the following from a report of the articles adopted at the meeting of the ministers of the Evangelical Ministers' Association of Boston:—

"Art. 2. The doctrinal basis of this Association is the broad, historical, evangelical, catholic ground, which has been occupied by all vital Christians from the beginning; embracing the belief in the Divine Human Person and the Atoning Work of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the personality, and the regenerating and sanctifying offices of the Holy Spirit, as the only source of salvation, and the centre of all true Christian union and fellowship."

This plainly means a belief in the doctrines of the Trinity and of the Atonement, and also in the doctrine that no one, unless he believes in them, can be saved. The commonly received idea of salvation is that of eternal future happiness; the lack of such salvation, the eternal misery of human beings.

Now I wish to ask, Do they truly believe all that their words imply? Do they believe that the larger part of the human family, who have never heard, much less believed, these doctrines, are to be eternally miserable? Do they believe thatthe beloved Sumner, whom they have so highly and justly praised, has gone to eternal punishment?

In the Old South Church Covenant, there is, or was a few years ago (the statement was made recently by one of their number that their platform had not been changed for two hundred years), a phrase of this import: "The children of elect parents may be saved." Do they believe, as this phrase would seem to imply, that the largest part of those who die in infancy are forever miserable? If they believe in an eternal hell for infants and heathen, let them say so plainly.

But if they believe that heaven and hell are conditions of the mind, and that the unconverted heathen and others may never attain to that degree of goodness and happiness that others more privileged may reach, is it honest or truthful to use such phrases as are used to express their belief? Honesty.

THE EMPEROR JULIAN.

Probably no man has been so abused and cursed by the entire Christian world as Flavius Julian, Roman Emperor from 361 to 363 A.D. It may be well to inquire into the cause of this most Christian hatred, especially as the subject of it was one of the greatest and wisest of men. The cause can be stated in a few words. Prior to the reign of Julian, Christianity had been making gigantic strides towards universal empire. The conversion of Constantine had raised high the hopes and expectations of the whole Christian world. During his reign the pagans were oppressed and persecuted, the grand old temples of antiquity were demolished, and all the power of the State was employed to propagate Christianity. When Julian ascended the throne, a slight change was made. Good Christians wept and gnashed their teeth. However, the Christians could not justly complain of anything. Religious freedom was granted to all. It is true that the Christians were not allowed to demolish any more pagan temples, nor were they permitted to plunder the houses of pagan citizens. Moreover, in some cases they were even compelled to restore the property they had stolen, and to rebuild or pay for the temples they had destroyed. It is easily seen, from what has been said, why the Christians hated Julian. The accession of Julian to the throne materially injured the prospects of Christianity. Julian was no apostate. He never renounced the faith of his ancestors. The faith which Julian professed possessed, to say the least, unity. Thomas Taylor, the Platonist, remarks: "It seems at first sight surprising that there should be no sects among the Grecian polytheists; they were unanimous in their belief of a multitude of gods subordinate to one supreme; their mode of worship was uniformly the same; and they appear to have had no conception of religious innovation. Shall we say that a religion is false in proportion to its unity; that truth may be branded out into an endless variety of discordant streams; and that error alone resists the power of copious and confused division? Such a speculation is indeed curious, but not safe; and its result would perhaps be more logical than orthodox, and more informing than discreet."

Thomas M. Johnson.

MORE "HORSE-CAR RELIGION."

New York, March 26, 1874.

Dear Mr. Abbot:—

I sent you a while since a tract handed me by a man on one of the street-cars, which you have just printed in The Index. Yesterday he gave me another. The person who thus goes about doing good, as he thinks, lives in a neighboring town, but has business in New York, and always carries these tracts with him. He buys them himself, and, wherever he goes, takes up his cross and tries to save souls. I talked with him a little yesterday. He is terribly in earnest. He believes every word he says. I asked him if he believed that those who did not take Christ as a Savior would go to hell eternally; and he said emphatically, "I do." I asked him if he thought he could ever enjoy the delight of heaven while any dear companion, as good perhaps as he, was boiling and baking and suffocating in the sulphurous pit; and he exclaimed emphatically, "I could, for it is God's will." I told him his nature was different from mine; that I would in such a place raise an army, break through the battlements of hell, help to put out the fire, and set loose the victims. He thought me a poor, deluded sinner. M. L. H.

Where are our Domestic Poets?—Here is a theme which they have strangely neglected,—one on which the tears flow faster than the verses. On one of those bitter cold sunsets, last week, little four-year-old got leave of mother to go towards the woods and meet his father, who was chopping. Father took another route home, and little four-year-old wandered on into the darkness. Bitter, bitter cold! Father at once turned back to the woods. Forty neighbors promptly took pity and started too. That was a night to be remembered. Warm hearts, but all else as cold as death. Now a cheery shout of strong men, and again all silent as the grave. Here and there a torch, and the shadow on the snow of a grim old pine; the rest all black. Help never reached the little fellow alive. Discouraged at calling his father so long without an answer,—tired, lonesome, and drowsy with frost,—he had found himself a bed, taken off one little shoe and stocking, and gone to sleep forever.—Transcript.

"Where are you going?" said a young gentleman to an elderly one in a white cravat, whom he overtook a few miles from Little Rock. "I am going to heaven, my son. I have been on the way eighteen years." "Well, good-by, old fellow; if you have been travelling toward heaven eighteen years, and got no nearer to it than Arkansas, I'll take another route!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address
THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
PUBLISHED BY THE
INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,
ON THE
FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUCHNER'S Force and Matter 2.50

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

BUCKLE'S Essays; with a Biography of the Author. Fine portrait 1.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 3.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 6.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus 5.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin 2.00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

THE REFORMATOR.

A WEEKLY JOURNAL,

For the dissemination of useful knowledge, and the enlightenment of the people on political, religious, and social subjects, with a view to reform.

Published in the German language every Saturday, at Adrian, Mich.

Principal office at Adrian, Mich., to which all letters and communications must be addressed.

C. LOHMANN & SON, Pub's.

C. LOHMANN, EDITOR.

The REFORMATOR circulates in all the principal cities and villages in the United States and Territories, and presents an excellent medium for advertising.

Terms of Subscription—$2 per annum. Advertisements inserted at liberal rates. Subscription and advertisements must be paid in advance.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

J. SEDGEBEER, Painesville, Ohio.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

$20 SAVED! FLORENCE!

$20 SAVED! The long-contested suit of the FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO. against the Singer, Wheeler & Wilson, and Grover & Baker Companies, involving over $250,000, is finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the FLORENCE, which alone has Broken the Monopoly of High Prices. THE NEW FLORENCE is the ONLY machine that sews backward and forward, or to right and left. Simplest, Cheapest, Best! Sold for cash only. Special terms to Clubs and Dealers.

FLORENCE, Mass., April, 1874.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

METROPOLITAN SERMONS,

By prominent and popular preachers in New York and vicinity, among whom are:

HENRY WARD BEECHER,
Rev. Drs. WASHBURNE, FAIRCHILD,
CROSBY, SCUDDER,
STORRS, CUYLER,
Rev. Dr. WM. ADAMS (Farewell Sermon in full)
CHAPIN, CUMMINS,
SCHENCK, MCARTHUR,
TAYLOR, POTTER,
PATTON, HARRIS,
FOSS, DIX,
Revs. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, J. W. CHADWICK, Archbishop MCCLOSKEY, Rabbi VIDAVER, W. R. ALGER, JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, and others, exceeding forty in all, are published in

THE TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 17,

NOW READY.

Price 10 cents; pamphlet form, 20 cents; 7 for $1.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, Extra (32 pages), 25 cents.

BEECHER'S YALE LECTURES (Nos. 6 and 7), 20 cents.

THE BROOKLYN CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL (No. 16), 10 cents.

The five Extras named above to any address in the United States for 50 cents.

Circulars giving full details of the contents of each Tribune Extra mailed free to any address. Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

DITSON & CO.'S

Home Musical Library.

Price of each Book in Boards, $2.50; Cloth, $3; Full Gilt, $4.

MUSICAL TREASURE. Vocal.
SILVER CHORD. Vocal.
WREATH OF GEMS. Vocal.
GEMS OF SACRED SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG. Vocal.
OPERATIC PEARLS. Vocal.
SHOWER OF PEARLS. Vocal Duets.
ORGAN AT HOME. Reed Organ Music. Instrumental.
GEMS OF STRAUSS. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. I. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. II. Instrumental.
PIANIST'S ALBUM. Instrumental.
PIANOFORTE GEMS. Instrumental.

Large, splendid books of bound music, two hundred to two hundred and fifty pages, full sheet music size, and contain a very large proportion of all the good sheet music ever published.

Sold by all dealers. Either book sent postpaid for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

$25 per day guaranteed using our WELL AUGER and Drills. Catalogue free. W. W. GILES, St. Louis, Mo.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS

—IN—

POPULAR SCIENCE.

EDITED BY DANA ESTES.

The growing demand in this country for books on popular science encourages the editor and publishers to issue this series of papers, compiled from the works of the most popular scientific writers.

25 cts. per Part; $2.50 for twelve consecutive Parts.

No. 1. STRANGE DISCOVERIES RESPECTING THE AURORA AND RECENT SOLAR RESEARCHES. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. THE CRANIAL AFFINITIES OF MAN AND THE APE. By Prof. Rudolph Virchow, of Berlin, author of Cellular Pathology. Fully illustrated.

No. 3. SPECTRUM ANALYSIS EXPLAINED, and its Uses to Science Illustrated. With a colored plate and several wood-cuts.

No. 4. SPECTRUM ANALYSIS DISCOVERIES, showing its Application in Microscopic Research, and to Discoveries of the Physical Constitution and Movements of the Heavenly Bodies. From the works of Schellen, Young, Roscoe, Lockyer, Huggins, and others.

No. 5. NEBULÆ, METEORIC SHOWERS, AND COMETS.

No. 6. UNCONSCIOUS ACTION OF THE BRAIN AND EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS. By Dr. Carpenter, author of The Microscope and its Revelations, Human Physiology, etc.

No. 7. THE GEOLOGY OF THE STARS. By Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of Sketches of Creation.

No. 8. ON YEAST. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 9. THE CIRCULATION OF THE WATERS ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH. By Prof. H. W. Dove.

No. 10. THE STONE AGE, PAST AND PRESENT. By Edward B. Tylor, author of Primitive Culture.

No. 11. THE RELATION BETWEEN MATTER AND FORCE. By Prof. John H. Tice, of St. Louis.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1874. WHOLE NO. 232.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THE MASSACHUSETTS State Constabulary has been abolished. Well, we haven't felt any less safe since.

MR. A. B. ALCOTT has a Club of young men, which he calls "Our Club," and which he treats to some of his charming Conversations.

PROFESSOR SWING has swung out of the Presbyterian Church. For his sake, we hope he will keep swinging until he lands in free religion.

THOMAS CARLYLE is in very poor health. It is difficult for us to conceive that the author of Sartor Resartus can ever be frail and feeble enough to die.

EVERYBODY in sympathy with the Free Religious Association, especially, seemed of the opinion that its meetings this year were very successful and satisfactory.

THE FIRST instalment of American Catholic pilgrims—a hundred strong—have followed the example of Captain Kidd. They have "sailed." We wish them a pleasant voyage and a good time.

AMONG other destinies to which Col. Higginson was born was that of presiding at a Free Religious Festival. We know of no one who could have done it more gracefully and happily than he did on Friday evening of Anniversary week.

"ONE species of red ant," says the London Spectator, "does no work for itself, but makes slaves of a black kind, which then do everything for their masters." It is astonishing how accurately these insects were able to ant-icipate the ways of men!

IT IS A pleasant piece of information, to which we are treated by Mr. Alcott, that Mr. Emerson keeps a diary. This doesn't make us cease to wish that the Concord sage may "live long and prosper;" but we do hope that his diary may sometime be published.

THE LABOR REFORM LEAGUE had some excellent meetings in Codman Hall, during Anniversary week. Good audiences and good speaking were the rule at these gatherings. We were unable to attend the Convention of the Eight Hour League; but we understand it was both successful and satisfactory.

THE serene and spiritual face of the venerable Mrs. Lucretia Mott was deeply missed by many from the meetings of the Free Religious Association, this year. Her very presence on these occasions has been always a benediction to those assembled; and her words have been full of gracious wisdom and instruction.

REV. EDWARD EVERETT HALE appeared and spoke at the F. R. A. Festival, in Parker Memorial Hall, last Friday evening, and seemed to feel as much at home as if he had been among his own Unitarians. Indeed, Mr. Hale has the feline facility of being able to come down on his feet wherever circumstances conspire to toss him.

MR. WILLIAM WARREN, the great actor, recently remarked to us that he finds an argument that God designed that actors should live, in the fact that he is able, in half an hour's time, to entirely recall any part which he ever played, though he had not been able to repeat a complete sentence of it previously for a dozen years, or more. Any one who has ever seen Mr. Warren play cannot doubt that he, at least, has a divine commission to walk the Stage.

"WHERE two or three are met together, there will I be in the midst of them," said Jesus. We think that the Spirit of Wisdom does not best like crowds and dressed-up occasions; but in the quiet and unpretending circle, where kind-hearted men and women meet simply and frankly, it drops down and brings the blessedness of pleasant and profitable conversation. There is not too much art in society, but not art enough—art carried so far as to forget itself, and become natural.

AS AN illustration of the way in which, in some of the old countries, capital is snatching from labor the privilege of securing a home, it may be stated that, as appears from a document just presented to Parliament, nearly one half of Scotland is owned by one hundred and six families, no one of these holding so little as 20,000 acres, and fifty-two of which own over 50,000 acres each. The estate of the Duke of Sutherland, for instance, embraces 1,176,343 acres; and his wife owns beside about 150,000 acres more.

THE NEW YORK Tribune furnishes one or two delicious specimens of the literary and artistic appreciativeness of European royalty. The late Austrian Emperor said gravely to Liszt, who had been playing before him: "I have heard Hirtz and Thalberg and Chopin; but I have never seen any one perspire like you." And when Landseer went to Portugal, the King sent for him in order to compliment the great painter of animals. "Ah, Sir Edwin," said the King, "I am glad to see you. I am so fond of beasts."

THE WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS were not behind all others in holding interesting meetings last week. What with their regular Annual Convention, their delightful Festival, and their Club Lunch on Saturday, they amply filled up the measure of their useful and agreeable Anniversary activities. On the whole, we are glad to believe that our struggling sisters get no little solid satisfaction and pleasure out of their industrious efforts to secure the rights which, if all had our mind, they would be put in possession of straightway.

"THE WORLD is becoming convinced," says the Jewish Times, "that the only religious creed which can be reconciled with the growing aspirations of reason and intellect, which presents no dogma that need be rejected by logic and by comparison of the world of ideals with the world of realities, is the Jewish religion." That is claiming a great deal, is it not? Christians match this claim with one precisely similar for their religion. The difficulty, in both cases, is to tell what is Judaism, and what Christianity. Is Judaism exactly what Moses and the Prophets taught, or is it what the Times represents? If the former, it most certainly will not be the religion of the future any more than will Christianity, if that is exactly what Christ taught. To our mind it appears plain that man is not going to be dependent alone upon the past for his religion, or upon any great dead or great living man's word; but that the future will develop a religion of its own, as the past has done, and as the present is doing.

A COPY of the first issue of a paper called The Prisoner's Friend is laid on our desk, and receives our warm welcome and cordial sympathy. It is published by Mr. John F. Augustus, No. 147 Tremont Street, Boston, at $2.00 a year. Mr. Augustus says, in his prospectus: "We shall aim to advance the cause of humanity in its broadest sense; to awaken a more active spirit to prevent crime, and more pity for the erring and the guilty, without ever losing sight of the best interests of the whole community." We believe that Mr. Augustus is somewhat aided, in publishing and editing his paper, by Mr. James H. Cotier. Both of these gentlemen have had special reason to sympathize with prisoners, and special opportunity to know their needs and understand their condition. We believe both of them to be deeply in earnest in doing whatsoever good they can in this particular direction, as well as in every other; and we heartily commend them and their enterprise to the sympathy and support of all true philanthropists.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Causes of the Increase of Crime.

BY HON. GEORGE F. TALBOT, OF PORTLAND, ME.

The Judiciary Committee of the Maine Legislature, during the last winter, heard arguments for and against the death penalty. The advocates of capital punishment exhibited a table of seventeen homicides in that State for the year 1873. The opponents of capital punishment admitted there had been a marked increase of crime, and especially of the crime of murder; and assigned, as a cause for this increase, the influence of the war. This opinion has been elsewhere generally expressed, and is doubtless a prevalent opinion. I propose to give a few reasons for the belief that I have, that it is not a correct opinion.

The war was a day of judgment, a crisis and test of character. Men went into the army who were cowards, shirks, thieves, and scoundrels—criminals of all grades down to the monster who would cut a comrade's throat to get five dollars out of his pocket—men who were the terror of the camp and the prison—the hindrance to all discipline—the weak point where the army gave way in the pinch of a battle. But such were bad men at home, and had either had their wicked career and repute, and escaped from or graduated at prisons and penitentiaries—or, lacking an opportunity, had avoided such a fate through family ties and the preoccupation of engrossing labor. The war showed their quality, and gave them a new theatre of action. For every feeble character, without decided principles of virtue, that, through evil association and strong temptation, became criminal, there was found a frivolous and aimless life that, under the stern discipline of duty, became obedient, faithful, self-respecting, and heroic. The war brought all the country, and especially the soldiers, to a great self-sacrifice, to the martyrdom of danger and death for patriotism, and to the preference of the common weal to self-indulgence and private gain.

If the effect of the war had been on the whole to deteriorate human society, and to sow thick the seeds of crime, we should expect to find the worst results in those sections of the country which were the principal theatre of the war. But the problem we have to solve is, not an increase of crime in Virginia, Tennessee, and Missouri, nearly every acre of which was fought over by the contending armies, but why Maine, isolated as far as possible from the actual strife, and that never heard the cannon of the invader, presents a record of seventeen homicides in a single year.

We should expect, too, if the war was the great demoralizer, to find the soldiers recruiting largely the ranks of the felons; but no such fact is observed. Our great crimes are committed by men who never learned indifference to life by witnessing the carnage of the battle fields. Treachery and bad faith are a considerable element of crimes, but courage, the virtue of the soldier, leads to disinterestedness and orderly obedience.

It must be remembered, too, that the crimes that have chiefly abounded have been those of fraud and violence, which have been provoked, not so much by hot blood and vindictive temper as by avarice and the lust of money, acting upon a mind capable of cunning and hardened to cruelty—temptations from which soldiers are more aloof than common men.

My own opinion has for some time been that the increase of crime in New England communities is attributable to two causes—one material, the other moral; one operating in the way of increasing temptation, the other in the way of weakening the power to resist it. I do not wish to undervalue the force of two factors that enter largely into the product of crime—intemperance and ignorance. These agencies have been too frequently discussed in ethical investigations to require to be here restated. Besides, since we have to consider an increase of crime in spite of an increased temperance and a more decidedly increased intellectual culture, it is evident we must look for causes strong enough to overcome the effects of both temperance and education.

What may be called the material cause of the increase of crime is connected with the great increase of luxury among those who have suddenly become rich, with an increase of the cost of living among those who have become relatively poor. Within the present century the population of New England was made up largely of people employed in agriculture, living in detached farm-houses, and only here and there aggregated in villages. Every man had his farm, his stock of cattle, and his tools and productions, and met his neighbors in the huge barn of a meeting-house on Sundays, and in town meetings, on terms of social equality; the only difference in their social condition being the advantage which health, industry, and temperance have over sickness, laziness, and intemperance. Nobody made plans for getting rich, nobody thought of selling his orchard for house lots, of speculating in timber lands, or of investing in stocks or bonds. Longfellow has fitly described these primitive rural communities:—

Thus dwelt together in love, these simple Acadian farmers, Dwelt in the love of God and of man. Alike were they free from Fear, that reigns with the tyrant, and envy, the vice of republics.
Neither locks had they to their doors, nor bars to their windows;
But their dwellings were open as day and the hearts of the owners;
There the richest was poor, and the poorest lived in abundance.

The first devil to enter this paradise was the speculating devil of 1835–36. He asked the farmers what they had to show for the toil of half a century. He told them how money was to be made buying farms in the neighborhood of cities by the acre, and selling them by the foot. On his advice farmers bonded their homesteads, removed to the cities and to the far West, betook themselves to trading, lumbering, manufacturing, and speculating. When all was settled, after the bankruptcy of 1837, there was a great shrinkage in the numbers of the land-owning yeomanry; a great excess in the numbers of the trading, artisan, and laboring classes. Just such disastrous good times befell the country about once in a decade afterwards, though with less marked social effects, until the coup de grâce was given to the old order of things, when the United States government made its irredeemable notes a legal tender, and in so doing doubled the money value of the necessaries of life, and rendered the conditions of living, for more than half the people, difficult and precarious. It has not been hard for the prudent and thrifty, for him who had capital or could produce any commodity, in the enhanced competition, to hold his way, and even to make money. Accordingly, never in our history, or in the history of any people, have there been such instances of the rapid accumulation of fortunes; but it has been under a condition in which the weak have gone to the wall, and the increasing ranks of the poor have found their situation, relatively to the greatly increased luxury of the thrifty classes, vastly deteriorated, and, relatively to the former status of their own class, absolutely deteriorated.

In a democracy where there are no orders of society, where the richest man is remembered as having been poor, where a universal education teaches every child that he is as good as every other child, and where all the prevalent political and religious maxims emphasize the doctrine of human equality, there is no barrier to the influence of the pride of the rich, or the envy of the poor. The luxury of dress, of dwelling, of furniture, and of equipage, everywhere ostentatiously and without delicacy exhibited by the men who have suddenly made fortunes, falls upon the raw, rude greediness and envy of those who have been compelled to forego such indulgences, with an effect difficult to exaggerate. If they were in another rank, their feeling would be that such fine things were not for them; they might even come like the English peasantry to be proud of the magnificence of their landlords; if they were uneducated, they might feel that such fortune was due to superior culture. But, conscious in many instances of an intelligence superior to that of more prosperous neighbors, how can they reconcile themselves to such a capricious distribution of the gains of life? The constant spectacle of the luxury of the rich indelicately thrust upon the sight stimulates the acquisitiveness of the poor. The new hardships of their situation suggest cunning and violence as methods of redress more certain than economy and industry; and the stories eagerly told, and invidiously credited, though perhaps mainly slanderous, of fortunes built on frauds gain for fraudulent practices a kind of respectability.

But this view finds in poverty the great incentive to crime, and loads upon the unfortunate the added reproach of wickedness. However it may wound our natural pity, and although it may contradict a theory which has the weighty authority of the most revered of human teachers, it seems to me hardly possible, in the face of obvious facts, to deny that a condition of poverty is not a condition most congenial to virtue. Early hardship and privation stimulate industry, and teach self-control; but continued reverses, the long-delayed reward of patient endurance, discourage, madden, and exasperate.

Still Nature always has her revenges, and there is a law by which evil done to others reacts upon the doer. The greater number of thrifty men find it difficult to shake off the habits of economy and temperance by which they were able to acquire wealth. But the children of the rich do not learn virtue from any such hard experiences. They never speak or think of labor, but as physical exercise. Self-indulgence becomes with them a necessity. They enter upon the freedom of maturity with appetites that have never known restraint, and begin the universal competition for the good things of life without giving to society that universal and sufficient bond for good behavior—the unwritten obligation of earning their livelihood. So from this class many fall from vices into crime, and so send their full quota to the dock, the prison, and the gallows.

How justly to equalize the conditions of the struggle of life, and so lessen the temptation to crime, is a question for social science and legislation to settle.

But in the midst of temptations, the will of man, controlled by motives acting upon his reason and conscience, can resolutely practise virtue. Among the cherished beliefs that operate powerfully in deterring men from evil conduct is the belief in the punishment of sin after death. A similar, and perhaps greater, influence is wrought by the fear of legal punishment, and a general repugnance to the shame and disgrace which the reputation of evil conduct fixes as a social penalty upon many kinds of crime. Neither of these two influences has been considerably modified. Legal punishments, though less severe, are on the whole more certain than they were a hundred years ago, and the public reproach of criminal conduct is quite as intense as it was then, and finds, through the universality of modern news-reporting, a far more emphatic expression.

But the belief in punishment after death has, within that time, suffered a great modification, and it is fair to find in this fact a moral cause for the increase of crime.

John Stuart Mill, in his Autobiography, gives sad expression to his disappointment in seeing "many of the opinions of his youth obtain general recognition, and many of the reforms in institutions for which he had through his life contended either effected, or in course of being so, with much less benefit to human well-being than he had formerly anticipated, because they had produced very little improvement in that which all the real amelioration in the lot of mankind depends on—their intellectual and moral state." He adds: "I am now convinced that no great improvements in the lot of mankind are possible, until a great change takes place in the fundamental constitution of their modes of thought. When the philosophic minds of the world can no longer believe its religion, or can only believe it with modifications amounting to an essential change of its character, a transitional period commences of weak convictions, paralyzed intellects, and growing laxity of principle, which cannot terminate until a renovation has been effected in the basis of their belief, leading to the evolution of some faith, whether religious or merely human, which they can really believe; and when things are in this state, all thinking or writing which does not tend to promote such a renovation is of very little value beyond the moment."

Since we have the authority of this sagacious general thinker for believing that the character of men, out of which flows conduct, either virtuous or vicious, is mainly shaped by the fundamental constitution of their modes of thought, that is by their religious ideas, it seems essential that we should look into the religious convictions of the men of our time for causes of their conduct. And if there has been any change observable, either for better or worse, in human society as it has fallen under our observation, it will be proper to consider what fundamental tenet of religion has suffered change at the same time.

Fifty years ago there was a general belief in hell. There were sceptics and disbelievers, as there have been through the whole Christian era, who rejected this, and other tenets of the popular theology; but the expectation that some permanent and terrible consequences of bad actions would follow and involve men beyond the grave was as universal as any of the common notions of mankind, and exerted upon conduct as much influence as such a motive was capable of.

We must not exaggerate the power of such a motive. History compels us to believe that the doctrine of a hell has been a feature of all the great world religions, unless we except the Hebrew religion during its primitive periods, and yet the dread of such a catastrophe has not been sufficient to restrain men from crimes, nor even to induce repentance in multitudes of men, who were sure that they might avoid so dreadful a doom upon such easy terms as repentance and a sacrificial expiation. The reason of this phenomenon is to be found in the fact that hell, as terrible an evil as it has been depicted, seems to the sensual and limited mind of men a remote and contingent evil. It is the vice of the savage and barbarous states that men will not provide against wants and sufferings, however intense, which are only prospective. They will not make preparations for food and shelter for the winter, which they know is approaching, nor in fruitful seasons for the years of scarcity which they and their fathers have experienced. They will do more to avoid a present inconvenience than they will to avoid extreme torture that will begin thirty years hence, and after they are dead. Future punishment is a motive power to which Newton's law of gravitation will nearly apply, and operates upon conduct inversely as the square of the distance in time to the event dreaded. As, however, men become thoughtful and forecasting through civilization, they begin to be influenced by remote and contingent considerations. They make plans about their burial, provisions for their heirs, and become willing to work and think with reference to posterity. The natural effect of increased civilization would be to make this motive more potent in controlling human conduct, instead of which we have to account for the fact that the belief itself in hell, a belief nearly coeval with human history, has everywhere suddenly given way. This is because the horrors which have gradually been added to it, to compensate for its feeble influence through remoteness and contingency, had made it absolutely insupportable to sensitive minds, and partly because within the last century there has arisen a school of religious teachers in this country and in Europe who have undertaken to eliminate from the creed of Christendom the dogma of post-mortuary punishment for sin.

Had these men reasons for their positive assurance upon this matter of the fortunes after death of the spirits of bad men; and is the change they have gradually wrought in the religious belief of the age altogether a salutary one? Before answering these questions, we must consider where man had, with such general consent, obtained his ideal of hell; whether it is a nightmare of superstition, or had its basis in human nature.

We have already indicated that the idea of hell forms a feature of all the great religions of mankind; for although Moses, with some national antipathy, repudiated the excessive other-worldliness of the Egyptians, among whom he had been brought up, and attempted to maintain a cultus based upon purely secular sanctions, the Hebrew people gradually introduced, from the religions of their neighbors, the doctrines of immortality, and of heaven and hell; and the Jews, even before the time of Jesus, with the exception of the sect of the Sadducees, had fully come to believe them. A belief so general must have had its grounds in natural human feeling. Let us see if we can discover it.

In all living creatures there is an instinct of life; a certain force with which they maintain existence against hostile forces that would assail and destroy it. In the lower animals, and for a long time in man, this was a mere instinct; though we observe in the most intelligent domestic animals, in the roused energy with which they resist their own slaughter, a certain distinct apprehension, as if their understanding or imagination gave them some vivid conception of either the pain or the calamity of death. When men became sufficiently cultivated to embody this natural instinct in thought, it would express itself in these propositions of belief: Death is painful above all pains, terrible above all terrors, the sum and completion of all evils. If reason were capable of interposing that death must be the cessation of all pain, and the end of all evil, as it was of good, the more clamorous instinct would insist that in some way there must be some sensation left after death itself, to feel and shudder at the darkness, coldness, and corruption of the grave. Here, then, we have the first element of a belief in hell, in one of the logical corollaries of the instinct of life.

But in this conception there is no morality, for death befalls the good and bad man alike; and from the instinct of life can be developed only a universal hell, making no distinction in character, involving in a common calamity all that die. Here comes in another force. Before or after he had acquired this intellectual conception of death, man had acquired, through his awakened moral sense, a cognition of sin.

He begins to accuse himself, and forebode punishment. Receiving some real or fancied injury from a fellow-man, he cherishes hatred against him, and in a moment of anger slays him. Henceforth he is possessed with the apprehension of retaliation and vengeance, from the hands of the family or friends of the slain man. If his victim be some feeble person, impotent to retaliate, then he dreads the vengeance of God. Some wild beast will devour him; sickness or famine will fall upon him; he will perish suddenly by cold, storm, or flood, and so retribution be accomplished. But going on, and committing crimes which he finds by actual trial neither men nor the gods punish, and having already attained the idea that death itself is a condition of indefinite evil, he will naturally carry forward his apprehension of punishment and vengeance, which his conscience will not permit him to forget, to his own condition after the fact of death. And so he will arrive at the notion of a retributive hell, which notion will be made up of these two distinct elements,—an apprehension of evil in death itself, growing out of the instinct of life, and an apprehension of punishment for conscious sin, growing out of what may be called the moral instinct of conscience.

If it be objected here that the idea of immortality was one to which man came at a late stage of his development, and is itself to be first accounted for, I answer that the idea of continued existence must be the earlier, simple, and obvious one, and the idea of the absolute cessation of existence is the later and complex one. Man knows life; he knows not death. It is beyond even the power of his perfected reason adequately to conceive of his personal non-existence, a condition wholly alien to all his experience; nor does he really ever get farther, in this complex problem of death, than to think of himself as observing and conscious of his own want of sensation, or as present in the minds of living persons, thinking of himself and of his death, or as existing in some new form or state, and conscious that his previous form or state had changed or ceased. But it is evident that all these ideas, in which we attempt to shape the condition of death to ourselves, are ideas of life, and not of death; and so far from being correct representations of what death must be according to the requirements of reason, they are the representations of the very opposite conditions. As it is, then, probable that living men can never anticipate in their thought the actual reality of a condition wholly without the range of their experience, it is fairly inferable that the belief in continuous existence was the primitive belief, and the belief in absolute death the later, more complex one, and the one which the pure and cultivated reason can but inadequately grasp. So we should expect to find anticipations of immortality among the rudest instincts of mankind. More than that, if any of the lower animals think, or we can translate any of their instincts into thought, it is apparent that they can have no idea of anything but their own continuous life; their apprehension of death being, like ours, an apprehension of themselves consciously suffering the evil of death.

That the notion of hell has been derived in the manner here indicated is evidenced from the influence of national character in modifying such a belief. The Greek had a strong zest of life; he rejoiced in the beauty and strength of his body, and the delights of a sensuous existence. His instinct of life was strong, his moral discriminations were not keen. He broke easily over the restraints of an ideal virtue in the pursuit of pleasure. The gods he worshipped furnished him no high standard of continence, benevolence, or justice. Conscience in him was a secondary power. Hence we find among the Greeks a conception of hell to which the apprehension of punishment for wrong-doing contributed almost nothing, and to which the instinct of life contributed almost everything. It is a great evil to be dead. Even the heroes deplore their lost human existence, and only half solace themselves for the loss of the light and joy of life by feeble pleasures and languid employments that scarce make their condition more desirable than that of common and wicked men. Achilles, by his birth half-divine, and representing to the Greek thought the highest ideal of mortal virtue, might well have claimed the highest sphere in their Elysium. To such virtue and divine favor, any of the Christian ages would have assigned the most ecstatic heaven. But hear how Achilles, as reported by Homer, describes the happy immortality to which the gods have elevated him:—

> "'Talk not of reigning in this dolorous gloom,
> Nor think vain words,' he cried, 'can ease my doom.
> Rather I choose laboriously to bear
> A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air,
> A slave to some poor hind that toils for bread,
> Than reign the sceptred monarch of the dead.'"

The Persians and the Egyptians had hells in which the moral element was predominant. There was a great judgment with a searching examination into character, a rigid discrimination between the good and the evil—alluring rewards for the former, and terrible and perpetual punishments for the latter. What chiefly characterized the speculative beliefs of those races was a present conception of a future life, that cast its lurid gloom over the joy and cheerfulness of the earthly life.

Among the Chinese and Indians, the instinct of life seems feebler than among other races, as indicated by their contempt of death, and the frequency of suicides; and the moral sense, too, being comparatively feeble, there results a conception of hell as near annihilation as the human mind is capable of.

We are now prepared to consider the question whether the absolute denial of hell can be asserted upon rational grounds. We have shown that it has its basis in a universal and natural instinct. But the instincts are not necessarily true, and it is their very office and nature to exaggerate. We feel quite sure that the instinct of life exaggerates the calamity of death, which, instead of being the terrible thing apprehended by natural feeling, has about it no quality to affect our choice one way or another. The dead can have no regret that they are dead, nor wish to be alive any more than the soundly-sleeping man wishes to be awake. Men come into the world with a cry expressive of apprehension and terror at the change, full more positive and real than that with which they go out. If pleasurable sensations were the summum bonum, there is probably but a small fraction of an ordinary human life so decisively satisfactory that a man whose judgment was not disturbed by the instinct of life would wisely prefer life to death. The instinct does its office, when it sufficiently guards the integrity of existence; and if wise men would always choose life from reason, life would not have been defended by a dominant feeling, with which reason combats in vain.

May it not be that the moral instinct of conscience, too, exaggerates, and that sin is not, in itself or the mind of God, what it is to the self-accusing consciousness of man. If we conceive of an omniscient God, the author of man's existence, appointing the elements that went into his nature, it is difficult to conceive of him as either surprised or angry at man's sin. We may conceive of a being impatient and disappointed, because the materials upon which he is working did not fairly represent the ideal he had in his mind. But such impatience and disappointment would be accepted as evidence of lack of skill, and lack of a considerate temper on the part of the worker. So, though the apprehension of hell has been a nearly universal human apprehension, it does not follow that it is a reality, either in the nature of things or the purposes of God. And when the Universalists assert that the perpetual punishment, or the complete destruction, of evil beings is incompatible with the love and justice of a wise and good God, they certainly have reason for the assertion.

But the only way to correct the exaggerations of the instincts, natural and moral, is by the use of the reason, observing the order and laws of things in the natural world; and, finding the idea of a hell among our natural instincts, we can only modify and supplant it by conclusions derived from observation of the divine order of the world.

Suffering and pain are such universal elements that we are compelled to accept them as the natural condition of man's earthly life. Poetry has attempted to attribute them as accidents accompanying and resulting from a great primitive sin and fall. Milton sings that when—

> "Her rash hand, in evil hour,
> Forth reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she eat,
> Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat,
> Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
> That all was lost."

Doubtless there is much evil and suffering flowing from conditions of existence outside of man's immediate will and choice, which are caused by man's breach of the divine order. There are climatic conditions due to his bad husbandry of the planet on which he lives. There are destructive diseases which had their origin in uncleanly practices, or in the fetid effluvia of battle fields; and ignorant or reckless defiance of heat, frost, wind, sea, and the rage of noxious animals have occasioned a vast amount of pain, mutilation, and premature death to the human race. But beyond the utmost scope of man's direct or indirect volition, the traces of evil in Nature are too palpable to be overlooked. The world was full of suffering and violence before man sinned, and before man appeared upon it. The monumental rocks, whose stratified tablets preserve the history of the primeval habits of living creatures, tell us in fossil claw and fang of

> "The dragons of the prime,
> That tore each other in their slime."

Now as we can have no idea of God but of a being that either contrives or controls the gradual development of the creation, or, at the very least, as the being from whom proceed whatever forces in Nature are remedial and progressive, and as we find these cruelties and punishments directly contributing to a better and more intelligent succession of living forms up to man, and as we cannot deny that history discloses, during the career of man, a painful destruction of the worse and weaker, as a condition of the perpetuation of the stronger and better types,—how can we fail to conclude that God is using the agency of suffering and punishment to perfect his creation. As the other worlds must have gone through the same physical catastrophes as ours, it is a fair inference that they must have experienced the same moral catastrophes as ours. If, then, we find God using pain and punishment as instruments for the accomplishment of his purposes here and now, it does not seem unreasonable to suppose he will use the same agencies hereafter and beyond. The wonderful discoveries made through the spectroscope, of the construction of the sun, the stars, and the remote nebulæ, disclose the substantial uniformity of the universe. Far off in the outlying regions of space, which only the telescope brings to our view, we come upon the great Creator at work at his world-building, but using the same familiar materials of gases and metals of which our earth is constituted, and moulding and composting them by the same chemical and mechanical laws the action of which we observe here. Is it not, then, a rational conclusion that methods of discipline in use in that portion of space and time open to our intelligent inspection are the divine methods in all space and throughout all time? Here, then, we find another road leading as directly to hell, through the region of rational inquiry, as the other one did through the circle of natural instinct.

But here the result must be carefully considered, and the question answered whether or not the hell corresponding to a rational view of the Divine Providence, in the order and development of creation, is the merciless, perpetual, and purely vindictive hell of Orthodox theology. All suffering that we see in Nature, although we may call it eternal in the sense that it is a permanent arrangement of the Divine Providence, is transient in its relation to the sensitiveness of individual creatures. "The dragons of the prime that tore each other in their slime" had the privilege of dying, and so ending their suffering; and those terrible instruments whose fossil forms the rocks preserved, if they were effective in inflicting suffering, were more effective in accomplishing death. All suffering tends to death, and is a progress towards it; and but for this avenue of escape from pain provided for sentient creatures, the aspect of Nature would be terrible to contemplate; since no amount of mere passive happiness, which is for the most part a mere absence of pain, can compensate for the positive suffering of a single individual for single moments. So that, on the whole, the lesson which Nature teaches is the cessation and cancellation of those existences which take directions inconsistent with the general order.

There is still another sphere of thought in which exploration should be made for the prevalent notion of hell. I mean the sphere of spiritual experience. All the elevated and disinterested sentiments of the human soul are ennobling, and minister to a delicate and pure delight. To love is to experience a subtle joy; to confer benefits, to prefer another to one's self, to sacrifice one's ease, gain, pleasures for others, to devote one's self for one's family or country, for a high sense of duty, for patriotism, for truth, or virtue, —brings to the spirit a compensation for all losses, a sense of power over all calamity or fate, a feeling of triumph over all depression, weakness, and hostility, that has nerved men to endure the greatest sufferings, and to welcome death itself, though coming in the form of flame and torture, as a glory and reward. On the other hand, all base and evil feelings are painful to the sensitive spirit. Hatred, revenge, envy, ambition, are depressing and distressing experiences. It might have been foreseen that a poetic imagination would have projected these experiences upon the outward world, and so shaped in the belief of man a corresponding condition, state, or sphere of good and evil respectively. As nothing in the earthly experience would correspond to these ideas, what could have been more natural than to carry them forward to a future life, already fully shaped in a natural faith, and in that future life to anticipate their full realization. Here, then, too, we arrive at the belief in hell through the workings of a spiritual experience.

But this is a result that must be corrected by our rational thought; for as the natural instinct of conscience exaggerates the penalties of conscious sin, so the repugnance to evil of the soul dwelling in the delight of rectitude and virtue paints in lurid colors the opposite state of wickedness and disobedience. The temperate, chaste, and upright man looks upon intemperance, debauchery, and fraud with a shudder; but the man who is in the practice of those evils regards them with delight, and the man who is in the love of them, but is restrained by prudence or conscience from their commission, looks upon them with tolerance, and envies the satisfactions he imagines them to afford. In this connection it may be remarked that the vivid and terrible language in which hell is described in our Scriptures, and in all Scriptures, is due to the fact that it is hell as considered from the point of view of the good and holy man, and so is full of the repulsiveness which evil has only to a few rare and pure souls. And doubtless we should more correctly interpret those Scripture delineations if we should think of hell as a condition of vague and indefinite evil, rather than, taking the Scriptural interpretations in a literal and dogmatic import, try to fill out the features of a deplorable and terrible fate; as if there were something in the physical conditions of the universe to correspond to shapes and pictures never intended to be literal, but fitly though vaguely to express the instinctive dread of evil in the human conscience, and the cultivated repugnance to evil in the soul that had acquired the love and habit of virtue. It is only here that we are prepared to answer the question some time ago proposed. Had the modern mild school of theologians reasons for an absolute denial of punishment to evil-doing after death, and was the change they have gradually wrought in the religious belief of the times a wholly salutary one?

Some modification of a tenet that had become abhorrent to the refined feelings and cultivated reason of mankind was undoubtedly necessary. As mankind had become civilized, they had become forecasting, and more and more influenced by considerations of a future life. The belief that there yawned immediately beneath the world a chasm into which the great majority of men were constantly falling and liable to fall without the slightest premonition, a chasm filled with an unquenchable fire in which the sensitive bodies of men, kept alive and kept sensitive by some divine alchemy, were tortured perpetually, was a belief to sadden life to despair. It was impossible to reconcile such a scheme of Providence with any human idea of a divine love; and the trivial and capricious modes by which such a terrible fate might be avoided—such as professing a creed, professing faith in a mediator, uttering a prayer of genuine terror or cry for mercy at the last moment of probation,—modes in which no change of character or desert was involved, only made the injustice and cruelty of God seem more apparent. But on the other hand the indifference with which the great multitude of wicked and frivolous men accommodated themselves to this terrible belief is amazing. So far as they shaped to their minds any conception of a future life, it was of a state made solemn by such a terrible chance of calamity; and yet it neither saddened their lives nor seriously retarded the eagerness with which they pursued courses of known evil.

The sensitive consciences of good men needed relief. They had arrived at a stage of culture when, in the language of Jesus, it was fit they should understand the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. They should have been told there is no hell in the thought and plan of God. There is a hell as a fact of human experience. It is terrible only from the point of view of an ideal holiness. It is punitory and remedial, and its office is to make evil repulsive, and drive it to repentance. It is only persistent and chosen evil that makes it perpetual. Its everlastingness is only in relation to a permanent correspondence between voluntary and chosen sin and suffering. There is always a way out of it by repentance; and that which is not salvable, if there be such an element of human character, is by the operation of the divine law destroyed. Until men have arrived at that stage of culture to make such a hell more abhorrent than any physical torture, it matters little if they are left with the grosser and stronger apprehension. It seems as if it would have been better to have left this belief to take on such modifications as culture and a deeper religious experience would have inevitably brought to it. But the actual process of modification was more revolutionary, and so perhaps more dangerous. It is not perhaps saying too much of the early Universalists to affirm that they were not men of the broadest culture, of the profoundest religious experience, or of the deepest philosophic insight. They rejected the belief in hell on grounds of mere verbal interpretation. Modern Protestantism, vindicating itself upon texts, had brought the most intelligent part of mankind to regard the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures as the divine statute book, to the literal sense of which both thought and conduct were amenable. The Universalists preëminently accepted and exaggerated this bibliolatry. Paul had become to be esteemed as the highest exponent of Christianity; and in some of his most presumptuous attempts to settle upon dialectic grounds the whole scheme of God's relations with his creatures, they seized upon certain propositions which being arranged as premises, the conclusion of universal salvation became more logical than that of the damnation of the wicked. Over this discovery they were too sanguine, and too little reticent; for the premises themselves had too little value and validity. But they went through the land with their formula: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," and virtually overthrew the popular belief in hell,—for it is to be considered not only that this dogma of universal salvation is a fundamental article of faith of several liberal sects, but that the old power of the "terrors of the Lord" as an instrument of propagandism is greatly weakened, if not virtually destroyed, among those sects that still keep the article of damnation in their creed.

It often happens that both the best and worst effects of a new doctrine are most distinctly seen outside of the religious body that specially profess that doctrine. Thus in this case we see the best effects of the teachings of the Universalists in the gradual modification of the grossness and savagery of the old Orthodox beliefs, and their worst effect in the manifest lessening of restraint to wickedness and crime on the part of men that acknowledge themselves to be irreligious.

Shall we go back to the creed of the last century? Shall we reinstate the hell, whose fierce flames have cooled to a comfortable warmth, in all its ancient fierceness and terror? This is neither possible nor desirable. The world has stolen a march, broken into the Divine Arcana, and vulgarized their secret intelligence. It has got access again to the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and its eyes are open, prematurely, to see as gods. A man may use a faith or a fear to control his personal conduct; he cannot use it to control the conduct of another man against any general intelligent denial and protest. Mr. Talmage may corner a man in his pew, and threaten him with hell fire. He will not have the man wholly at advantage with such a weapon, if he can look out the window across the street and almost hear the accents of Dr. Chapin, in a devout and reverent spirit, and with a strong assurance, asserting the absolute love of God and the forgiveness of sin. The weekly assemblage of a half-dozen congregations, embracing the élite of the intelligence, virtue, and practical religion of a great city, is a fetter upon the tongue of our fervid Orthodox divine. What he has on his conscience to say about hell he would prefer to say in the basement of his meeting-house, in the privacy of a few kindred spirits,—as a Catholic in England during the last century would go to some secret chamber to perform his Mass, and as a Druid, after England had embraced Christianity, would betake himself to a gloomy forest to perform his incantations.

Abandoning thus as impracticable the attempt to reinstate any superstitious fears in the minds of evil-disposed men as a means of restraining them from crimes, I conclude the only thing to do is to strengthen secular sanctions which must take the place of the enfeebled or destroyed religious sanctions. The time seems inopportune, when the power of a great motive operating upon the conscience has been greatly weakened or destroyed, to offer absolute impunity to vice, and to make any the less certain or less severe those secular punishments which no speculative conjectures can make less actual or grievous to be borne.

[Specially Reported for THE INDEX.]

SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

BY S. H. MORSE.

The seventh annual meeting of the Free Religious Association was held in Horticultural Hall, Thursday evening, May 28th, and on Friday morning and afternoon of May 29th.

The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read, and officers were elected for the ensuing year. The verbal amendments of the constitution of the Association, advertised in THE INDEX, were proposed by the Executive Committee and accepted by a unanimous vote.

Rev. Rowland Connor, of Florence, Mass., responded to an invitation to give some account of the establishment at Florence of the Free Congregational Society, of which he is the resident minister. Mr. Connor's report was exceedingly interesting to the large majority of those present, to whom the growth and prosperity of such a society outside the limits of Boston was something hardly expected. In a comparatively small village, by the untiring energy of a few people at the beginning, a strong free society had been gathered—a society composed of men and women schooled in respect and toleration for every shade of honest opinion or conviction. They had learned to welcome all sides of every question. Their custom had been to invite to their platform men and women representing all the religious sects, and those of no sect. The topics discussed covered the wide range of religion, politics, and morals—philosophy, poetry, and science. They embraced whatever was of import to the every-day life of the people. It was the habit of the society to expect that any one who desired would feel at liberty to question or dissent from the speaker, after the discourse had concluded. Mr. Connor gave some account of the new hall the society had recently erected —Cosmian Hall. On the desk, with a copy of the Bible, was Mr. Conway's Sacred Anthology, from which Scripture lessons could be read, or any one was at liberty to bring his own book to read from. The society was some nineteen years old. It had already accomplished a good work, but looked forward to still greater achievements.

Rabbi S. H. Sonneschein, of St. Louis, was next introduced, and spoke with a great deal of enthusiasm of the new departure of the Jews, of their coming forward to take their place with all other people in the great progressive march of the world. When he thought of what the world had achieved, he was amazed that so much had been done. But when he turned to the wonderful future, and contemplated even some portion of what remained for the welfare and happiness of the children of men, all that had been won in the past, in comparison, dwindled into insignificance. His speech was warmly received and much applauded.

The Treasurer reported that the receipts of the Association for the past year were $2,557.02, and the disbursements $2,016.77; leaving $540.25 balance in the treasury.

The President, Mr. Frothingham, opened the morning session of May 29 with a carefully prepared statement of the purposes of the Association. He remarked that he had done a similar thing year after year, and he or some one else would probably do the same for years to come, so difficult did it seem to be for the public generally to understand the position the Association had assumed. Its purpose was to remove boundaries, break down sectarian walls, and unite mankind as fellow-men, still holding their differences, following each his own light, but all striving for truth. To-day there is a most costly rivalry of churches. Societies devote most of their energies to getting up and keeping up the finest establishment, with elegant church, highest salary for clergyman, best paid choir, etc. If all this outlay were turned to the simple use of truth-seeking and the practice of it, what an advantage! President White, of Cornell, had recently stated that there were three hundred and sixty sectarian colleges in the United States. So many starveling colleges run simply to foster sectarian pride! How much better would they be, if in each State consolidated into one noble State institution devoted to the higher education! Mr. Frothingham looked forward to a time when all people would recognize that all things are the outgrowth of the human mind—all institutions, all literature; and all parties would unite in a peaceful effort to develop that, and so secure the highest results human nature was capable of. He spoke of the growth observable in literature, of the superiority of English literature, in breadth and range of topics, to the Hebrew. It was the natural development and maturity of the human mind. It was all the natural expression of the race. Inspiration belonged to all or to none. The same was true in regard to persons. Jesus was no miracle. He would not dispute as to his character. Represent him as standing at whatever height, still he was but a product of this marvellous human nature. It was the office of Free Religion to accept this human nature and strive to produce the best results. Its motto was, "Allow your fellow-man to believe as he must, and do you believe as you must."

Mr. Frothingham then said the Association illustrated its position by introducing upon its platform three representative men, holding dissimilar views, yet all working together in perfect accord. They were divided as follows: one was Christian, one was extra-Christian, and one was anti-Christian. He introduced Rev. Mr. Calthrop, of Syracuse, who would interpret Free Religion from the Christian standpoint.

Mr. Calthrop, on taking the stand, said he regarded the Free Religious platform as simply an opportunity. It was not Christian; he would not have it so, if he could; he would not so insult those who were reared under the helps and influences of other religions. It was not extra-Christian, nor was it anti-Christian. But it was sacred ground for all honest differences, a place for the comparison of views and convictions. He felt free to speak his own thought, and was free from disturbing prejudices, and could listen to others.

We live, he said, by affirmation, not denial. The universe is a reality. To account for it, you must recognize a power that can give you all that is, something capable of evolving all. Modern scientific thought takes up the old affirmation and explains the reality—the phenomenon of the reality, and of the reality of growth. Stars grow, galaxies grow, strata grow, plants, animals, men grow. Two things science knew: a real universe, and real people inside the universe, acted on and developed by it. There would be no eye but for the light of the sun. So no justice in man but for an outside justice that created and developed it. There is the universal history acting upon man, and the special history. The special is not to be lost in the universal, but each special is the guide of some race or people in its interpretation of the universal. We cannot escape from our special surroundings. They have created for us and transmitted in our blood a legacy we must and do accept, whether we know it or not. Every race in its growth flowers into great representative souls, prophetic men, forecasting the future of that race. If you cut off every such head, you wipe out your civilization. We of this day inherit Christian surroundings and a Christian tradition. We have to accept this inheritance; and, to accomplish our work of progress and secure a natural and perfect growth, we must not wrench ourselves out of this reality. Christianity was a great surrounding life, a fact not to be dodged. We must not waste our force upon a criticism of its errors and short-comings, but strive as well to see its good and bright side. Free Religionists seldom criticise each other, but some do not hesitate to pitch into all the limitations of other creeds. In his judgment, Free Religion ought not to mean tender relations with all religions except Christianity, but rather sympathizing relations with every effort after the infinite under heaven.

Mr. Frothingham then introduced Mr. F. E. Abbot.

Mr. Abbot said that he came to the discussion with a consciousness that he should, in what he might say, tread upon many sacred associations, and seem like one who ruthlessly attacked what so many believed to be good and true. But he had no alternative, if he remained true to his own convictions. He did not desire to wound the feelings of any, but he felt his obligations to truth as he saw it to be superior to all other claims.

The first question to ask is, "What is Christianity, and who shall define it?" Shall we go to the heretics of Christendom for definitions of Christianity? Or shall we take the record of the Christian Church —the Church by its universal consensus? For one, he did not venture to make a definition. He took what he found. He would abide by the record. He accepted all the good; was ready to recognize and applaud it. But there was the other side, and he could not overlook that, because it was not an error or evil now and then appearing, but a permanent and persistent force antagonistic to the freedom and progress of mankind. Taken as a whole, the net influence of Christianity has been to repress and not develop the freedom of the mind. Its mission is not a quest for truth and greater light, but it is a voice of authority seeking to seal up investigation and enslave. It was rebellion against this spirit that gave birth to Protestantism. Every Protestant, to the degree that he protests against authority, is anti-Christian. Whoever resolves to live by freedom is anti-Christian. The whole history of Christian institutions reveals this hatred of and contempt for freedom of thought. Hence he had no choice, believing as he did in the necessity of human freedom, as inseparable from human growth and all noble attainment, but to take the anti-Christian stand. Christianity as defined by the Universal Christian Church was an affirmation of the depravity of human nature, of the fall of man, the wrath of God, and the salvation by Christ alone,—doctrines which so set at defiance all rational thought and regard for fact, no one, it seemed to him, fully emancipated from their sway, could help assuming an attitude of antagonism to them. He was for reason, for freedom, unlimited by Church or State. He said: "I must be free to act, to speak, to be!" "Anti-Christianity is anti-slavery—anti-slavery is pro-freedom."

At the conclusion of Mr. Abbot's remarks, Mr. Higginson was introduced.

He thought the dispute between the Christian and anti-Christian was concerning the cradle in which both were born. What to do with this cradle? Mr. Calthrop wanted to stay in the cradle. Mr. Abbot wanted to smash it. He proposed to come to the defence of the cradle. It was an excellent institution. None of us would have got on far without it, but none of us should wish to stay in it always. But let all act according to their needs. While it served him no longer, it might still be serving some one else. Hence he would not destroy it, but let it serve out its appointed time. But Mr. Calthrop did not tell us where obligation to Christianity ended, and where obligation to self began. There was a loyalty to self, which no other loyalty could set aside. He traced some of the evils that result from setting aside one's own conviction, or from a neglect to form any opinion at all, in deference to outside prevailing sentiment. Self-reliance was the achievement to be aimed at. What he believed in was that all who felt they had outgrown Christianity, and found it no longer satisfying, should take their stand outside of it, and seek their food elsewhere as well. Their inheritance was not one religion, but to them belonged all the great religions, which would contribute and help in their education. He was not Christian, nor anti-Christian, but extra-Christian. He believed that Christianity had done good service in the past, and that its usefulness for large classes had not been spent. He instanced the Roman Catholic Church. It had not been altogether an evil by any means. If it had stood for slavery, it had also stood for freedom. It was yet a power for good, and here in this country a large part of the population are still greatly indebted to it for their discipline and growth. While it was capable of any good, it would survive, and to that good he was not opposed.

In the afternoon, Dr. C. A. Bartol read a discourse full of interest and pertinent suggestion on "Signs of the Times." The first sign mentioned was "The Unitarian Year Book." From its list of ministers a name was displaced because the man who bore it did not call himself a Christian. Channing preached Christianity, but he never heard him call himself a Christian. The responsibility lay not with the Unitarian scribe, or Executive Board, or any denominational organ. These represent a now triumphant sectarian tendency, whose clash with free-thinking will raise in the ranks a new storm. The Year Book is spoiled, and he saw not how any freeman could be content with his name upon its pages. He congratulated Mr. Potter on his removal. Christian? It must be wide as the world and great as the soul, and swallow all, or be swallowed itself.

The next sign was the Brooklyn Council. If Mr. Potter stands for liberty, Mr. Beecher stands for secrecy. He says to Orthodoxy and to the American community, "This is my affair and Plymouth Church affair; you are a huge Paul Pry, and I will have none of you. I retreat from your impertinent scrutiny on my reserved rights. There is no ground for the stories about me, and I decline to answer any of them in detail." Jesus says the closet whisper shall have a house-top proclamation. It is not true of all whispers. God has made this dome of the head closed as well as opened by this door of the mouth. Let your bosom be a dead wall to the malignant tattler and the insolent spy. But the privilege of privacy has limits. Humanity is a nervous net work; absolute individuality there is none; no claim to withdraw from notice conduct society is injured by, no superiority to accusation and suspicion. Though the law hold a man innocent till he is proved guilty, denial must not be coupled with refusal to examine. The standard of morals cannot be lowered for any man's convenience. The honest merchant shows his books. John Bunyan defied "any woman on earth, in heaven, or hell, to appear against him." Dr. Bartol continued: "A sincere love for the great Brooklyn preacher, and cordial good-will to his church, prompt these remarks." Nothing confessed can be so bad as anything covered. Because Beecher belongs to the nation it is jealous of his fame. When mistrust is sapping the foundations of human honor and corrupting the church, a smoothing-plane is not the tool required. A synod of seventy churches from all parts of the land, holy and hoary-headed ornaments of Orthodoxy, summoned to an inquiry so grave, at great expense of time and money, and missing of the shepherds by the devoted flocks, meet and part without touching the question in debate. No Orthodoxy, no Liberality, no Christianity, can stand such a strain. No fiasco of a dramatic performance was ever more complete. What is it a sign of but decadent conscience in the heart of religion, when the moral is thus postponed to the ecclesiastical?

The next sign was Free Religion represented in THE INDEX. Springing like a fresh shoot from the decaying trunk or wind-wafted seed of the Radical, as that perhaps from the Dial planted forty years ago, the editor makes a conscience of science. Pilate's question, "What is truth?" still disintegrates every system, dissolves institutions, and turns the solid globe into passing smoke before the searching soul. This terrible solvent we must have of spiritual chemistry. We rejoice in sincerity more than in any discovery. The worst of party is compromise, that sacrifice of conviction to uniform and drill, which is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. I cannot flatter the radical literature with the registry of any great accomplishment. The new theology has not arisen yet out of the "fifty affirmations," "impeachments," "liberal leagues," or excluding God and Christ from the Constitution; but how much rubbish of error has been removed that occupied the room where the precious temple should stand! Human nature is not left out. Science wants all the facts inward or outward to run up into general laws. There is a noble honesty in this position worthy of all praise; a sublimity in the abnegation of a heaven to dwell in, or a God to adore, that cannot be proved to the yearning, hoping mind. But let us have not only the courage of our opinions, but some breadth in the opinions. It is the poetry that atones for the boldness in the book of Job. Let us have beauty beyond the bald, bare prose of logic and life.

Politics was a sign, especially what is called Butlerism. We spend our breath on the man. He is but a symbol. We talk of the sovereign people to whom we will appeal. Is it an honest nation? It rejoices in the government of the majority, without thinking of a possible majority of rascals and thieves. Intelligent men in business and professional life refuse to do their civil duty, and call politics a pool they will not dirty their hands in. Congress and the Legislatures represent their constituents. What is the cause? We have plenty of religion in this country, such as it is. Why is the common conscience so blunt? General guilt fears the whole brood of devils. I hail the Radicalism and the Free Religion which is not a sentimental spasm of a few elect at a camp-meeting, or in an ill-ventilated vestry, but a revival of the body politic.

Dr. Bartol spoke of Spiritualism as a sign. Counting its millions it is not likely to be disposed of by ridicule. Every establishment is a miniature of truth and error. Spiritualism is evolution and reaction from Orthodoxy. But he who listens for the echo misses the aim, though it be a report from Paradise. The garden is there, no doubt; but Divine Wisdom puts blindness on our vision to keep us to the load. Slight not your stint. That our duty may be fully done, it is best those gates be partly closed.

Dr. Bartol spoke, in conclusion, of Socialism as represented by Mrs. Woodhull. He was told some doubted if she should be allowed to speak. But marriage must be discussed. Is it sensitive, then it is sore. Its importance only increases the desire to probe any evil. Its unquestionably sincere assailant, Mrs. Woodhull, has offered no working plan, only a wild scream for freedom, and vague doctrine of solution in its stead. Meantime, let any mischief it covers be endured for its sake, and that of all it involves.

The evening festival at the Parker Memorial rooms was largely attended, and proved to be, as was true the year before, a most fitting and enjoyable termination of the day.

AN ARTICLE on Unitarianism in the Christian Union closes as follows: "Still another reason for its comparative failure is its lack of intellectual consistency and courage. It is logically committed to rationalism. When it put reason above Scripture, by making it the judge of what is revelation and what is true, it virtually made Christianity one religion of many, even though the best of all; and when it denied the proper divinity of Christ, it virtually reduced him to the level of humanity, however it may have exalted him in moral qualities and character. The common sense of Christendom has always looked upon its attempts to hold a half-way position between Orthodoxy and Rationalism as illogical and cowardly, and thousands have refused to go its one mile because it has always lacked the courage to go the two its principles require. So, while Orthodoxy takes care of its own, the unchurched masses neither heed its invitations nor recognize its essential accord with their own views. It is just far enough away from the evangelical churches to be cut off from their fellowship and sympathy, but is not far enough removed to attract the unchurched masses to its standard."

EARLY LAST FALL a protracted meeting was held at Northville by Revs. Mr. Chapin and Mrs. Dawson. During this meeting Mrs. Dawson related a story of a certain family composed of father, mother, and an only child. She stated that they attended a protracted meeting, and resisted all appeals to reverse their conduct in life and become followers of the precepts of Holy Writ. The mother soon after became a raving maniac, and died in that condition. Mrs. Dawson said that there might and probably would be a similar case at that place, but mentioned no names. A Mrs. George Taylor, of Northville, being present, took these words as a direct application to herself and family, there being only three in the family. The result was that she became insane, and was sent to an asylum in Utica, and there died. Her remains were brought home and deposited in the burying ground at Northville. She was an unusually robust young woman, sound of mind, and in the best of health until after hearing that story. As to the cause of her death, we leave our readers to decide.—Northeast Sun.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE NEGRO BURYING-GROUND.

BY WILLIAM C. GANNETT.

'Mid the sunny flat of the cotton-field
Lies an acre of forest-tangle still,—
A cloister dim where the gray moss waves,
And the live-oaks lock their arms at will.

Here in the shadows the slaves would hide
As they dropped the hoe at death's release;
And leave no sign but a sinking mound
To show where they passed on their way to peace.

This was the Gate—there was none but this—
To a Happy Land where men were men;
The dusky fugitives, one by one,
Stole in from the bruise of the prison-pen,—

When, lo! in the distance boomed the guns,
The bruise was over and "Massa" had fled!
But Death is a "Massa" that never flees;
To the oaks they still bore forth the dead.

'Twas at set of sun; a tattered troop
Of the children circled an open grave,
Chanting an anthem rich to them
As ever pealed in cathedral-nave,—

The A, B, C, that the lips below
Had learnt, at their side, in the school to shout;
Over and over they sung it low,
Crooning a mystic meaning out.

Just A, B, C, D, E, F, G,
Down solemn alphabets they swept;
The oaks leaned close, the moss swung low;
What strange new sound among them crept!

The holiest hymn that the children knew!
It was dreams made real and heaven made near;
It was light, and liberty, and joy,
And "white-folks'-sense," and God right here!

Over and over; they dimly felt
This was the charm could make black white,
This was the secret of "Massa's" pride,
And this, unknown, made the negro-night.

What could they sing of sweeter cheer
To speed on her unseen way the friend?
The children were facing the mystery Death
With the deepest prayer that their hearts could send.

Children still, and the mysteries last!
We are but comrades with them there,
Stammering over a meaning vast,
Crooning our guesses of how and where.

But the singers were right with their A, B, C;
In our stammering guess so much we say!
And the children were happy,— and so are we;
Though we miss at the spelling, He knows what we pray.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 30.

Mary Rhoades, $3; W. H. Coffin, $3; Geo. J. Adams, $3; Simeon Nixon, $8.50; T. W. Robbins, 75 cents; A. Klebe, 75 cents; David Thom, 50 cents; T. Lees, $1.35; Joseph Marsh $1; Geo. Allen, 90 cents; B. S. Price, $1; J. G. Dodge, $1.50; H. E. Raymond. $3; Chas. Robinson, $1; J. S. Pont, $3; W. S. Burton, $3; T. Van Tassal, 25 cents; N. J. Stubbs, $1.50; E. C. Alphonse, $1; M. N. Adams, $12; Caspar Webber, $3; D. R. Sparks, $13; W. C. Gannett, $100; A. A. Knight, $30; A. Hall, $210; F. W. Christern, $100; S. Griffiths Morgan, $90; Joseph A. Barker, $50: M. Hovey, $52.50; Francis V. Balch, $25; Wm. Dudgeon, $25; John M. Forbes, $200; Wesley Best, $10; F. R. Association, $50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JUNE 4, 1874.

NOTICE.

The Third Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 48 Summit Street, on Saturday, June 6, 1874, at 10 o'clock, A.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

GLIMPSES.

Correspondents will please take notice that we shall be absent from Boston several days, in order to attend the stockholders' meeting in Toledo.

Special attention is invited to the list of lectures by Mr. Weiss, on our last page. Lyceums and radical societies will do well to make an early engagement with him.

Rabbi Sonneschein, of St. Louis, has become associated with Rabbi Wise, of Cincinnati, in the editorial conduct of the Israelite, and the name of the paper will be changed to American Israelite. The design is to make it the leading representative of Judaism in this country. The Rabbi made some capital speeches at the Free Religious Convention, and left a most pleasant impression on all minds.

Mr. J. S. Thomson, who has just resigned his position as lecturer for the Free Religious Association of Binghamton, N. Y., and for the Associations of New Milford and Harford, Pa., will lecture in the West during the next three months. His address for the present is Binghamton, N. Y. He is a brave and sincere speaker, and will doubtless prove himself an efficient worker in the cause of true liberalism.

The Seventh Annual Convention of the Free Religious Association was held last week according to announcement, and proved to be at least as successful and interesting an occasion as on previous years. Mr. Frothingham presided at the first three sessions of the Convention, while Col. Higginson presided at the Social Festival on Friday evening; and the experience, tact, and address of these gentlemen, as presiding officers, contributed not a little to the general result. An excellent condensed report of the meetings, specially prepared for The Index by Mr. Morse, will be found on a previous page. This will give our friends at a distance a good idea of the proceedings, and prepare the way for the Association's fuller report in pamphlet form in the early autumn.

The following paragraph from the New Bedford Mercury shows how faithfully Mr. Potter's society stand by him at this juncture: "Notice was given from the pulpit of the First Congregational Church last Sunday, that the house would be closed for the next three months, for the purpose of completing the repairs and improvements which the society propose to make in the interior of the church. Services will be held in the chapel until the summer vacation. At a parish meeting held last week, it was unanimously voted by the members of the society to increase the salary of the Rev. Mr. Potter five hundred dollars, a tangible expression of their warm personal regard for their pastor and for the preacher, whose eloquent discourses in the highest interests of humanity they most cordially appreciate."

Mr. Mumford, editor of the Unitarian Christian Register, generously and truly says: "After all the recent scrutiny and criticism, it does not seem to have occurred to anybody that the name of Rev. A. W. Stevens is not now contained in the Year Book list of Unitarian ministers. Mr. Stevens is a gentleman of fine character and excellent ability. He is associated with Mr. Abbot in editing The Index, and, like Messrs. Abbot and Frothingham, he accepts the situation." Probably the reason why the omission of Mr. Stevens' name has not been noticed is that, when interrogated by Mr. Fox, the Assistant Secretary, he expressed a willingness to have his name omitted. But Mr. Potter "accepts the situation" quite as cheerfully as his comrades. He simply declined to relieve the denomination from the responsibility of defining the terms of its own fellowship; and he humorously remarked at the Social Festival of Friday evening that he had never received so much attention in Boston as he had had this week! We venture to say that he has shed no more tears in private than in public.

The somewhat tardy report of the Joint Special Committee of the Massachusetts Legislature on the subject of the exemption of church property from taxation has been rendered as follows, as reported in the Boston dailies of May 29: "The majority of the Committee on Just and Equal Taxation reported in favor of appointing a Commission to sit during the recess of the Legislature, to examine fully into the questions presented for their consideration, especially that of the taxation of church and educational property. A resolve accompanied the report, providing for the appointment of the proposed Commission of three persons, with power to call witnesses. Mr. Whiting, of Pembroke, dissented from the report, and presented a bill providing for the taxation of the property of musical, agricultural and educational institutions after January 1, 1875; all other property of religious and charitable corporations now exempt to be taxed, except $5000 for each religious association, besides the amount actually used by such corporations for strictly religious and charitable purposes, the Board of State Charities and the Tax Commissioners to decide upon vexed questions. Mr. Morss, of the committee, differed from all his fellow-committee men, and advocated referring the question to the next General Court, presenting the arguments at great length." It remains to be seen what action will be taken on this report by the Legislature, before making any comments upon it here.

The agitation of the prison reform question in Boston during the past few months has resulted in the issue of the first number of a new paper, called the Prisoner's Friend, dated Boston, June 6, and published by Mr. John F. Augustus, who was himself discharged from the State Prison last autumn. The name of no editor is given, and the contents are somewhat miscellaneous; but the paper contains considerable information, and will probably contain more in the future. Mr. Augustus says in his "Introductory": "We design now to plainly set forth the inside workings of our prison system, with a view to its improvement, and the development of every good germ that may be found in the system or in the men subjected to its conditions. . . . A separate prison for women will be persistently urged; and we desire to create a deeper interest in the future welfare of the discharged convict." There are some valuable suggestions in the articles published, such as that of an "Involuntary Industrial" for professional beggars and confirmed drunkards which shall to some extent take the place of poor-houses and penal institutions by giving employment to the incorrigibly idle. What is wanted is exact information, practical hints, and definite, judicious plans. We hope that writers who have knowledge of the subject will give us these things in order to command the attention and respect of the public; and that a future of solid prosperity and real usefulness awaits the Prisoner's Friend. Subscription price, $2.00 a year, to be sent to Mr. Augustus, Room 2, 147 Tremont street, Boston.

The following note was sent to the Free Religious Festival by Mrs. L. M. Child, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Association:—

Wayland, May 20, 1874.

Friend Hallowell:—

I wish I could meet with the members of the Free Religious Association, at their Festival on the 29th. The printed reports of their meetings, though but echoes of the living voices, always make me more certain of the world's progress, and more hopeful of its future. May your approaching gathering prove even more than usually strengthening and refreshing to your own souls, and helpful to the world.

No labor is more arduous than that of removing the old boundary-posts of theology. Men have always been prone to invest them with the flowers and fruit of their own moral and intellectual growth, and then to mistake them for trees with a living root, whose natural produce is such fruit and flowers; and any hand that seeks to dismantle them is deemed sacrilegious.

But these boundary-marks are subject to the universal law of decay; and signs multiply that many of them are worm-eaten at the centre. Carlyle says: "It is surprising how long a rotten post will stand, provided you don't shake it." It is the mission of the Free Religious Association to shake all rotten posts, and show their inward hollowness. May you do this work with vigor and diligence, and thus prepare the world for better things.

Yours cordially, L. Maria Child.

P. S.—I enclose $10.

THE ORDEAL OF UNITARIANISM.

Our readers will remember the correspondence between Mr. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, and Mr. Potter, when the former dropped the latter's name from the official list of Unitarian ministers in the Year Book for 1874. The reason of this action was Mr. Potter's statement that he did not now call himself a "Unitarian Christian." Whoever is interested will find the original correspondence in The Index of January 1, 1874.

Out of this official action has grown much controversy in the Unitarian papers of late, as the annual meeting of the Association was drawing near. Our opinion that there was a "Unitarian Crisis" at hand has been abundantly justified by events. On Tuesday, May 26, the annual meeting was held, and the chief business was a consideration of the question whether the action of the Assistant Secretary (afterwards approved by the Executive Committee) should be finally sanctioned by the Association itself. Of course, it is not the comparatively trivial matter of dropping or retaining an individual name in a dry catalogue that has made the breeze; although no name in that catalogue has commanded more wide or profound respect than Mr. Potter's. The real question at issue concerns the terms of Unitarian fellowship, and the principles on which the list is to be made up. Is there to be any deliberate and avowed exclusion from this fellowship on account of opinion, or not? That is the question; and it was impossible that such a question, forced at last upon the Association for unequivocal decision, should fail to excite deep commotion in a denomination which has claimed to reconcile Christianity with perfect spiritual freedom.

From the day when the National Unitarian Conference refused at Syracuse, in 1866, to affirm the principle of perfect spiritual freedom, but did affirm unequivocally its allegiance to the "Lord Jesus Christ" and Christianity, we have believed that the question was substantially settled; and that time would sooner or later prove the fact. The proof has now come in a form so emphatic that we do not see how any mind, at once clear and candid, can fail to see it. The matter has an interest extending far beyond the limits of the small denomination known as Unitarian; it must be shared by all who would study Christianity philosophically, as manifesting its innermost nature in the acts of its organized institutions. Whether the Christian religion is or is not really reconcilable with the principle of unlimited freedom of thought, is surely a problem deserving of the profoundest attention from all students of religion; and it is a problem which must be studied where Christianity and civilization make their nearest approach to a junction, namely, in "Liberal Christianity." If Unitarianism cannot succeed in reconciling the two opposing principles of Christian faith and spiritual freedom, no form of Christianity can do it; its failure must result simply from the absolute irreconcilability of the principles themselves. For this reason we attended the whole of the discussion in the Association, for different reasons feeling no little sympathy for each side. Nothing could have been better in the main than the spirit manifested by both parties, though we regret to say that in the heat of debate a few things were let fall, both with reference to Mr. Fox and Mr. Potter, that were wholly undeserved, and would far better have been left unsaid. To question the motives of either gentleman was as unnecessary as it was unjust; and of this probably every one is satisfied on cool reflection. But the situation was such as to command sympathy for each side: for the conservatives, because they were battling for what they saw clearly to be essential to the honestly Christian attitude of the Association—for the radicals, because they were striving gallantly to make this attitude both Christian and free at the same time. The latter, however, conceding at the start that they were as willing and determined to bear the Christian name as were the other side, fought under a terrible disadvantage, and their defeat was predestined; for the logic of Christianity was wholly on the side of the conservatives, while the logic of freedom was not on the side of the radicals. Once more, therefore, has it been demonstrated that freedom cannot win her cause under Christian colors.

The case was this. If in any way, directly or indirectly, the Association voted to restore Mr. Potter's name to the authoritative list of Unitarian ministers, then the name Unitarian would thereby be authoritatively declared to cover both Christians and non-Christians; the Unitarian denomination would have sacrificed its Christianity to its freedom, and no explanation or protest whatever could possibly have wiped out this fact. If, however, the Association voted to ratify the action of their officials, then they would deliberately indorse the exclusion of one of their most respected members because of his speculative opinions alone; the Unitarian denomination would have sacrificed its freedom to its Christianity, and no explanation or protest could wipe out this fact, either. Lastly, if the Association did neither of these things, but cunningly evaded the issue, they would reap the reputation of cowardice and want of honesty, and deserve it, too. We are glad to say that the majority seemed anxious to face the issue bravely and settle it honestly in one way or the other.

The whole subject having been brought up in the Secretary's Report, it was regularly introduced to the assembly by Rev. George L. Chaney, who moved that the Year Book list should contain the name of no one "who is not Christian," regardless of what he calls himself; and he seemed to consider Mr. Potter a Christian in spite of his disavowal. This was generous; but the assembly wisely shrank from taking the responsibility of forcing the Christian name on those who would not accept it.

Rev. Edward H. Hall considered that the Executive Committee had exceeded their authority, and moved that their action be "declared null." But then what was to be done with Mr. Potter's name, after all?

Mr. Talbot moved to restore the omitted name, on the ground that Mr. Potter called himself a Christian when he was ordained, and had not outgrown the broad meaning he then gave to the word. But if he cannot call himself a Christian now, this motion would still make a Christian list include non-Christian names. It was only a shrewd evasion of the real difficulty.

Rev. Mr. Horton moved that the omitted name be restored, but that a statement should be prefixed to the list that all the names of ministers it contains are supposed to be there with their consent, and to represent Unitarian Christianity. But, if that statement was to head the list, how could the Association proceed to vote Mr. Potter's name into it, when they all knew he did not represent "Unitarian Christianity"? Would they shirk the responsibility of excluding him, and "put him on his honor" by first showing that they were not "on honor" themselves? The "onus" was on the Association's shoulders, where it properly belonged; and Mr. Horton certainly did not perceive the full bearings of his own proposal.

Rev. Mr. Cordner moved explicitly to ratify the action of the Executive Committee. This was frankly to give up unlimited freedom of thought for the sake of Christianity.

Professor Everett moved that the list should at least contain the names of all ordained ministers actually settled over Unitarian parishes. But what, then, are "Unitarian" parishes? Would Professor Everett call by that name one that would settle or keep a non-Christian minister? If so, the Christian basis of Unitarianism is gone! If Unitarianism is determined to be Christian, it must disfellowship both the minister and the parish that are non-Christian; Professor Everett's resolution only shoved the difficulty one step back, and it must at last be met.

Rev. Mr. Bixby moved that the whole subject be referred to the National Conference; to which, indeed, it seems properly to belong, though there is no reason whatever to think that it would or could be settled by that body in any other manner.

Dr. Clarke moved that, if any minister disowned publicly the Christian name, he should be asked whether he wanted his own name continued in this Christian list, or not; and that the officials should do just as he said! We should say that any minister who would answer, "Yes," ought to be disfellowshipped on moral grounds as a sneak, unfit to associate with honorable men; that any minister who would answer, "No," would probably withdraw unasked; but that any minister who, like Mr. Potter, should decline to answer at all, would still oblige the Association to exclude him because he did not call himself a Christian. The escape from the necessity of exclusion for opinion's sake would be seeming only; and this course would be less manly than to drop his name without pretending to get his consent beforehand.

All these various attempts to save its Christian character without infringing on freedom of thought show how liberal is the spirit of the Unitarian denomination; but they also show how inextricably embarrassed the denomination is by a self-contradictory position. So long as it is bound to be Christian at all, Mr. Cordner's resolution was the manliest offered; and we are glad that this was adopted at last, simply because it enables us to respect the fidelity of the Association to its Christian professions. The issue came up squarely between Christianity and freedom; the Association stood squarely by its Christian professions; and it only remains now to give up by universal consent the claim of standing squarely by freedom also. It is not we, but truth itself, that demands this frank admission; and we ask the defeated radicals to consider calmly, and without prejudice, the actual results of the Association's action. It was impossible not to be drawn towards them irresistibly by their manifest yearning to retain a creedless fellowship without sacrificing their Christian loyalty; yet the hard fact bluntly asserts itself that no one of the expedients proposed could, even if successful, have accomplished this. The question being once raised, Mr. Potter must be either fellowshipped or disfellowshipped deliberately by the denomination; but it must be avowedly as a non-Christian in either case. In the former case, the denomination must waive its Christian consistency; in the latter case, its loyalty to freedom. Now that the question is settled by his deliberate exclusion, these are the consequences:—

1. Every minister on that list must now not only be a Christian, but must also say he is one. He is liable at any time to be interrogated by the Assistant Secretary as to his opinions on a vital point, and must answer correctly according to a denominational standard of orthodoxy, on pain of being practically excommunicated. His ministerial liberty of thought and speech beyond certain clearly defined limits is destroyed.

2. Every congregation is also directly assailed in its congregational independence. If it elects or sustains a non-Christian minister, it is now put in the humiliating position of a society whose minister is disfellowshipped by the denomination to which it belongs. It becomes a suspicious body, whose loyalty to the denomination is distrusted by those who do not yet dare openly to cut it off. But the next logical step will be to disfellowship every such congregation, for the very same reasons that operate against its minister. The "First Congregational Society" in New Bedford has never, we believe, called itself either Christian or Unitarian, though it is classed in the Year Book among Unitarian societies. Why should it not now be obliged to accept these names explicitly? Its connection with the denomination under existing circumstances would seem to require this; and the Assistant Secretary, in making up the Year Book, should be as scrupulous concerning societies as concerning ministers. Henceforth it will be his duty to interrogate closely all doubtful cases of either kind, if he is to make an "honest directory" of the "Unitarian Christian denomination." Why not?

3. A new and most important ecclesiastical officer has been practically appointed, who is to decide upon the orthodoxy of the individual ministers, and before long upon that of the congregations themselves. The lists, if honest, must be limited to "Unitarian Christians," whether ministers or congregations; and a new tribunal, never before heard of in Unitarian circles, has been in fact erected. How insidious, how dangerous to liberty, is the ecclesiastical tendency, when it once gets fairly under way!

4. Ever since the Waterloo of Unitarian radicalism at Syracuse, the radicals have met defeat after defeat, because they have still lingered within the enemy's lines. Their position obliges them to yield at the start the proud right to assert their perfect liberty of speech and thought, inasmuch as they are obliged to plant themselves on Christian ground. Conservatives and radicals are doubtless equally true to their convictions, and for this we equally honor them; but the conservatives are true to the logic of Christianity, while the radicals are true neither to the logic of Christianity nor to that of freedom. The "irrepressible conflict" has broken out once more. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

5. No organized body of Christians, profoundly imbued with love of the Christian faith, has ever yet got together and so acted in concert as to respect perfect individual or congregational liberty. Their deepest convictions forbid. No matter how loudly they protest their love of freedom, their action will always crucify it. The reason is that they act under a necessity, which has now proved itself for the thousandth time. If the American Unitarian Association, for instance, should defend Mr. Potter's right to think and speak as he must about Christianity, and should deliberately retain his name on its list, it could not claim to be a Christian body without calling forth a roar of derision from the keen-eyed world. But now that it has deliberately stricken out his name because he does not think and speak of Christianity as itself approves, it cannot claim to be a free body without equal absurdity. The fact of being Christian is the necessity of curtailing liberty. This truth will be seen as never before in consequence of the recent action. Logic may be despised by religion, but it wins in every conflict at last.

We do not say these things in any harsh or unfriendly spirit, but simply because it is a duty to tell such truth as it falls to our lot to discern. The fellowship of humanity, which alone we believe in, knows no barrier of Christian and non-Christian; and the attractiveness of character was never more powerful than as we listened to some of the earnest speeches on both sides of this question of the Year Book list. More gallant or loyal spirits could not be found than these; and, set what limits they may to their ecclesiastical fellowship, they cannot get out or shut out from the fellowship of man.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND FREE RELIGION.

A copy of THE INDEX, in which was printed a letter from a Catholic priest on the subject of conscience in belief, was shown to the writer of it. So far from being annoyed by the publication, he rather expressed satisfaction by putting it in the hands of his Catholic friends, priests of course, and asking their opinion on its contents. They, as I learn, after reading it carefully, declared their full concurrence with the exposition given, as conveying a correct statement of the true Catholic doctrine. That it is the doctrine held by all the teachers of the Church in the past, or in the present, is not claimed; but that it is the authorized doctrine is, as will be seen from the subjoined letter, asserted, in the face of Mr. DeLara's letter printed in THE INDEX of April 30. In the Roman Church, as in every other, there are, it seems, two schools of opinion—an old school and a new, a conservative school and a liberal; and here, as often elsewhere, the new school is the oldest, the liberal school has the most venerable authorities on its side. The mature, well-seasoned Catholics, who have become mellow with time, entertain the generous opinion. The new converts, ex-heretics, parvenus in the Church, like the conductors of the Catholic World and the Freeman's Journal, are disposed to draw lines of exclusion, and make more of the antipathies than of the sympathies of faith. It is to be hoped that, in this country, the generous view has the best promise of the future. For the future has no interest more grand than that of religious harmony. The destruction of the sectarian principle is a great concern. The Protestant sects defend it, and cling to it as the bulwark of the Gospel. If the enlightened part of the Catholic Church, the Church hitherto so closely associated with exclusiveness, repudiates it, several things will be gained; the great Church of Christendom will vindicate its title to be called "Catholic,"—the pretensions of Protestantism to be regarded as the champion of religious liberty will be exposed,—a powerful ally will be found on the side of spiritual largeness,—the connection between ancient reverence and modern intellect will be maintained,—and the promise of peace and good-will will be brighter.

Here is the second communication of our Catholic friend. It was written hastily in a lawyer's office where Mr. DeLara's reply to his first letter was shown him. O. B. F.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—

I notice a communication in THE INDEX of the 30th April, desiring to find a way of reconciling the Catholic doctrine upon the rights of conscience and the terms of an oath said to have been required in former days of some Hungarian converts to the Church. To you, indeed, there is no need of explanation in regard to this or any similar point. But as others may not have the same light, I will simply say that the universal Church is not responsible for the action or principles of any party or faction of individuals within her fold. She allows, nay, requires, more individual liberty than is generally conceded by those outside. If many of her priests and bishops pervert her sublime doctrine of human freedom, or substitute their own narrow notions for the divine law, her human element may be weak enough to let pass what should be reproved; but she herself, speaking authoritatively, can never be found approving anything contrary to the doctrine which she promulgates by her œcumenical decrees on faith and morals, and which we find expounded in the writings of the fathers regarding the inviolable dignity and freedom of conscience, such as I concisely stated to you in my first note. If all the bishops of Hungary erred in matters of doctrine, the Church could not be justly held responsible for the error, much less when there is question only of a small point of discipline. Even the Church herself does not claim infallibility in matters of discipline. This applies also to the Council of Trent. Hence, I think the difficulty of Mr. DeLara will not appear very formidable, even to him, when he takes this into consideration. As to the anathematizing or cursing exercises to which he alludes, there is no reason why a good Catholic might not doubt the taste of that custom, which began, indeed, very early in the days of the apostles. As to his historical quotations he will, no doubt, see the propriety of doubting their accuracy, when he learns that Cardinal de Lorraine was not at any time "presiding officer" of the session of the Council of Trent to which he refers. The expressions adduced by him from the Catholic World and the Freeman's Journal I regard as theological conundrums, whose solution the able editors of these publications are best able to afford.

It may be added, in conclusion, that to discuss a principle or doctrine involving in its exposition a thorough understanding of kindred subjects, requiring deep and varied study, is a task of no easy accomplishment in a short newspaper communication. Intelligent and candid readers will therefore see the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of my being able to supply an antidote against all doubt and obscurity in the minds of others, on the point which I first explained, as I am pleased to find, to your entire satisfaction. — —.

LONDON LETTER.

To the Editor of the Index:—

Sir,—A discussion is going on in the columns of the Examiner, on the subject of the punishment of criminals, more especially as to the use of the "cat." The question of the morality or immorality of inflicting torture is not so easily disposed of as some persons would fain make us believe. There is really very much to be said both for and against the practice.

Let me ask the following questions: Is it not the right and duty of governments to use such methods of punishment as will tend most to the prevention of a repetition of crime and to the moral improvement of the criminal? Is not vengeance pure and simple to be rigidly avoided and excluded from our prisons? Cannot punishments be inflicted without the idea of vengeance or retaliation being mixed up with them? Is punishment possible without inflicting some kind of pain, mental or bodily? Is not the infliction of pain by the "cat" the same in principle as the infliction of pain by solitary confinement, enforced labor, compulsory and perpetual silence?

Now, at present, the opponents of "flogging" have not raised a single objection to the other modes of punishing criminals. They all admit the morality of, as well as the necessity for, depriving the criminal of his liberty, compelling him to hard labor, making his heart heavy with silence, and lowering his whole tone by prison fare and prison discipline.

All these forms of punishment are degrees of torture, less acute, probably, than the infliction of a flogging, but still very painful.

Rightly or wrongly, then, the principle of torture is admitted, and the only question left for discussion is where the line is to be drawn between allowed and forbidden tortures.

Now, if we adopt the canon that government is bound to use such modes of punishment as will best prevent repetition of the crime and improve the criminal, we are at once brought face to face with a fresh difficulty, in the fact that criminals, like other men, are not all alike; that a degree of severity which would benefit and correct one offender would injure and exasperate another. This is the real difficulty in the whole case, and manifests more plainly than anything else the awful difference between a prison and a home.

A wise parent will not allow himself to be fettered by arbitrary codes of law and penalty, but be ever guided by the individual interests and peculiarities of his children. He may wisely use even the rod, before a certain age is reached, and under special circumstances; but he will not tie himself down always to use it in every case of the same offence. In a prison, however, this discrimination is impossible. A magisterial or judicial sentence has been passed already which determines the number of lashes and the times at which they are to be inflicted. Whether the poor criminal be obdurate or tender, still bent on violence or heartily repentant, it makes no difference—the horrible torture and shame must be endured. Hence it is that there is danger lest the end in this be defeated, lest the criminal should be hardened instead of being improved, and his evil propensities be aggravated instead of being checked.

I see no other ground on which the "cat" can be justly objected to, and on this ground we might equally object to all the minor degrees of torture involved in imprisonment.

But, on the other hand, it must be admitted that, as men must be grievously below the ordinary level of human feeling before they can deliberately injure for life a harmless stranger for the sake of a gold watch and a few sovereigns, so this class of criminals is more likely to be benefited by severe torture than those of a higher type of humanity. I can well imagine that the fiend who has beaten and kicked his defenceless wife for God knows how long would be less likely to do it again after being well flogged in prison; and if there is a tolerable certainty that such an effect would follow, the use of the "cat" in such a case becomes a duty.

The limit to be put upon the degree of torture inflicted on criminals must be determined on purely humane principles. We have struck out retaliation, and we retain only correction. Then that correction must be made as effective as possible, consistently with safety to the health and sanity of the sufferer. The presence of a medical officer is invariable when the "cat" is used, and he has it in his power to arrest the torture at any moment when he perceives it to be dangerous or unbearable.

Much has been said about the brutalizing effects of the operation upon the operator. I am informed that nothing is more ill-founded than this objection. The warders upon whom the wretched task is laid approach it with quivering lips and beating hearts, and leave it with swimming eyes and audible groans. Work, even of this excruciatingly painful kind, does not degrade, when done in the lawful discharge of one's duty, and with only feelings of pity and commiseration for the criminal. I have seen something of these men myself; and, if there is anything more remarkable about a prison warder than about another officer in the same rank outside, it is the wonderful tenderness, softness, and susceptibility which he displays, and which may be traced in a great measure to the intensely sad scenes in which he lives and toils. The very necessity for a stern and firm demeanor towards those whom he pities calls into unusual activity sentiments of tenderness and sympathy towards the unhappy creatures under his control.

On the whole, I am inclined to the belief that flogging for certain offences is perfectly consistent with our holiest idea of punishment; and that the possible misapplication of it might be considerably avoided by giving discretionary power to the governor of the prison to withhold the infliction in such cases as he deemed it likely to prove morally injurious. We have not yet arrived at the promised land, in which pains and penalties will no longer be wanted because the crimes to be punished by them will no longer exist. Our present system is at best but a choice of evils, and we can but make the best use of it in our power.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

Charles Voysey.

Camden House, Dulwich, S. E., May 18, 1874.

Communications.

THE "LOWER ARCH."

"Oppress not to the utmost a single soul."
[Quoted by Charles Sumner from the Oriental.]

"How," asks Warden Haynes, in his able State Prison Report of 1867, "shall the necessary discipline in a prison be enforced? . . . Various kinds of punishments are resorted to, in the different States, to accomplish the end, but all are, to a greater or less extent, objectionable.

"In Maine. The dark cell and lash not prohibited, though never used.

"In New Hampshire. The same.

"Vermont. Dark cell, iron jacket, and, in some cases, the lash.

"Rhode Island. The dark cell.

"Connecticut. Dark cell and lash.

"New York. Dark cell, shower bath, shaving the head, iron cap, bucking, and poke, or crucifix.

"In Massachusetts. The dark cell has been the only punishment for the last ten years. This in all cases has been found sufficient, and is doubtless the least objectionable of any system of punishment now in use. I disapprove of it, however, for the following reasons: First, that in darkening the cells you necessarily exclude the air, and destroy the ventilation; the constitution of the convict who is frequently, or for any length of time, subjected to this discipline must unavoidably become impaired. Secondly, the labor for the time he is shut up is lost to the State. To find a substitute that will prove effective and free from the above objections is certainly very desirable. I have given much thought and attention to the subject, and have come to the conclusion that a system of marks can be introduced that will, in a great measure, supersede all other punishments."

Sir W. Crofton, developer of the famous Irish system, observes: "I can record from actual experience that the marks are of the utmost value; that they are the means of acting upon a man as an individual, and of realizing to him his own position, and his own means of progress. I know of no other way in which you can produce that effect upon him. I am quite satisfied that, wherever the system of marks is tried, it will succeed."

Dr. A. B. Bancroft, for many years physician of the Massachusetts State Prison, in his Report of 1859, thus gives his testimony in regard to the sanitary inexpediency of solitary confinement: "The employment of solitary confinement, as a punishment, although I do not propose to call in question its necessity, tends strongly, when protracted (and the character of the offender often renders this unavoidable), to undermine the constitution and favor the development of tubercular disease."

As, in spite of these protests, solitary confinement is still recognized as a necessity in the prison system of Massachusetts, and probably will be until an effective substitute for it can be devised (and that seems, at present, "past praying for"), it would appear to be the immediate duty of the State to guard, so far as is possible, this necessary evil from such abuse as results from the additional mischief of total darkness, dampness, lack of ventilation, and the inhuman practice of chaining the offender; and, by the inauguration of a more thorough system of prison inspection, to ensure the convict against the possible malice or vindictiveness of prison authorities.

Public attention would seem to be particularly called to the subject at this time, by the apology of no less a person than a prison chaplain for that most miserable of dungeons, the "Lower Arch," in which the reverend gentleman makes this remarkable statement: "No man has ever died while in prison [meaning, it is inferred, the Massachusetts State Prison, as the article in question is written in defence of its Warden] that had ever been in the Arch, with one exception,—and he died of consumption, some sixteen months after his confinement, which lasted only two days."

Having in my possession the Massachusetts State Prison Reports from 1858 down to 1874, and so much of its history as is contained in that valuable and interesting work of ex-Warden Haynes, entitled Pictures of Prison Life, I am able to lay before the public a few simple facts in controversion of this absurdly false statement. I quote first from Pictures of Prison Life, chapter II., page eighty-one:—

"In the Lower Arch," says Mr. Haynes, "or dungeon, I found a man by the name of Lynch. He was one of the ten already referred to. He was placed here as a punishment for breaking and destroying his bedstead and bedding, and had been there about a week." This was April 1, 1858. Here follows a description of the place: "The cell in which he was confined was about six feet by eight, perfectly dark; night and day were both alike to him; a board and blanket his bed, bread and water in limited quantities his diet. Here he had been for a week, and here he was determined to remain for the next seven months. I saw him occasionally till the 14th of the month." Having expressly stated that Lynch had been kept there for a week, Mr. Haynes says that he was not released till the 14th of the same month. He relates the circumstances of his recommitment to the prison, and says that he died there in the hospital, August 3, 1860; which of course disposes at once of the statement that he is the one man who "died of consumption sixteen months after his confinement," which "only lasted two days."

Turning to the Reports of Dr. Bancroft, before quoted, I find this admirable paragraph: "I always thought it due to the friends of the deceased, as well as to those who have supervision of the prison and its officers, that a history of each fatal case, and the cause of death, should appear with somewhat of minuteness of detail in the Annual Report. By so doing, I likewise indulge the hope that these papers may not prove entirely worthless to the future medical explorer." Thus he reports the case of Lynch and the cause of his death: "Michael Lynch died August 3, of pulmonary consumption; aged 26. He entered the hospital June 16, 1860, and the prison December 6, 1858. This man, on account of his dangerous impulses, was for a long time in close confinement, which developed, if it did not initiate, his disease."

In Dr. Bancroft's Report of 1859, the following case is stated: "Charles Green was sentenced to the State Prison in November 1856, for burglary. During the first five or six months he applied himself to work in the stone-shed, with tolerable diligence, but early exhibited restlessness under restraint. By his indolence he soon brought himself under the animadversion of his overseer. His indolence and stubbornness became at last so obnoxious that he was placed in solitary confinement. Punishment producing no impression upon him, and symptoms of disordered intellect beginning to manifest themselves, he was transferred to the hospital, where he remained under the observation of the physician, until his noise rendered his removal to another place" [the Arch] "necessary. As there was no apartment suitable for him in the unsettled condition of his mind, he was conveyed to a comfortable room under the Arch, until his mental state should assume a more decided character. No alteration was noticeable in his case up to the period of his death. The turnkey, on entering his cell in the morning of April 12, found that he had committed suicide by hanging."

In his Report of 1864, Dr. Bancroft describes in detail the case of Thomas Doyle; it is long, and I quote only so much of it as bears on the point in question:—

"He had been in close confinement for an assault upon an officer, and, being a dangerous man, for fourteen months. . . . November 9 I was requested to see him, as he had refused to eat. . . . The paleness and emaciation noticed at the previous visit were now more marked; there was also a frequent and feeble pulse. . . . Doyle was immediately removed to the hospital, and put upon as generous a diet, with such stimulants, as he could bear. Possibly he may have taken a larger quantity of food than his stomach could digest, for the day after his admission he had a diarrhœa which, although soon checked, resulted in his death November 13."

In the Report for 1865, it is stated that James Hurley was found dead Monday forenoon, August 6. "Being a dangerous man, he was confined apart from the other prisoners. . . . His disease was peritonitis, or inflammation of the serous membrane which lines the abdominal cavity. In his case it was complicated with strumous tubercles. Treatment in cases of this disease is unavailing, as they always terminate fatally."

"William Connolley entered prison November 3. . . . For obstinately refusing to work, he was kept upon bread and water, and endured this treatment for seven weeks without flinching. . . . Finally, symptoms of scurvy appearing, he was transferred to the hospital, and placed upon appropriate treatment. . . . He died September 9; the left lung was completely disorganized."

"Elijah Johnson, colored, died October 21, of inflammation of the brain, resulting in softening. He had been in prison three years, and in the hospital eleven days. His health had been impaired by repeated confinement, rendered necessary by a perverseness of disposition. He applied for medical treatment October 4, having a coated tongue and headache. He was found two or three times on the floor of his cell, having fallen from his bed. Symptoms of debility beginning to show themselves, he was stimulated. He fell into a dull, listless state, yet, when roused, would speak. The muscles were rigid, catheterism became necessary, and he refused all food three or four days prior to death."

"William Flemming, colored, died June 30. . . . June 22, while in Solitary, he was attacked with severe pain in right pleura." Here follows a diagnosis, exceedingly interesting, but too long to copy.

In addition to this testimony of Dr. Bancroft's, and in opposition to that of Chaplain Speare, I deemed it important to procure that of Hon. Gideon Haynes, then Warden of State Prison; and, in answer to a note addressed to him, containing a list of the above names, I received the following:—

"WALTHAM, May 11, 1874.

"You are correct in the list of names you give of men who have at times been confined in the Arch. I have no wish or desire to conceal the truth so far as I am concerned, but am perfectly willing that any of the cases that occurred while I was Warden should be fully investigated."

The Chaplain in his letter also affirms of the lower Arch: "There is no extraordinary dampness there."

When it is remembered that these dungeons are on the lower, or basement, floor of the prison, built up with solid walls of great thickness, totally dark (on the authority of Mr. Haynes, who states that "day and night are both alike there"), and having no aperture save a small wicket at the bottom of the solid door for the admission of food, the absurdity of this statement becomes apparent. Yet, not wishing to confute by inference alone, I wrote to Mr. David Sargent for particulars in regard to these dungeons. Mr. Sargent has been an under-officer of the prison for forty years, is well known in Charlestown as a man of the strictest integrity, and his statement needs no endorsing. I give it verbatim:—

"I positively affirm, and am ready to take oath, that the Lower Arch in the prison at Charlestown is a dark, dismal, damp dungeon, and I have seen convicts bound down to the ringbolts for trivial offences, and kept there until they came out so frost-bitten and weak they could scarcely stand! I have heard them howl and scream the whole night long, as it was impossible for them to sleep, in consequence of the cold and the rats, that would not only run about, but would often bite them, when trying to get a little rest. Before Mr. Haynes' administration, I have seen a convict actually burnt out of this dungeon, by throwing red-hot coals on the straw which he had torn from his bed. Such treatment made the convict almost a complete demon of revenge."

In the late discussions of the Second Radical Club, in regard to the State Prison, Warden Chamberlain stated, in defence of himself, that he had sent fewer prisoners to the Lower Arch, during two and a half years of his administration, than Warden Haynes had done in the same length of time. That his estimates are unreliable there is some proof, as they were that evening corrected by Chaplain Speare in the Warden's favor; and in his letter, he (the chaplain) again alters the figures, giving a third estimate. Before me is a pamphlet entitled Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Massachusetts State Prison, 1862, approved by the Governor and Council. In the clause headed "Duties of the Deputy Warden," I find this sentence: "He shall decide on the propriety and extent of punishment necessary to be inflicted on an offender." In the note before alluded to, of ex-Warden Haynes, I received full evidence as to the enforcement of this rule, and copy for the reader: "It is the duty of the Deputy Warden to decide upon the punishment to be inflicted. No man is ever brought before the Warden, except in the absence of the Deputy. Mr. Hale was the Deputy Warden during the whole period, I think, named under Mr. Chamberlain and myself. It was by his order that the men were removed to the Lower Arch, and it was always for disturbing the prison while in the other punishment cells. Of course, I held myself responsible for what he did, and never thought he made a mistake, and I only allude to it now for the sake of asking the question: Has Mr. Hale become more lenient, or do the men behave better?"

When the records of the State Prison are again consulted to prove the mercifulness of General Chamberlain, by insinuations of the severity (!) of ex-Warden Haynes, it is to be hoped that the given result, whether correct or otherwise, may have a less remote bearing upon the point in question. And it is respectfully suggested that, before again expatiating in print on the comfort and salubrity of the Lower Arch, the chaplain withdraw for a season to those "sequestered shades," and thus, "putting himself in the convict's place," be enabled to write of it more feelingly and understandingly. TRUTH.

CAN AN ATHEIST CLAIM TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

The Investigator, and I think THE INDEX, says that an atheist cannot claim to be a Christian without being a hypocrite. It seems to me that he can. There are many definitions of Christianity, some of them being very comprehensive. Robertson defines it as "self-sacrifice." Cannot an atheist be self-sacrificing? Some define it as the effort after perfection. Cannot an atheist strive after perfection? Of course, if an atheist defines Christianity in such a way that it connotes theism, he cannot truthfully claim to be a Christian; but Christianity does not necessarily connote theism. It is not a theological but historical term. It has no strict meaning, but an ever-varying, changing meaning. That meaning may include theism, and may not. It may include a reference to Jesus, and may not. Even if it does include a reference to Jesus, that does not exclude the atheist; for, though the atheist may not believe that Jesus is God, he may still believe that he is a perfect man, a teacher, a master, an authority in religion, and then he is a Christian according to James Freeman Clarke's definition. He may reject the idea of God, but not necessarily the idea of authority. Comte did not. Any one who acknowledges Jesus as authority in religion, in the same way that he acknowledges Newton as an authority in mathematics, is by Clarke's definition a good Christian. Clarke does not insist upon theism; he only insists upon Jesus. I have heard Orthodox Christians say that Jesus was all the God they knew, or could know; that the infinite and eternal God was altogether beyond our human comprehension; Jesus, the comprehensible "God" in human thought and character, was all the God we could know or worship. Is not this atheism? We believe that nine-tenths of Orthodox Christians are atheists of this class. In fact, Orthodoxy, when we get to the heart of it, is founded on atheism. It is the worship of man as God.

So there are, it strikes me, many modes of thought by which an atheist can be a Christian. There are many definitions of "Christianity," from Robertson to Clarke, wherein an atheist can find comfortable quarters. For my part, I do not wish to define Christianity so as to keep out any noble soul; I would define it, therefore, as the effort after a grand ideal, that ideal growing out of one's own heart and life. This does not exclude the atheist.

S. P. PUTNAM.

[We do not remember making the remark in question, and do not believe we ever made it. Christianity, however, in our view of it (which is the common view), certainly includes theism. But eccentricity is not hypocrisy, and there may be persons who call themselves Christians and atheists at the same time; without being hypocrites, either.—ED.]

AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING, YESTERDAY—A LIVELY DISCUSSION ON THE "YEAR BOOK"—RESOLUTIONS, REPORTS, AND REMARKS.

The annual meeting of this Association was held at the Bulfinch Place Chapel, Tuesday, May 25. The Hon. John Wells, of Boston, presided. The report of the Treasurer showed: Balance last year, $3,515.21; receipts, $67,063.96; expenditures, $68,315.53; present balance, $2,263.64. The total of permanent funds is $105,840. The report of the Secretary stated that the financial losses to the community by the Boston and Chicago fires had produced some diminution of contributions, and some increase of necessities of various societies. The missionary work has been well maintained; and not only in this country, but in India, Italy, Hungary, Germany, Iceland, and Japan something had been done in promoting the spread of liberal Christianity. Various details of the missionary work at the West were given, and it was recommended that a travelling missionary be procured to serve under the direction of the Western Conference.

The Rev. Edward E. Hale offered the following resolution, which he prefaced with an argument in favor of presenting some practical and tangible object when appealing to the laity for funds for the Association:—

Resolved, That it is desirable to establish new congregations in six of the principal cities, or centres of opinion, in which there are now no Unitarian churches.

After a discussion, in which some expressed apprehension that a diminution of local work might be the consequence, the resolution was passed.

The Rev. Mr. Barber, of Somerville, offered a resolution that a copy of the works of Channing be presented to every settled minister in America. This was adopted.

The subject of the Year Book was then taken up. This had been referred to in the Secretary's report. A practical difficulty had arisen in regard to placing certain churches and ministers on the list. The particular case referred to in this part of the report was understood to be that of Mr. Potter, of New Bedford, and on account of his letter, declaring himself a Unitarian but not a Christian, the Executive Committee were forced to elect from the following three choices: Either that the denomination is not based on Christianity; or, professing Christianity, it is willing to publish a list of ministers not correct in fact, by including those not Christians; or that the writer, Mr. Potter, is a Christian, notwithstanding his disavowal.

The Rev. George L. Chaney offered the following:

Resolved, That the word Unitarian, as used among us, means Unitarian Christians, and that no list of Unitarian ministers is correct which contains the name of any person who is not Christian.

Amendments were then offered as follows: By the Rev. Mr. Hall, of Worcester:—

Resolved, That in omitting from the Year Book of 1874 the name of a minister who had not requested the omission of his name, the Executive Committee have assumed a responsibility too great to be borne by any but the Association itself, and such action of the Executive Committee is hereby declared null.

By Mr. Talbot:—

Resolved, That the name of the Rev. William J. Potter, minister of the First Congregational Society in New Bedford, Mass., having been without proper authority dropped from the list of Unitarian ministers published under the direction of this Association, the same be restored thereto as soon as practicable.

Resolved, That the Rev. Mr. Potter, having, in the correspondence which led to the omission of his name from the list of Unitarian ministers, declared that when he entered the Unitarian ministry he could and did call himself a Christian, and that his general views have not since that time so much changed as to exclude him from the broader meaning which he then gave to that word, is cordially invited to continue his coöperation with us upon ground found at the time of his ordination to be common between him and the denomination; this Association rejoicing in an opportunity to reaffirm the ancient Unitarian construction of Christianity, as referring to character rather than to dogma, to the spiritual teachings of Jesus rather than to theological doctrines, and rejecting the narrow meaning which Free Religionists may attach to that term, as this narrower meaning has been rejected when presented to us by Evangelical Christians.

By the Rev. Mr. Horton, of Leominster:—

Resolved, That the name of the Rev. W. J. Potter be replaced on the Year Book of our denomination, and that we, as members of the American Unitarian Association, would accompany the above resolution with the following declaration: That all names of ministers appearing on the official Year Book are presupposed, by their consent, to be representatives of Unitarian Christianity, and we hereby instruct the Executive Committee to prefix this statement to the annual list.

By the Rev. Mr. Cordner, of Montreal:—

Resolved, That inasmuch as the term Unitarian, as used in the title of this Association and its publications, has always been held to carry a distinctively Christian meaning, our Unitarian ministers being held and regarded by us as public teachers of the Christian religion; and as the action of the Assistant Secretary, sustained by the Executive Committee, in omitting from the catalogue the name of a minister who says he is no longer a Christian, has been in harmony with this common usage of the term among us, therefore the action be now and hereby is approved and ratified.

By the Rev. C. C. Everett, of Cambridge:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Association, whatever else the list of ministers in the Year Book may or may not contain, it should contain the names of all ordained ministers actually settled over Unitarian parishes.

By the Rev. Mr. Bixby, of Watertown:—

WHEREAS, As a mere matter of convenience to the public, the American Unitarian Association, through its regular officers has, hitherto, annually prepared and published a list of those supposed to be generally accepted as Unitarian ministers; and

WHEREAS, The correctness of this list has now been brought into question, and certain ones consider themselves aggrieved thereby; and

WHEREAS, This Association is not an authorized representative of the churches of the denomination, but only an association of individuals, acting in their private capacity for missionary and other purposes; therefore

Resolved, That this Association claims no right to decide who is or who is not to be considered as rightly belonging to the ranks of the Unitarian ministry, and declines to adjudicate upon the question; commending it and also the future preparation of a correct list of such ministers to the consideration of authorized representatives of our churches at the next meeting in the National Conference.

At the opening of the afternoon session, the Rev. Mr. Hale withdrew his motion in favor of that of Mr. Everett, and it was finally placed in the position of an amendment to Mr. Chaney's resolution, and Mr. Horton's amendment to amendment stood as an original amendment.

The Rev. James Freeman Clarke offered the following:—

Resolved, That in preparing the catalogue of Unitarian ministers contained in the Year Book, whenever it shall appear that any person whose name has hitherto been contained therein shall have publicly declared himself to be no longer a Unitarian, no longer a Christian, the officers of the Association shall inquire whether he wishes his name continued in the catalogue. If he replies that he does, it shall be still printed therein; otherwise it shall be omitted.

After much discussion, the resolution against the recognition of such men as Mr. Potter in the Unitarian ranks prevailed, and so a fruitful source of debate came to an end.—Boston Globe.

ON ONE OCCASION Hon. Jeremiah Mason went into Charles Sumner's office, and found him writing an address to be delivered before a peace society. After a little good-natured defence of his views by Mr. Sumner, the former, rising to take his leave, said: "Well, Sumner, you may be right, but I should just as soon think of joining a society for the suppression of thunder and lightning as a society for the suppression of war."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12		Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,
OF THE
FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each. Comprising—	1.00
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.50
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair.	1.25
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

J. SEDGEBEER, Painesville, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHAPTERS

FROM

The Bible of the Ages.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by

GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

DITSON & CO.'S

Home Musical Library.

Price of each Book in Boards, $2.50; Cloth, $3; Full Gilt, $4.

MUSICAL TREASURE. Vocal.
SILVER CHORD. Vocal.
WREATH OF GEMS. Vocal.
GEMS OF SACRED SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG. Vocal.
OPERATIC PEARLS. Vocal.
SHOWER OF PEARLS. Vocal Duets.
ORGAN AT HOME. Reed Organ Music. Instrumental.
GEMS OF STRAUSS. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. I. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. II. Instrumental.
PIANIST'S ALBUM. Instrumental.
PIANOFORTE GEMS. Instrumental.

Large, splendid books of bound music, two hundred to two hundred and fifty pages, full sheet music size, and contain a very large proportion of all the good sheet music ever published.

Sold by all dealers. Either book sent postpaid for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1874. WHOLE NO. 233.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

WE HAVE just read of a man in Pennsylvania, who is the father of forty-one children. Shade of Malthus, have mercy upon us!

HENRI ROCHEFORT, who is in this country, is both much praised and censured by the Press. We hope he is as able to bear the one as the other treatment.

MR. ALCOTT'S "Our Club" had a picnic at his house in Concord, last week Thursday, and Mr. Emerson's presence into the bargain. Dr. Bartol read an essay. Of course, it was a graceful and charming occasion.

THE women-crusaders of Philadelphia have established a Drunkard's Home, where they take in their converts, and care for them until they are able successfully to resist temptation. This is both sensible and kind.

THE CITY Registrar shows that the current mortality of Boston is 28.45 in a thousand—a larger death-rate, with one or two exceptions, than has been reached for the last twenty-five years. The mortality throughout Massachusetts is about 23 in a thousand.

IT IS A rare occurrence when a platform-speaker speaks out his or her mind with thorough fulness and candor. Desire to adapt one's thought to the average audience, and win sympathy and response from the public, too often "quenches the spirit" in both speaker and hearer. Hence conventions which hang upon platforms are rarely very inspiring or profitable.

"BURLEIGH" of the Boston Journal says "that the facilities of travel are such that a man may go to China and not be missed, or go round the globe without notifying his wife or his creditors." There are a great many men who might go almost anywhere without being missed; and some actually do go without notifying either wife or creditors. But such can well be spared.

THE Woman's Journal suggests that we have "not studied the reformatory bearings [on politics] of Woman Suffrage." Perhaps not, as much as some have; it may be not as much as we ought to have. But we propose to keep on studying all interesting subjects, so far as we can, as long as we live; and, we take it, the best way to study any subject is to keep our eyes open to all sides of it, and not become a blind partisan of any cause.

COL. HIGGINSON well says: "The man of education is the natural leader of American affairs; everybody wishes him to lead, nobody grudges it. He has nominally but one vote, and he certainly needs but one, for practically he has a thousand. . . . But the educated American holds this power on one simple condition: that he should be faithful to the fundamental principle of the government, even as Lincoln defined it—'of the people, by the people, and for the people.'"

WE HEAR that it is said by some of the prominent members of the First Radical Club that that delightful little company has probably held its last meeting. Well, it has had its day of distinguished usefulness and rare intellectual felicity, by the grace of the hospitable Chestnut-Street mansions where it was used to be entertained; and, if it should never assemble again, it will live long and pleasantly in the memories of many who have been privileged to enjoy its meetings.

BEN. BUTLER has had the colic. One of the consequences is that he has somewhat loosened his gripe on the politics of the country, and begins to think that may be he doesn't care to be governor after all. It is even said that his friend Mr. Grant is going to make a minister of him—a foreign one, of course. Well, the Hon. Benjamin has some good points, not the least one of which is that he is no worse a man than he seems to be. His badness all comes out, and we know just how bad it is.

ELIZABETH GARRETT ANDERSON, in the Fortnightly Review, controverts the position of Dr. Clarke in Sex in Mind and Education. She insists that greater mischief accrues to young women from wearing heavy skirts than from hard study. She says: "It certainly shakes our faith in Dr. Clarke's acumen to find him attributing less direct influence to them than to mental occupation. Our own notion would be that, till American girls wear light dresses and thick boots, and spend as much time out of doors as their brothers, no one knows how many examinations they could pass, not only without injury, but with positive benefit to their health and spirits."

WE WERE TALKING, the other day, with a very sensible and successful Boston business man, and in the course of the conversation he expressed the opinion that business throughout the country would not materially improve until Congress had adjourned. He said it would be better for the business of the nation if Congress, and the State legislatures, did not meet more than once in two or three years, instead of every year; that we had too much legislation, too many laws,—especially when we considered what sort of men our legislators were, and how little they had at heart the real welfare of the people. The opinion of this gentleman may go for what it is worth; and yet we can but think that it is worth a good deal. The Jeffersonian maxim, that "the world is governed too much," is slowly growing into the comprehension of mankind; and faith in human nature is attaining a root and vitality which augurs well for the future.

IT IS A VERY great mistake which Christians make in thinking that all who decline to call themselves Christians have an antipathy to Jesus. For we know it is a fact that some of those who have been Christians, but who are now extra-Christian, feel the deepest sympathy with Jesus as a man, a brother, a prophet, and a spiritual reformer. Even in their free religion, their infidelity, they hail him as a true heart-friend and genial fellow-spirit. His essential character they are deeply in love with; his sublimest, most universal utterances awaken live responses in their souls; they burn with a glow of kindred enthusiasm when they observe a touch of real, earnest, human, manly life in him; and they rejoice with exceeding great joy in all the abandon of his loving, spiritual nature. It is only when he is wrested out of all his naturalness by stupid theological misinterpretation,—or when he himself lapses from his great personal inspiration into his inherited conceit of Messianism,—that the true radical fails to clasp firm hands with him, and admire him as sublimely great among great souls.

GRAVEYARDS have never been favorite places of resort with us, although we have naturally expected sometime to have plenty of leisure for testing the desirability of their situation. But if any frequenter of Boston is ever weary of the din and tumult of the street, or of the vexing cares and labors of the office or of any scene of business, let him quietly step into the still retreat of the Athenæum, and contemplate from its ample windows the cool, calm repose of the old burying-ground that lies contiguous thereto. The very sight of that spot so sacred to solitude and silence in the midst of noisy, thronging crowds, of the dumb tomb-stones gray with age, of the mounds that cover sealed lips, of the grand old trees that stand such speechless sentinels for the dead, of the sparse shy flowers that bloom and make no noise,—the very sight of all this lovely, quiet, solemn scene brings to the beholder a benediction, a pax vobiscum that sends him away soothed, refreshed, and purified. Although inclined to be a "cremationist," we say, Let the graveyards of Boston remain forever undisturbed by the greedy spirit of business—spaces of beautiful silence amid all the hurry and unrest of the great city.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Theodore Parker.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED IN EAST LEXINGTON, MASSACHUSETTS, ON THE FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF PARKER'S DEATH.

BY REV. EDWIN S. ELDER.

In the southerly part of this town, less than three miles from here, may be seen by the roadside a block of granite upon which is the following inscription:—

BIRTH-PLACE
OF
THEODORE PARKER.
1810.

In the little Protestant cemetery outside the walls of Florence, in Italy, there stands a monument of gray marble, on which may be read, "Theodore Parker: born at Lexington, United States of America, August the 24th, 1810; died at Florence, May the 14th, 1860.

Just fourteen years ago to-day, at the age of forty-nine years and nine months, the great heart of Lexington's most noted son ceased to beat.

In view of his reputation, world-wide and increasing; in view of his life, so pure, so unselfish, and beneficent; in view of the deepening influence of his ideas, his worth, and his example, is it not meet that he should be remembered in the home of his childhood and early manhood?

Is it not worth while to inquire how a boy, born and brought up on one of the little farms in this town, raised himself to such a height, and came to exert so deep and lasting an influence on the religious thought of our times, and, while forgetting himself, called forth so much love and enthusiasm in his own behalf?

What was the nature of those motives that took him from the little farm, and made him, for fifteen years, the most influential preacher and one of the most active reformers in New England?

Theodore Parker was the youngest of eleven children. The family was poor as regards property, but rich in those abilities and virtues that enabled them to take care of themselves. By industry and economy, the family maintained a respectable position in society.

At an early age, the little boy manifested a strong sympathy for everything that had life, and a great love for the truth. An incident trifling in itself, yet very significant when considered in relation to his after life, will serve to show the fine, instinctive sympathies of the boy, and the nature of that religious influence which his mother almost unconsciously exerted over him. One day, in crossing the field, he came upon a little tortoise; he had often seen the older boys kill them. He raised his stick to strike the creature; but all at once, he says, "something checked my little arm, and a voice said: 'It is wrong.' I held my uplifted stick in wonder at the new emotion, till the tortoise disappeared. I hastened home and told the tale to my mother, and asked her what it was that told me it was wrong. 'Some men call it conscience,' she answered; 'but I prefer to call it the voice of God in the soul of man. If you listen to and obey it, then it will speak clearer and clearer, and always guide you right; but if you turn a deaf ear, and disobey it, then it will fade out, little by little, and leave you all in the dark, and without a guide. Your life depends upon your heeding that little voice.'" Of this event Parker says: "I am sure no event in my life has made so deep and lasting an impression on me." In after years, when a race was persecuted, that same voice was heard, that same arm was uplifted in defence of what others were willing to destroy. Through a busy life, the "voice of God" in the soul of Theodore Parker sounded clearer and clearer, and, in the midst of the Babel-tongued clamor of traditions, superstitions, and political expediency, guided him toward the eternally right and just.

"The law of God was written in his heart." In this we shall find the explanation of his attitude towards tradition and authority. He who hears God in the still, small voice will neither follow nor fear the whirlwind.

Parker's early opportunities for education would not be considered very favorable in these days. After his eighth year, he attended the district school only in winter—not more than fifteen weeks during the year. Yet he was early distinguished as a scholar by his thirst for knowledge and his remarkable memory. There was a scarcity of books for the young in his day, compared with the injurious abundance of to-day.

In his hunger for knowledge, he devoured whatever came in his way; nor was his thirst for knowledge confined to books. The absence of books left him opportunity to observe. Not being compelled to see everything through the printed page, he came in immediate contact with things; these he studied. He observed the stars, the trees, plants, rocks; he approached Nature through the understanding rather then through sympathy or imagination.

As a boy and youth, his conduct and character were without reproach. Even while a boy, his real life was intellectual. He lived more in his few books than in the games of his playmates or the labor of the farm. Rainy days and long winter evenings afforded some opportunity for study. The work of his hands was made to contribute to the increase of knowledge. At twelve he wants a Latin dictionary; to obtain it he picks berries and sells them. He earns four dollars to pay his tuition for one term at the academy in Lexington. At seventeen he begins to teach school in a neighboring district, and the larger portion of the next six years is devoted to teaching.

One day, before he was twenty years old, he left home in the morning without telling any one where he was going. On his return in the evening he told his father that he had entered Harvard College. "But I cannot afford the expense," said his father. "I will stay at home and keep up with my class," was the reply. He did this for a year. He left his home at twenty, carrying with him a hearty and reverent appreciation of the value of that influence that flowed out of his home. In after years, he gave his father and mother, and the labor-compelling necessities of his childhood and early manhood, full credit for the great good he derived from them.

Speaking of his childhood, Parker says: "My early education was not costly, as men count expense by dollars; it was exceeding precious. Great pains were taken with my moral and religious culture. I was taught to respect the instinctive promptings of conscience, to speak the truth without evasion or concealment, to love justice and conform to it, to reverence merit in all men regardless of their rank or reputation, and, above all, I was taught to love and trust the dear God. I was taught self-reliance. Inquiry was encouraged in all directions. In early boyhood I FELT that I was to be a minister." But when the time comes for him to choose his life-work, he finds the profession of the ministry not very inviting. He is attracted toward law as a profession, but he feels that he can never help to shield the guilty nor to aid injustice; he hesitates between the two: he soon comes to feel that he can be more true to his convictions of right in the ministry then in law. Before he decides, he asks himself these questions: "Can you seek what is eternally true, and not be blinded by the opinions of any sect? Can you tell that truth you learn, even when it is unpopular and hated? Can you seek the eternal right, and not be blinded by the statutes and customs of men, and can you declare that eternal right, though it bring you into painful relations with men? Can you represent in your life that truth of the intellect and that right of the conscience?" His confident answer was, "I can." He decides to become a minister. At the age of twenty-four, he enters the Cambridge Divinity School. Here was the fullest opportunity for study and growth. Then, as now, Cambridge Divinity School was catholic. It encouraged thorough inquiry. It had no fears that conscientious truth-seeking would lead the young men toward dangerous heresies. The Faculty had confidence in the motives and aims of the students, and treated their convictions with the utmost respect and their doubts with kindness. There were no traditional or sectarian limitations. The teachers devoted themselves to the religious, not less then the mental, culture of the students. Their examples were not less beneficial than their instruction. Parker filled the days and nights with study. All his energies were directed toward fitting himself for his life-work. He read incessantly; his tenacious memory held all he read: every day, every hour, added to his knowledge. Within a year after his graduation he was married, and settled over the society in West Roxbury.

Heretofore he has been a learner; he is now to begin to teach.

In order to understand his work, or that part of it that he did as a preacher, it will be necessary to glance at the prevailing ideas and tendencies of that sect into which he was born. He inherited the traditions of Unitarianism; but he was destined to be not so much a priest of the old traditions as a prophet of the new dispensation. The great Unitarian or anti-Trinitarian controversy was at an end. The denomination was small, but respectable; its representative men were among the first scholars in the country. As compared with all other sects, it was broad, tolerant, and liberal; and, what was better, it contained within itself certain ideas and tendencies that would make it progressive. It was not a finality. It was susceptible of growth. It represented an essential step from those negations of Calvinism necessitated by the dogma of human depravity, and those affirmations of the reality and trustworthiness of the spiritual faculties by which man is brought into immediate contact with religious truth.

Unitarianism of forty years ago had rejected the doctrine of human depravity, and had begun to affirm and emphasize the dignity and essential integrity, both moral and spiritual, of human nature. It had not come to recognize the sufficiency of the spiritual faculties. The dogma of depravity had necessitated a revelation that could be shown to be both superhuman and supernatural; for a revelation within the limits of a nature that was essentially corrupt could not be relied on. Unitarianism continued to insist upon the necessity of a revelation whose credentials should be miracles; an authority was demanded for spiritual truth.

The Unitarians had denied the tri-personality of God and the deity of Christ, but they affirmed that Jesus was a superhuman and supernatural mediator between God and man. The old dogma of depravity necessitated mediation. Unitarianism had denied the doctrine, but had not yet rejected those opinions to which it gave rise. It had discredited many of the myths of the Old Testament, but clung with an inconsistent tenacity to the miracles of the New. Christ was no longer adored as God, but he was in a sense worshipped as the only son of God; prayers were offered in his name, and blessings were asked for his sake. Jesus was thought to stand, as it were, midway between man and God—not, however, by virtue of those qualities and that spirit which he possessed in common with man, but rather by virtue of those qualities and powers which were peculiar to him. The Unitarian faith placed the Prophet of Nazareth upon a pedestal whose base was superhuman and supernatural.

The liberal faith of forty years ago had not come to recognize and affirm the naturalness and humanness of religion. Hence the continued necessity for a basis—a foundation—upon which it might be supposed to stand. Hence, too, the continued necessity for a faith in a supernatural source from which it might be supposed to be derived.

Unitarians of forty years ago had affirmed the substantial integrity of human nature, but had not recognized the human soul as the source of religion. They insisted that man was endowed with spiritual faculties, but had not attained unto the faith in the trustworthiness and sufficiency of those faculties. Only the first step out of the limitations and negations of Calvinism had been taken. Even the leaders of the Unitarian movement did not foresee that their affirmation regarding human nature would, in the course of time, do away with the necessity for mediation, and bring the human and divine nearer to each other than they had ever been conceived to be by any sect. Theodore Parker himself was, more than any one man in the pulpit, to indicate the direction of the next step; he was to contribute not a little toward the recognition of the fact that spiritual truth was its own authority. Theologians had been wont to accept the spiritual utterances of Jesus on the ground that he worked miracles. The time was rapidly drawing near when the spirituality of Jesus and the reality of his religiousness would be appreciated, in spite of the improbabilities with which they had so long been associated, and upon which they had been thought to depend. The increasing spirituality of the times was rapidly coming to feel that the supreme thing in Jesus was his natural, human religiousness.

At the time that Parker entered upon his work as a preacher, scientific criticism had not been applied in this country; at least to the determination of the genuineness and authenticity of the different books of the New Testament; nor had that grandly religious transcendentalism of which Emerson is the almost ideal representative been applied to the traditional religiousness of the times.

Into the presence of that religion which had been so long associated with tradition and supernaturalism, Theodore Parker brought a natural, earnest, enthusiastic religiousness that was in no way dependent upon Hebrew texts. He was a religious man before he became a theologian. Indeed, his natural religiousness was so hearty and healthy that even the study of theology did not lessen it.

He very naturally emphasized pure religion rather than those accidents with which it had happened to be associated. Deeply conscious that religion, in all its height and depth, was not dependent upon any institution, rite, ceremony, legend, or event, he felt perfectly free to criticise all institutions, creeds, and persons, and he did criticise and deny; but his denials and criticisms were in the interest of affirmation. What had been accepted by others as a source of religion, as a means of revelation, was with him but an accident of religion. It was no easy matter for him to understand others' dependence upon tradition; it was impossible for others to comprehend how he could be a Christian (which he always claimed to be) while discrediting the Christian traditions.

It is to be remembered that the traditional accidents of Christianity, as the miraculous element of the Christian faith, were then considered far more essential by Unitarians than they are to-day by the liberal Orthodox.

Christianity was declared, by the ablest Unitarian preachers, "to be nothing without the miracles." Tendencies so opposite were certain, sooner or later, to lead to an open rupture between the prophet of the new thought and the representatives of the inherited and time-honored opinions. Let us draw a little nearer Mr. Parker. Let us listen to his own words as he discourses upon "The Transient and Permanent in Christianity." On the 19th of May, 1841, he preaches the ordination sermon of Mr. Shackford, in South Boston. His text is: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

We may not understand how a sermon so religious as this was, whose truths are so obvious to us of today, should have disturbed any one. But an acquaintance with this sermon, and the feeling which it aroused, and the results to which it contributed, will help us to realize how rapid and significant has been the movement in religious thought within the last third of a century. A class of sentiments which, thirty-three years ago, disturbed the community, and frightened many whose trembling faith foresaw the destruction of Christianity, has become the commonplace convictions of a majority of liberal pulpits. The main points of the sermon are the following:—

"Jesus of Nazareth believed that the religion he taught would be eternal. His words have become the breath of the good, the hope of the wise, the joy of the pious.

"It is these words that still work wonders to which the first recorded miracles were nothing in grandeur and utility. Nothing appears more fixed and certain than the real Christianity that Jesus taught. But, looking at the history of what men call Christianity, nothing seems more uncertain and perishable. The theological doctrines derived from our fathers seem to have come from Judaism, heathenism, and the caprices of philosophers far more than from the principle and sentiment of Christianity. On the authority of the written word, man was taught to believe impossible legends, to take fiction for fact, an Oriental poem for a grave history.

"Modern criticism is fast breaking to pieces this idol which men have made out of the Scriptures. Almost every sect makes Christianity [he means by 'Christianity' pure spiritual religion] rest on the personal authority of Jesus, and not on the immutable truth of the doctrines themselves. Yet it seems difficult to conceive any reason why moral and religious truths should rest for their support on the personal authority of their revealer any more than the truths of science should rest on the authority of him who made them known.

"Measure Jesus by the world's greatest sons, how poor they are! Try him by the best of men, how little they appear! Exalt him as much as we may, we shall yet come short of the mark. But still was he not our brother? the son of man, as we are? the Son of God, like ourselves?

"In an age of corruption, Jesus stood and looked up to God. There was nothing between him and the Father of all. And we never are Christians as he was the Christ until we worship as Jesus did—with no mediator, with nothing between us and the Father of all."

It will be difficult for us to discover the heresy of this sermon. It is eminently religious; it appeals to religion as a sentiment and life, but not to religion as a set of inherited opinions. It affirms the immediateness of those relations between God and man. It sends the soul, as did Jesus himself, to God. It expresses the conviction that God is as near to man today as at any time in the past; and because of the nearness of God to us, it would do away with those things that so long have stood between the human soul and the Infinite Soul. Yet this sermon marks an era in the life of Theodore Parker. It excited as much criticism as did the address of Mr. Emerson a few years earlier.

Those who had taken only the first step from the worship of Jesus were ready to exclaim, "He has taken away my Lord and Master." Those whose religious faith had been anchored in the letter which kills were not yet in a condition to use the wings of the spirit. There was no want of truly religious men and women, but they had not yet come to separate their religion from an accident of its manifestation. In their thought the Transient and Permanent had been closely associated, if not identified, with each other. Their faith had come to them through the Book, and the Church, and the Christ. His faith was far more real to him than any book or person could be. It was natural and spontaneous, and all the more earnest because of its unconsciousness of the historical channel through which it had come to him. His religion was as much his as was the heart in his bosom. A faith like his is always impatient with that tendency of thought that demands a basis, an authority, for that which is more real than any authority can be.

Notwithstanding his religiousness, and his hearty appreciation of the spirituality and religiousness of Jesus, and notwithstanding his claim of the Christian name, Mr. Parker, after the publication of this discourse, was classed with Voltaire and Paine. Very many of the ministers refused to exchange with him. They are not to be blamed for refusing; they did not, and at that time could not, understand him. In his discrediting of the Transient, they did not recognize his affirmation of the Permanent. His natural, earnest, positive faith, that was unconscious of any external authority, was a phenomenon with which the Church was not familiar. "It is plain," said his contemporaries, "that Mr. Parker is not a Christian, because Christianity is a supernatural and miraculous revelation."

Parker found himself standing nearly alone.

In 1842, he published his Discourses on Matters Pertaining to Religion. This book was affirmative, constructive, and eminently religious.

In the purpose of this work, as expressed in the preface and introduction, we find the aim and purpose of his life. "It is my design," he says in his introduction, "to recall men from the form to the substance, from outward belief to real inward life, from partial theology and its idols to universal religion and its God, from the temples of folly and sin to the sanctuary of the heart, where the still, small voice will never cease to speak. I would show men Religion as she is—fairest of all God's children. I have not sought to pull down, but to build up; to remove the rubbish of human invention from the fair temple of divine truth, that men may enter its shining gates and be blessed forevermore." The aim of this book was the aim of his life. It was to this that he devoted his extensive acquirements, his extraordinary powers. Almost inspired with a religious enthusiasm, he forgot himself and consumed himself in his tireless endeavor to communicate the religiousness of his own soul to his fellow-men. He was not only a representative and mouth-piece of religion—he was a fountain of faith to all who thirsted for the living waters. His religious convictions were not at the mercy of Biblical criticism; they were no more dependent upon texts than is the sunlight dependent upon a theory of light.

The great difference between Parker and his Unitarian brethren was this: With Parker, Christianity was identical with absolute religion. It was natural—native to the human soul.

He applied (very illogically) the personal, official name Christian to those elements of universal and absolute religion that are to be found in the religiousness of Jesus. His own spiritual and moral sense recognized the spirituality of Jesus, and the truth of his spiritual utterances. In the mind of Parker, Christianity, or absolute religion, was human, natural. It no more needed miraculous credentials than the sun needs a voice to announce his rising. It was its own authority, its own evidence, and could have no other. To his spiritual sense spiritual truth was of all truth the most obvious. It bore the same relation to the spiritual faculties that light bears to the eye. It was to this spiritual faculty, this religious sentiment, that he appealed. Most of his contemporaries insisted that Christianity, as the highest conceivable religiousness, was supernatural and superhuman in its origin and manifestation. It was to be accepted upon authority. The teaching of Jesus must be true, because he was sent of God. His miracles were the credentials of his mission. Parker claimed, insisted indeed, that he was a Christian. Many of his contemporaries denied this.

The real question at issue was, What is Christianity? Parker applied the name to the universal element of what was called the Christian religion; those who denied that he was a Christian applied the word to that portion of the Christian religion which distinguished it from other religions. For nearly eighteen hundred years the word Christian had had a local, personal, and historical significance. Parker insisted upon applying and restricting the term to that which was not local, personal, and peculiar; or, in other words, to that which was universal, absolute. To the vast majority of Unitarians, of forty years ago, the personal, historical, peculiar, and supernatural accidents of Christianity were among the essentials of religion; to ignore these elements was to destroy all that was of value in the religion of Jesus. "Christianity is nothing without the miracles," said many of the ministers. Christianity, i.e., absolute religion, has no need of miracles, answered Parker. The religious faith of the many was inseparably associated with a historical person and historical events; to discredit these was to threaten the religion. On the other hand, the strength, intensity, and completeness of Parker's religious convictions raised him above all conscious dependence upon authority. He felt himself so near to God and God so near to him that he never dreamed of any one, not even of Jesus, as standing between him and the Being he loved and worshipped, whose voice he heard in his own soul. It was the inner voice that told him when a boy that it was wrong to kill the tortoise. It was this same inner voice to which he reverently listened, and to whose admonitions and prompting he was religiously obedient.

It was natural that he who felt himself so near to God, who so clearly perceived the right, who so strongly felt the truths of religion, should be impatient with the unwieldly machinery of superhuman supernaturalism. His faith in God, his human sympathy, his confident expectation of immortality, had no need of authority. Unconscious of this need himself, he failed to recognize its necessity in others.

It was this that put him in antagonism with the inherited religious traditions of his times. It was this that shut the Boston pulpits from him until, in January, 1845, a company of men resolved "that Theodore Parker should have a chance to be heard in Boston."

His labors commenced as an experiment. Before the end of the year it was found to be more than a success. He was installed pastor of the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society. In his installation sermon, he gave his idea of the Christian Church. He defined the Christian Church as "a body of men and women united together in common desire of religious excellence, and with a common regard for Jesus of Nazareth, regarding him as the noblest example of morality and religion." He declared that "the Christian Church should be means of reforming the world after the pattern of Christian ideas." It should lead the movement for the public education of the people. "It should lead the civilization of the age." For fifteen years he devoted himself to the realization of his ideal of a church. He wore himself out in his endeavors to create and inspire such a society.

His preaching was practical; his sympathies were broad and active; his love of his fellow-men was deep and strong; he was naturally devout. Every sermon had a purpose, and that purpose was not to amuse or please, but to inspire, to instruct; he appealed to the highest sentiments. He held his thousands, year after year, in Music Hall, not by the arts of oratory, not by an ear-pleasing rhetoric, not by faultless elocution, not by that cheapest of pulpit vices—sensationalism. He held his audience, Sunday after Sunday, and year after year, by his sympathies, by his moral earnestness, by the strength of his convictions, by the reality and naturalness of his religion, by his sincerity and devotion. His aspirations and unselfish living kept him close to God; his human sympathies kept him near the people. He preached out of his life, and reached the lives of others. He spoke out of his heart, and thus kindled others' affections. He preached because he had something to say that he deemed of great value to men. What he believed to be true he gladly proclaimed; what was right he advocated; what he believed to be wrong he denounced. His inspiration was from within. The same voice that the little boy heeded in the field the man obeyed in his study, on the platform, and in the pulpit. Free from personal ambition, neither fearing unpopularity nor desiring fame nor fortune, he was free to obey the voice of God in his soul. This he did until he became a conscience incarnate. He did not devote his energies to the service of a party, or to the creation of a sect. He devoted himself to the service of the poor, the ignorant, and the enslaved. He not only preached philanthropy—he was a philanthropist.

His life-work was religious (he insisted that it was Christian), moral, and humane. His religiousness was so great, his moral feeling so strong, his love of man so earnest, that it could not and did not find expression in the sermon alone. His daily life was full of religion, as was his sermon. He never felt that he had any rights that the poor, the oppressed, the enslaved, were bound to respect. Whoever needed his advice, his service, received it. He sought opportunities for doing good; scholar and student as he was, he lived close to the people. With him culture was not a luxury to be enjoyed, but a means whereby human welfare might be promoted.

I have remarked that Theodore Parker was the embodiment, the incarnation, of conscience; not a political conscience, not a sectarian conscience, not a time-serving conscience, but an absolute conscience, that asks what is right and just, and insists upon the immediate application of the right and just to all the concerns of life. When this moral sense and humane feeling confronts Theodore Parker with the slave power, what will he do? The slave power was the supreme power of the land thirty years ago. It was supreme in politics. Trade and commerce were its servants. The great statesmen were its defenders. The Christian pulpit was its apologist. The religion of the Church declared that it was a divine institution. The Old Testament justified it. Nowhere in the New Testament was it condemned. The commerce of the North was largely interested in its prosperity. Manufacturing interests were largely dependent upon its products. Politicians sought position by its defence, and insisted that upon it depended the preservation of the Union and the very existence of the Republic. The Constitution recognized it. The laws of Congress and the measures of the government protected its interests, and provided for its extension.

In 1850, the Fugitive Slave Bill was passed. It was made a criminal offence, punishable with fines and imprisonment, to give a meal of victuals to a man or woman whose only offence was that they or their fathers had been kidnapped on the coast of Africa. As the slave trade was languishing, and the slave traders found their occupation gone, they turned their attention to kidnapping those who had regained their liberty. Fugitives, not from justice, but from monstrous injustice, were hunted within the shadow of Bunker Hill. There were but few to raise their voice against the great wrong. The mass of the people worshipped policy, expediency, the Constitution and its defender,—the Senator with an ambition, who was to be succeeded by the Senator with a conscience.

But there were a few who worshipped the absolute right, who were loyal to the higher law. However sacred, however profitable the institution was to others, to them it was wrong; this was their reason for insisting upon its immediate abolition. Prominent among these was Theodore Parker. The fugitives from slavery made his house their home; he was their friend; he aided them in every way in his power; he did his utmost to open the eyes of the people to the enormity of slavery; he endeavored to arouse a moral feeling and a humane sentiment; he lectured throughout the entire North; he devoted his time, his labor, his culture, to the service of the oppressed, and to the cause of freedom; he ceases to buy books, that he may have more means to devote to the cause of the slave. He does this at a time when the doing of it is denounced as a crime; he prefers the eternally right to time-serving expediency; his conscience will tolerate no compromises with the wrong; his moral insight becomes prophetic; he foresees the great struggle by faith; he catches sight of the sure result; he wrote to a friend: "Whoever lives to see 1876 will see America free from slavery."

It is impossible to measure the influence of an incarnate conscience and sympathy in times like those of twenty years ago. It by no means follows that the man who consults his conscience is infallible; but, other things being equal, he who is free to ask what is right, and to insist upon the right, will be nearer the truth than he who is the servant of sects, parties, and personal ambition.

When Charles Sumner was elected to the Senate of the United States, Parker wrote him, "Be the Senator with a conscience;" and he was. It was his conscience that made him a man among things, a moral force among tools. It was this same thing—conscience—that made Theodore Parker the man he was, and enabled him to exert the influence which he did exert. His moral sense and moral feeling made him an obedient servant of truth; his humane feeling made him the servant of his fellow-men; his aspiration made him a child of God. His entire life was one of glad service. He lived not a moment for himself. We may well believe that his life was not an easy one. It was crowded with incessant labor. His sympathy and conscience placed him in antagonism with all laws, customs, habits, that in any way harmed mankind. He was indifferent to nothing that affected human welfare. He was the uncompromising enemy of mammon, slavery, demagogism, in politics, and dishonesty in trade. He was the hearty friend of the oppressed, the poor, the ignorant, the criminal. Of course, his motives were misrepresented, his character was assailed, he was censured by those who ought to have been his friends. Notwithstanding the purity of his private life, the obvious unselfishness of his motives, his devotion to the cause of humanity, his unhesitating obedience to the dictates of conscience, his loyalty to the religion of Jesus, he was called infidel, atheist, blasphemer. Prayers were offered in his behalf. The Lord was informed of his heresies, and it was suggested that if He did not see fit to convert him that He would take him out of this world.

That Theodore Parker should make many bitter enemies was inevitable. No man was better fitted to make friends of those with whom he intimately associated than he. He was thoroughly sincere, genuine, affectionate, with all a woman's tenderness; but these very qualities made him intolerant of insincerity and duplicity. His tenderness and human sympathy made him bitter toward those who in any way caused suffering; his sympathy with the persecuted made him hate the persecutor. The causes of the antagonistic feeling which he aroused are to be found both in himself and in the relation of his natural religiousness to the inherited theology of his times. Between the prophet of the soul and the priests of tradition hostility is inevitable. Parker's strong feelings did not help him to discriminate; for want of discriminations his denunciations were often unjust. His own individuality and personality were so strong that it was no easy task to put himself in another's place.

His moral and religious convictions were so positive, so deeply rooted in his own being, that it was impossible for him to look upon them from another's stand-point. They were of the nature of intuitions.

His humane sympathies and enthusiasm, in behalf of ideas that constituted the motive power of his life, took him out of that many-sided, philosophical meditation that sees so much truth in the errors of the world, and so much error in its accepted truths, that it comes at last to feel but little difference between truth and error.

It was inevitable that his attitude toward religion should, for a time at least, be misunderstood. In fact, his faith was affirmative and constructive; in appearance it was critical, negative, and destructive.

Whoever accepted religious truth upon authority very naturally felt that his truth was denied when the authority was questioned. Parker taught that the relation of man to God was immediate. He would put the hand of every human being in that of the Father. He had a faith in the natural, spiritual faculties of man, by whose exercise mankind could apprehend and appreciate spiritual truths without the cumbersome machinery of the supernatural.

Conscious of the all-sufficingness of the spiritual faculties in himself, he did not always treat traditional appliances with that deference that a less earnest and less religious man would have done.

The source of Theodore Parker's influence is to be sought in himself, in what he was, and also in the relation of his ideas to his times; in the naturalness and healthfulness of his religious sentiment, in the clearness of his moral perception, and in the strength of his moral feeling, in the breadth and heartiness of his human sympathies. His personal religion kept him close to God; his love of his fellow-men made him a companion and a brother of all to whom he could be of service. His knowledge was extensive. He carried the substance of libraries stored in his capacious brain; but his mind was so vigorous, the organizing capacity of his mind was so energetic, that he was not burdened with his acquisitions. His intensely practical aims utilized all knowledge. To him knowledge was not an ornament but an instrument.

His mental tendencies were constructive. He did not originate. He was deficient in poetic sensibility. He looked out upon art, science, literature, institutions, the external world, through the logical understanding and the moral sense. He valued things in proportion as they contributed to human welfare. He was himself a man of uses. He felt that his great talents and abilities were given him to use for others' good, and not for his own aggrandizement. Never was a man more unselfish, more free from all self-seeking. He lived in his work—and that work was to show, by word and deed and life, that religion is real; not of yesterday but of to-day, not a product of tradition but an offspring of the soul. He made religion beautiful and desirable to those to whom it had been made distasteful. He set religion free from the limitations of a Person, a Book, a superhuman Revelation. He affirmed and emphasized its naturalness, humanness, and spirituality. There are thousands who to-day would be without religion, strangers to its realities, had it not been for the transcendent religiousness of Theodore Parker.

Though dead, he yet lives in the grateful memories of those to whose welfare he contributed.

The time is not far distant when the intelligent and religious will recognize the moral grandeur of his character, the purity and beneficence of his life.

A HARTFORD BRICK-LAYER let fall a brick from a fourth story upon the shoulder of a man passing beneath. The man paused for a moment, and then with a voice trembling with emotion, shouted: "Hi! you dropped a brick." The brick-layer, who was looking over the edge of the scaffold to see if the brick was damaged, was pleased to find that it was not hurt, and cheerfully answered: "All right; you needn't mind bringing it up."

[For THE INDEX.]

THE RECTORSHIP OF GLASGOW UNIVERSITY.

BY A GLASGOW GRADUATE.

The announcement in this country that Ralph Waldo Emerson has been nominated for the Lord Rectorship of Glasgow University has created considerable interest, and there may be some of the readers of THE INDEX who would be glad to learn something of the nature of the office, and the manner of appointment to it. Having taken a share in these election contests more than once, to gratify these readers will be to me something like the luxury to the old soldier of "fighting his battles o'er again," as he describes them to his friends and neighbors around his quiet fireside.

Since the year 1862, when many changes were introduced into the administration of the Scottish Universities, in consequence of the recommendations of a royal commission appointed to inquire into their condition, all the Universities of Scotland have the privilege of appointing Lord Rectors, who are, ex officio, presidents of the University Council—the highest ruling power in the several colleges,—and have besides the right of nominating another member of council—the council in each University consisting of eight or nine members. Previous to 1862, the students of Glasgow alone had the appointment of a Rector in their hands—at which time the Rectorship was an honor merely, the only recognized duties of the office being the delivery of an address to the students, and the offer of a prize for an essay on some theme selected by the Lord Rector. And it is very much in this light still that the office is regarded. For although considerable power now attaches to the office, the gentlemen selected to fill it, usually living at a distance and being engrossed in other duties, seldom attend the meetings of council except on the great occasion of their delivering their inaugural addresses. But the honor of the Glasgow Rectorship has long been recognized as not the least valuable among those which await distinguished men, not in letters merely, although the majority of Rectors have been literary men, but in various walks of life. One of the female novelists of the last generation—Mrs. Trollope or one of her contemporaries—playfully remarked in one of her works that the great object of her ambition was the Rectorship of Glasgow University.

As before remarked, the appointment lies in the hands of the students, and the contests are conducted wholly by them. There exist among them two Clubs —a Conservative and a Liberal,—which each nominate a candidate, and work hard to secure his return. Occasionally, a minority in one or both of these clubs, dissatisfied with the nominees, or having some other cause of quarrel with their respective majorities, will "bolt," and form a third Independent Club, whose programme is the selection of a candidate on the ground of merit alone, irrespective of any consideration regarding his political views or standing. Strong efforts have at different times been made to ensure the permanency of this third organization; but up to the time at which the writer was connected with the University, all these had failed. But it is of this club, as we learn from the papers, that Mr. Emerson is the nominee. We do not know who his competitors are, and cannot therefore speculate on his chances of success. But if he is returned on election day, it will be a most signal proof of his popularity with the students, as the party who are running him are, by a long way, inferior to the other two in organization, resources, and power to influence the voting.

And a large majority of votes Mr. Emerson must have, if he is to be successful; although, were he a Conservative, the nominee of the Conservative Club, it would not even be necessary to have a majority at all, strange as this may appear. For the voting is conducted after the old Roman fashion of voting by tribes. The students, according to their place of birth, are divided into four nations. The majority of votes in each nation determines the vote of the whole nation; and as the nations are by no means equal in numbers, some of them more than doubling others, it is easy to see that a majority of nations does not imply a majority of votes. But the Conservatives do not need, and seldom succeed in their attempt to obtain, even a majority of nations. For, in case of a tie, two nations against two, the casting vote lies with the Chancellor of the University, the Duke of Montrose; a staunch Conservative, who never fails his party in their need. And so it comes to pass that, although the Conservatives are almost always in a minority at Glasgow, three-fourths of the time they succeed in electing their man, through bending all their energies to secure a majority in the two least populous nations, and then leaving the result to their Providence, the Duke of Montrose. The Liberals, and of course the Independents too, can only elect their candidate by securing a majority in three nations. So, it will be seen, Mr. Emerson has to fight against odds.

The constituency who are to decide whether Mr. Emerson shall be Rector of Glasgow number about thirteen or fourteen hundred, composed of the following classes: Divinity students, eighty to one hundred in number, preparing for the ministry of the Established Church of Scotland, who have all previously passed through the Arts Course; young men over twenty-one years of age, conservative to a man. Probably not one of these will vote for Mr. Emerson (on the ground of his being the nominee of the Independent Club), although the majority of them will know his works well, and admire them warmly. One hundred and fifty to two hundred law students, mostly liberals, averaging in age about twenty-one years, as do also the medical students, who number four or five hundred. In our day, the Independents were drawn chiefly from the medical students, owing solely, however, to the accidental fact that the leaders of the club were popular medical students, who managed to raise a class jealously against the Conservative Club, on the plea that it was subject to the dictation of the divinity students. The Arts students (classical, philosophical, and scientific), the youngest being for the most part under twenty-one, and also the most numerous, about six hundred, consisting largely of candidates for the dissenting churches, who receive their divinity training elsewhere, possess a decided liberal majority. Although out of the whole constituency two or three hundred, and sometimes, where there is a great disparity between the nominees, a larger number, may vote for the candidate they judge the worthiest; yet the great majority may be safely counted on not to break their party ties.

The election usually takes place three or four weeks after the beginning of the session or term in November, and during that time the officers and leading partisans of the three organizations are busily engaged in delivering speeches and distributing handbills in prose and verse, setting forth the merits of their candidate, and criticising his opponents. All through the college grounds canvassers are to be seen almost fighting over some verdant freshman, whom they are cramming with the wildest cock-and-bull stories respecting the characters and achievements of the various nominees. No doubt, at the coming election, many a green youth, from some pious home in the puritan Highlands, will be frightened till his hair is ready to stand on end with tales of the enormities in word and act of the infidel Emerson. We remember when trying to secure the vote of such a one for Bulwer Lytton, as against Lord Shaftesbury, we found it of no avail to expatiate on the literary merit of our candidate, for some one had whispered in his ear that Bulwer had been known to read the newspapers on "Sabbath." When we saw how the land lay, we are afraid on that occasion we made Lytton more of a saint, and Shaftesbury more of a libertine, than the facts warranted.

The students look to the Rector they elect to repay them for the appreciation they have shown for him by taking pains to make the address he delivers a masterpiece of its kind. The subject of this need not be education. In fact, the students think they hear so much of this that they would rather any other subject were chosen; and, were they consulted, would undoubtedly indicate their wish to hear each man dilate on the subject which he has made his special study in life.

In fine, we may say that we shall feel as glad as any American can to see Mr. Emerson inducted into the Lord Rector's chair of our ancient alma mater.

PRESIDENT ELIOT'S ADDRESS ON CHURCH TAXATION.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION, BOSTON, MAY 27.

I have lately spent a few delightful weeks in that glorious old country from which, but a few generations ago, our ancestors brought hither most of those qualities which we now call our virtues, and some of those which Englishmen are pleased to think our vices. One never knows how much he loves his country until he is parted from it, or understands how jealous he can be of her honor, how sensitive to her failings and missteps, until he is surrounded by foreign critics, whose keen appreciation of her merits and defects is not influenced by filial affection.

While I was in this sensitive frame of mind, I heard that a serious proposition to tax churches was under discussion in Massachusetts. May I tell you how that proposition struck me, when it came to my ears on the other side of the Atlantic? I can speak on the subject with disinterestedness and freedom, because I am a layman, and, more than that, a layman many years of whose life have been devoted to studying and teaching natural science. It struck me with astonishment that this proposition should be maintained in Massachusetts of all places in the world—a State which was founded and built on the Church, a State which owes its mental and moral characteristics and its material prosperity to seven generations of church-loving people. Was built, did I say? Massachusetts is built to-day upon the churches, as all free States are. There are people who hope more for the future of States from secular education than from religion. But it was the Protestant church, the church of the individual conscience, which gave rise to the common school, and not the common school to the Church.

At various times in our history we have relied upon this or that inferior bulwark, to the neglect of the one real security of free institutions. We have pinned our faith upon a written constitution, or believed that the ballot was the great creator and teacher of freemen, or trusted in diffused primary education. Gradually we have learned that these are not the inner citadel of liberty, but only its outworks. The inner citadel is an upright, self-reliant, robust national character; and among the builders of that citadel none is more important than the Church. Massachusetts has had in it "a property and spirit hastily to get up and spread," as Bacon says of a grain of mustard seed. What is this spirit?

When Massachusetts taxes churches she will turn her back in scorn upon her own history. As we read the Proverbs, it is a foolish man that despiseth his mother.

The Church has a public as well as a private function. It should be not only protected, but honored and fostered by the State—honored by the glad acknowledgment that it is essential to the life of the State, and fostered by a well-guarded exemption from taxation, which amounts only to this, that the State abstains from applying any portion of the income of church property to other than religious uses.

The religious use is preëminently a public use, and no part of the income of property which a former generation or the present generation has devoted forever to this particular public use should be diverted by the State to other public uses. That is the real significance of the exemption of any endowment from taxation. This exemption is a perfectly unobjectionable mode of giving government support, for it fosters public spirit instead of repressing it, works automatically, needs no special legislation, and does not trammel the independent action of the associations aided.

One often hears it urged now-a-days that the State should do nothing but protect life, liberty, and property. My friends, that is a great deal more than a free State can do without the help of the Church as a moulder of private and national character. There is no innate virtue in laws and constitutions; they are no wiser than the people who made them, and they do not execute themselves, but need honest people to execute them.

I noticed that the facts and illustrations used to support the doctrine that churches should be taxed were mostly drawn from the rich towns and cities of the Commonwealth, not from the poor country villages. The advisability of taxing churches does not seem to suggest itself until the community gets very rich, until its territory is at a great price per square foot. Surely this rich and generous Boston does not mean to act as if she put her material wealth above her intellectual and moral worth. There are things which are worth more to a city or a nation than all its taxable property.

Great men, great deeds, great memories of noble times,—these are the springs of wealth and honor; these are what a city or a nation may worthily be content to live for. Underlying this proposition to tax churches, is there not an opinion the opposite of this, an undefined belief that property is the real basis of the State? I recommend to you as a subject of one of your next winter debates this pregnant sentence of Emerson's: "The reliance on property, including the reliance on governments which protect it, is a want of self-reliance."

We are living at a time which will hereafter be known as a remarkable period of many and great endowments. Millions of private property in this country are every year devoted to public uses of religion, education, and charity. I am rejoiced to see that this Union is getting endowed. These endowments are doing good work for the present generation, and are likely to do nothing but good to many generations to come. Yet there is in the public mind a jealousy of endowments, as if they did harm, or threatened to become harmful. We have not waited to be hurt, but have cried out with apprehensions of hurt. We frequently read sneers and flings at these benefactors of the public who, living or dying, consecrate their money to religious, educational, or charitable uses. Sometimes the injury gets beyond words, as when one branch of the Massachusetts Legislature voted the other day that the barren island where Agassiz established, at the cost of his life, a summer school of natural history should be taxable. We have not time now to go into the question of the use and abuse of endowments; but let me call your attention to a single fact. I am persuaded that the taxation of endowments, among which churches are of course included, would be a long step toward the centralization of powers in government. That is a direction in which we have already gone quite far enough during the past thirteen years.

I have spoken of the Church as if there were but one church; and perhaps you have said to yourselves, There are many churches, some true and some false. By the Church I mean no particular church, but the sum of all the churches—Jewish and Christian, Protestant, Greek, and Catholic, Puritan and Anglican. By the Church I mean this aggregate of religious institutions, which, however different in other respects, are alike in this,—that in all of them men are taught to be pure, gentle, just, loving, and reverent.

We all know people who think that their own church pleases God and deserves well of the State, but that their neighbor's church does the devil's work, and is prejudicial to the State. In order to embarrass their neighbor's church they are willing to have their own burdened. Some years ago, the common punishment for misdemeanors at Harvard was to make a deduction from the offender's marks for scholarship, whereby he suffered in his standing when ranked with his competitors who had received no such deduction.

One day, a certain amiable and learned professor, who never could keep order in his lecture room, lost patience with his turbulent class, and exclaimed: "Gentlemen, I shall certainly have to give you a deduction all round!" That is precisely the kind of discipline by which some of our Evangelical brethren would willingly see the State attempt to check the growth of the Roman Catholic Church.

If we recall for a moment the fierce persecutions, bloody wars, wholesale confiscations, foul internal diseases, social and political revolutions, and whirlwinds of scepticism through which the Romish Church has come bravely down to these our days, I think we shall agree that that vigorous organization will bear quite as much discipline of the kind proposed as any other branch of the Christian Church. It can probably stand a deduction all round. After all, is it reasonable that the Protestants of this country should be very much afraid of one-tenth their number of Catholics?

Some theorists maintain that churches are, to be sure, necessary, but that the community would be better off if churches were fewer and poorer. In the complete absence of experience to support this assertion, let us not try rash experiments with the vital parts of the body politic, particularly if we have no better motive than a desire to increase the tax gatherer's resources. Even civil liberty is not an end in itself, but a means of developing noble human character. The work of churches is a direct work upon human character. Hear Channing upon this matter: "I proceed to show that civil or political liberty is little worth, but as it springs from, expresses, and invigorates [this] spiritual freedom. I account civil liberty as the chief good of States, because it accords with, and ministers to, energy and elevation of mind." Young men, seek always, by every means within your reach, in your churches, in this Union, and in your daily work, this spiritual freedom, this energy and elevation of mind. In so doing you build well, not only for your own lives, but for that of the nation.—Boston Journal.

TAXING ENDOWMENTS.

President Eliot, of Harvard College, improved the opportunity offered by his address on the Young Men's Christian Union anniversary to express his opposition to the proposal to tax church property, including also other classes of endowment property. His argument does not read like his former one against the establishment of a National University, which was fed from the largest thoughts on the freest action of the people. Now he urges that, as the State owes such a debt to the Church, it ought in return to exempt all forms of the property of the latter from taxation; and inasmuch as to the Church we are indebted for schools, educational institutions should remain intact from the tax levy. The argument is sentimental more than rational, albeit the sentiment is the strong one of an educated and elevated mind, which cannot break through the trammels of traditional reverence to get at the rugged desire of all men for an equal distribution of burdens and privileges together. When President Eliot hints of a decay of popular respect for religion and education, because of the demand that each shall be self-sustaining, he obviously confesses his fears that both require the protection of the State in order to perpetuate their vigor. When he dreads the centralization of power as the alternative of the requirement that all kinds of property shall be taxed alike, it must be because he regards favoritism as the best protection, and allows reverence to get the better of a living sense of equality. It is no argument against the taxation of churches and universities that they are entitled to exemption for the good they have done. That very good it is not impossible to direct into selfish channels.

No one who advocates equal taxation can be justly charged with lack of respect for any of the moral forces which much of the exempted property now signalizes and represents. People who pay taxes themselves may be profoundly religious, and yet insist that religious endowments in a free country shall be taxed. Some two hundred millions of exempted property forms the very broad and solid basis of their demand. They see in such taxation the very reverse of what President Eliot sees, the resolute distribution of privilege instead of its concentration. Freedom to endow ought to be a better thing than the endowments themselves. Were the endowments of Harvard University otherwise directed, they would have to bear their share of the common burden. In the name of religion and morality it is possible to disguise many a project that means simply property and power. Let one interest go clear of public obligation, and another sets up the same demand. Church property and university property that is duly taxed, and thus placed on a legal level with all other classes of property, will retain more of the popular character, and become less invested with the prerogatives of a separated power, if those who hold it or contribute to it are compelled to care for it still as a personal thing. It is possible to cherish every one of the reverential sentiments of President Eliot for education and religion, and still advocate the placing of the worldly interests of both on the same footing with all the rest. There is no need of controverting his sentiments in order to oppose his argument. The conviction is steadily growing that the healthiest treatment for the church and the college in a free society is to leave them entirely to individual care and affection. They will suffer far more from the decay of this than they could from the refusal of the State to take them under its special protection.—Boston Post, May 30.

MAN'S UNSELFISH FRIEND.

Haydenville furnishes another incident worthy of a prominent place in the history of this flood. Colonel Joel Hayden, one of the sons of the late Lieutenant-Governor Hayden, owns a noble dog of the Mastiff and St. Bernard species. He has for a long time been a village favorite, and a pet of the school children, who are taught near the Hayden residence. He was as punctual at their recesses as the foremost boy. The little ones could tie his tail with blue ribbon, wind their jump-ropes all about him, and throw him upon the green a captive; send him to fetch the stick, push him off the bank into the river, harness him up and run the streets with switch in hand; in fact, do anything with him; but Bose was ever their close friend and protector. It is said of him that he had a special liking for little girls, and that one of his greatest favorites was the little Birmingham girl who was buried to-day. A pat from her hand was enough to seemingly repay him for waiting until school was out, when he would frolic as long as she felt in the mood. But he had another friend, Mr. Ira Bryant, the father of Mrs. Colonel Hayden, an elderly gentleman, something over sixty years of age. He was delighted to be with him, uneasy when Mr. Bryant was away, and always, when he could, accompanied him upon his walks about the village. Mr. Bryant was lost in the disaster, and so were many of the dog's friends. It is said no human being ever expressed a deeper sense of sadness than he. His movements, even in the bustle and confusion, were noticeable. He would go to the schoolhouse on Sunday, but come almost directly home. He intruded himself upon the domain of the family, was in every part of the house sniffing about. An old pair of boots of Mr. Bryant's received his repeated attention, as did articles of clothing. Sunday afternoon he started out, and followed the searchers for bodies on the meadow lands. This forenoon he was seen on Miller's flats pawing in the sand, which caused an inquiry, and when he was visited it was found he had dug quite a trench. In this excavation the cause of the creature's vigorous efforts and his barking was explained. There were the lower portions of a man's limbs, the toes of the boots being upturned. They could hardly have been more than half-way exposed to view when the dog discovered them.

The next half hour revealed the form of Mr. Bryant. As the workmen prosecuted their digging around the body, the dog lay down at their feet. As the face was exposed, he seemed for a second overjoyed, but when a cloth was wrapped around the rigid form and the removal was begun, the noble creature seemed bowed with grief, and followed sullenly the little party home. Diligent search, of course, had been made for these remains. It is hardly possible any human being would have found the imbedded corpse.—Journal.

Poetry.

SUMMER DAYS.

O gladness of sweet summer days that will not leave off singing!
A passion softened into peace, fresh joy forever bringing
To children, mad with mirth, who seem so tireless fond of playing,
To erring souls, all tempest-tossed, for whom the Christ is praying.

A breath from Adam's paradise the careless breeze is flinging;
An echo from an angel's harp a joyous bird is singing.
Earth lieth still in restfulness, save passing thrills a-quiver,
As tangled sunbeams knit and break across a mighty river.

Between the tangle of the leaves the broken sunshine dances,
While close beside it on the grass the shade its light enhances;
A wealth of fragrance weighs the air, so subtly sweet pervading
That we forget the gentle flowers, whose life it is, are fading.

Oh, earth to us is very sweet, when on her children smiling;
With charming wiles, in varied moods, our human hearts beguiling.
"Sleep soft," she whispers, when we rest; or, "Wake with me to singing;"
And in our hearts her loving call will never leave off ringing.

—New York Tribune.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 6.

Jackson Bros., $1; M. H. Duley, $3; Rowland Connor, $3; Richard Scales, $1; Geo. Young, $3; Perry Thayer, 75 cts.; L. E. Stratton, 75 cts.; A. H. French, $3; Nathaniel T. Allen, $3; C. W. Seaver, $3; Oliver A. Bailey, $2.25; Mary A. Ross, $3.15; H. Birney Thomas, $5; A. R. Hincher, $1.50; W. C. Little, $3; R. D. Israel, $1; Southard Potter, $1; Henry A. Dean, $1; Monroe Carpenter, $3; W. A. Whiting, $3; A. B. Tuttle, $4; Z. L. Hungerford, $4.50; H. G. Gale, $3; H. Lockwood, $3; L. A. Bigelow, $3; S. Wilkinson, $1.50; Alvin Hoyt, $3; R. W. Abbot, $3; J. M. Holmes, $3; F. French, $3; P. L. Watson, $1.35; Daniel Powers, $5; G. E. Corbin, $4.50; W. E. Shepard, $16; P. B. Sibley, $5; W. Sharman, $1; R. McIntosh, $1; W. L. Taylor, $3; John Carew, $3; C. L. Cassin, $3; Mrs. Benj. Cummings, $30; G. H. Foster, $13.59; A. W. Stevens, $10; J. L. Whiting, $25; J. T. Brady, $10; James L. Angel, $1; W. Greene, $70; Milford Terras, 60 cts.; W. W. Grant, 50 cts.; R. E. Hallock, 15 cts.; Theo. W. Robbins, 75 cts.; Jas. H. Sherwood, 50 cts.; Abbie L. Stevens, $1.50; Cash, $5.96; Minna Blair, 25 cts.; Geo. H. Barton, 75 cts.; J. S. Ketchum, 25 cts.; Robt. Avery, 15 cts.; Mary A. Wellman, 50 cts.; R. A. Skues, 10 cts.; T. M. Lamb, 50 cts.; Jos. E. Peck, 25 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JUNE 11, 1874.

GLIMPSES.

John Weiss goes down in the Boston Directory as "F. R." lecturer; which, being interpreted, signifieth "Free Religious." Lest any fat-witted individual should sound the alarm of a "new sect," this joke on the Directory man is solemnly labelled in due form.

Rev. Charles Montgomery advertises his gospel preaching with the announcement: "Turn or Burn, Sinner! Which shall it be? If you do not turn to God, you must burn throughout eternity." It is no novelty in cookery to teach that—

Without frequent turning,
No cake escapes burning.

In a recent "Allocution," the Pope recommended his cardinals to implore the mercy of "the Immaculate Virgin, whose prayers to her Son have in some sort the nature of a command"! Considering that her Son is the Second Person of the Trinity, one is tempted to conjecture that some important discovery is about to be made in the science of Mariolatry.

A subscriber in Missouri writes that the "indignation of the fanatics" has been aroused in his town by the distribution of the "Impeachment of Christianity," and adds: "The chief fanatic of the place has declared that the man who wrote the 'Impeachment' will most certainly go to hell." What a virtuous pastime it is to "deal damnation round the land"! Is it not about time to make a new "deal"?

Professor E. S. Morse, of Salem, a well-known advocate of the evolution philosophy, has received an appointment as instructor on mollusca at the Anderson School of Natural History at Penikese Island. The younger Agassiz is also believed to favor the same philosophy. On whose shoulders is to descend the mantle of his illustrious father as "defender of the faith," if Penikese is thus delivered over to the enemy?

The Young Men's Christian Association of Boston have issued cards with this legend: "Do you, as an Evangelical Christian, realize the activity of the friends of Infidelity, Irreligion, and Free Religion in Boston? They seek the very life-blood of the young, from the Christian homes of New England, now resident in this city. Faneuil Hall is open Wednesday evenings, for religious services. Will you help to crowd it to overflowing? We invite you to attend with an unconverted friend. Reader, if you are out of Christ, come! Pass this to your friend."

A queer old satire, called the "Shyp of Fooles," has just been republished in Edinburgh in the English metrical version of Alexander Barclay. It illustrates the period immediately preceding the Reformation, and the first edition of Barclay was printed by Pynson in 1509. In this curious performance we find what is now the slang use of "mighty" as an adverb anticipated thus:—

"Some thynke them gode, iust, and excellent, Myghty stronge, and worthy of permynence, etc."

This is one more illustration of the fact that modern slang is frequently a survival of the good usage of other days.

The Constitution of the American Missionary Association, which was incorporated in 1849 and is one of the largest missionary bodies in active operation, states its doctrinal basis as follows: "By evangelical sentiments we understand, among others, a belief in the guilty and lost condition of all men without a Savior; the Supreme Deity, Incarnation, and Atoning Sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the only Savior of the world; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, in order to salvation; the immortality of the soul; and the retributions of the judgment in the eternal punishment of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous."

A writer in the New York World estimates the "Cost of a Sot" to the community. He considers that boys very rarely come under the influence of liquor before the age of fifteen years. At this age he reckons that each boy has cost his family and the State, at a low figure, fully $5,000. If a boy becomes a drunkard at eighteen, his chances are good for becoming a pauper at thirty and for dying at thirty-five; in which case, calculating the loss of his labor for seventeen years and the loss of twenty-seven years more of which he deprives the community by dying before his time, the total loss to the community is put at $37,648. If at thirty he had also become a felon, this loss is increased to $38,132. Such calculations may only approximate the truth; yet they are enough to startle even those who consider intemperance in its economic relations alone.

A paper usually so sensible as the Detroit Tribune, which stands high among the Western dailies in point of influence and character, can reason in a most undemocratic way in favor of "recognizing God in the Constitution." The argument is of no value except as an indication of the progress making by the Christian Amendment party. The Tribune thus expatiates on the beauties of their plan:—

"We cannot conceive how the simple acknowledgment of the existence and government of a Supreme Being trenches in any objectionable manner upon the religious liberty or conviction of any one. The number of those who do not believe in a God must be very small, if indeed there be any at all, and we see no reason why the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the people should be refused its simplest expression in deference to the views of an exceedingly small minority—if any such there be—who may choose to assert their total disbelief. The latter are in no possible sense bound by any such expression. In every part of the Constitution except its preamble, the adoption of the views of a majority compels the minority to be absolutely governed by the prevailing opinion. But in the case of the preamble no such fact exists. No man is obliged to square his conduct to its declarations. It does not touch his utmost freedom of thought or action."

It is the Western Methodist, not The Index, that writes in this reckless style about one of the reverend and ornamental officials whom the whole country is taxed to support: "Chaplain Sunderland, of Washington city, is a sort of heavenly wire-puller. He excels that North Pole prayer-builder, his predecessor, Chaplain Newman. It seems that, somewhere in the funeral services of Senator Sumner, Chaplain Sunderland ventured to ask blessings upon the officers of the government, and then, on the way toward Boston to the burial, it occurred to the distinguished petitioner to the Throne of Grace that he had forgotten the Vice-President. No doubt the Lord would have overlooked any little omission like that, but Sunderland's prayer was directed to the newspapers as well as to heaven; indeed, possibly, rather more toward the press than the Throne. And, ruminating upon the look of the thing in print, rather than expecting an answer from the skies, Chaplain Sunderland telegraphed horizontally to Washington city to the printers to type in the Vice-President. Whether he sent in the same supplementary petition vertically in such way as to overtake the New Jerusalem message is not known."

A writer in the Diocesan Record, of Vicksburg, Miss., thus accounts for the languishing condition of the Episcopal Church in that region, which it has been proposed to remedy by appointing an Assistant Bishop: "The fact is that there is a marked decadence in that class of the population among whom our institutions once flourished, and these who are left, from being the wealthiest, are fast becoming the poorest people in the country. And it is the worst kind of poverty, for it is mingled with pride. They are being annually reduced lower and lower by an effort to maintain their old manner of life, are being harassed by hostile legislation and pitiless creditors, and annoyed so by thriftless laborers that they are hardly to be reached by the moral suasion of the Gospel. The truth is that many of them think the issue of the war gave them just grounds of quarrel with Almighty God, and many, if not most of them, are disposed to indulge this spirit, and as a general rule take little or no interest in any kind of religion. Again, go where you will, through the section where these people live, and where once elegance and opulence had its abode, now ruin, dilapidation and desolation meet the eye on every side. It is in this state of things that our difficulties lie, and not in a lack of Bishops."

PRESIDENT ELIOT ON CHURCH TAXATION.

President Eliot, of Harvard College, made an address at the anniversary of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, on May 27, which deserves especial attention in these pages. He chose for his subject the proposed taxation of church property; and his remarks derive a peculiar claim to attention from the speaker's high position as head of the oldest and best university of the country. It were to be wished that his great influence had been thrown on the side of equity and religious freedom; but no man's influence can permanently postpone the triumph of a righteous cause in a land where the people think for themselves, and have the power of embodying their thought in legislative form. Being anxious that our readers should see the arguments on both sides of this as of all other questions which are discussed in The Index, we publish President Eliot's address in another column, and now make the following comments upon it.

1. "I can speak on the subject with disinterestedness and freedom," says President Eliot, "because I am a layman, and, more than that, a layman many years of whose life have been devoted to studying and teaching natural science." It is true that the fact of his being a layman may free him from the peculiar prejudices of the clerical profession; but thousands of laymen, nevertheless, are so strongly prejudiced in favor of the churches to which they belong that the mere fact of not being a clergyman is no sufficient guarantee of impartiality. There is no reason to consider those who sustain the churches as any less biassed in their favor than those who administer them. Furthermore, President Eliot is the head of an institution possessing millions of dollars of exempted property, and having the strongest conceivable interest in perpetuating its own privileges; and it is not at all disrespectful to him to say that it is far from probable that his mind should be wholly uninfluenced or unwarped by a consideration which would disqualify him for sitting as judge or juror in a case involving this question. The exemption of ecclesiastical, charitable, and educational institutions from taxation rests on the same statute; and the abolition of tax-exemption by a repeal of this statute would affect them all alike. It is a mark of sagacity rather than of disinterestedness to defend the privileges of Harvard College indirectly by ostensibly defending the similar privileges of the churches. A good general will not underrate the importance of any position which commands his own; and the wisdom of appointing President Eliot to his high post is now conspicuously shown by his prompt, shrewd, and vigorous defence of a policy which he believes, though we do not, to be vitally connected with the welfare of the venerable university over which he presides. Taxation of churches would threaten taxation of colleges; hence he hastens to strengthen and protect the outworks of his fortifications by justifying the tax-exemption of churches. But the plea of a special disinterestedness will probably not add much force to his argument.

Neither is the well-known fact of President Eliot's excellence as a student and teacher of natural science entitled to much weight, as indicating any peculiar freedom from bias on this question. So long as multitudes of the best scientific men are devotedly attached to the church in some form or other, because they fail to apply to religious subjects the same disciplined powers which have earned for them preëminence in science, the mere fact of scientific attainment proves nothing as to impartiality on this point. If President Eliot had studied the ethics of church-taxation with the same thoroughness with which he has pursued mathematics and chemistry, his conclusions would have been very different. Undoubtedly he is unconscious of any bias in favor of the churches; yet it appears in some of his statements, which he himself would hasten to correct on better knowledge of the proposal he controverts. For instance, he says: "Underlying this proposition to tax churches, is there not . . . . an undefined belief that property is the real basis of the State?" And again: "Let us not try rash experiments with the vital parts of the body politic, particularly if we have no better motive than a desire to increase the tax-gatherer's resources." Such sentences as these, casting a slur on the motives of those who have advocated the taxation of the churches, President Eliot would precipitately erase from his speech, if he should take proper pains to inform himself of their real motives; for he is a gentleman incapable, we are glad to believe, of any ungentlemanly insinuation. We call attention to these very inaccurate conjectures as to motives, not to express any displeasure or resentment on account of them, but to show the absence of that disinterested impartiality which President Eliot conceives himself to possess. The real motives in question are a desire to be relieved from the obligation to pay indirect taxes for the support of religious societies of which the tax-payer is not a member,—a desire to see religious freedom respected and justice secured,—a desire to complete the separation of Church and State, and thereby carry to a higher fulfilment the great American idea of a purely secular government "of the people, by the people, for the people." Are not these motives entitled at least to the respect of every good man?

2. "Was built, did I say? Massachusetts is built to-day upon the churches, as all free States are. There are people who hope more for the future of States from secular education than from religion. But it was the Protestant church, the church of the individual conscience, which gave rise to the common school, and not the common school to the church." In such statements as these there is no little confusion of thought. Is everything that is done by Protestants done by the Protestant church, as such? Would President Eliot claim that the Protestant church built the railroads, the telegraphs, the bridges, the cities and towns, and all the institutions that have been created in the United States? Even Protestants can do some things as simple men and women, without invoking their Protestantism to account for them all. The fact is that the "Protestant church" did not give rise to the common school, but rather a growing conviction of the necessity of education to republican institutions, which would just as certainly have been forced upon a republic of atheists. Credit something, at least, to the productive power of humanity itself, without irrationally attributing every good thing done by man to the power of the Christian gospel. Such a wild philosophy of causes bears no mark of the activity of faculties trained in the school of "natural science," but is manifestly the result of inherited partiality to the prevalent religion.

"All free States are built upon the churches"! Every free State stands upon its own foundation in the social nature of mankind; and it is free in proportion as it is not built upon the churches. Wherever the churches are indeed the basis of the State, the State is anything but free—as the most careless reading of history shows. So long as the leading idea, the fundamental principle, of the Church is obedience to authority, it is trifling with intelligence to speak of political freedom as based upon it.

3. "The Church," says President Eliot, "should be not only protected, but honored and fostered by the State—honored by the glad acknowledgment that it is essential to the life of the State, and fostered by a well-guarded exemption from taxation, etc." The State should not only refrain from taxing the Church, but also "acknowledge" that it is essential to its own life! Is it an American citizen who utters such words as these? Is the principle of the separation of Church and State, on which this republic was founded, already obsolete among us? And are the Presidents of our universities to take the lead in promulgating the ideas of the Christian Amendment fanatics? At the late convention of the Free Religious Association, a distinguished speaker ridiculed the notion that the Christian Amendment movement had any seed of danger in it; yet, less than two days before, the President of Harvard College was publicly preaching doctrines which justify its essential purpose! When we see our best educated men either directly propagating beliefs whose practical outcome must be a Christianized Constitution and the disfranchisement of all non-Christians (it will make little difference whether they call themselves "extra" or "anti"), or else smoothing the way for these results by putting to sleep again the half-awakened suspicions of the people, we see clearly enough that the preservation of religious liberty depends on the perhaps uncultivated masses that are quick to be jealous for it, and not reluctant to take up the rugged duty of fighting Christian darkness with Radical light. The central ideas of the Church and of the Republic are locked in deadly combat,—none the less so because the battle-ground to-day is the invisible field of thought. To-morrow the struggle will be in the arena of politics, and then no eye will be so blind as not to see it. Verily, THE INDEX has a "mission:" it tightens its belt, and stands by its guns.

4. "Exemption from taxation," says President Eliot, "amounts only to this, that the State abstains from applying any portion of the income of church property to other than religious uses." So, when a favored passenger travels over a railroad on a free pass, the Company abstains from applying any portion of his income to other than his private uses; it simply omits to make him pay his fare. But somebody pays it. The Company must pay it, if he does not. Just so is it with the Church. When the State "deadheads" it over the public road, the State (that is, you and we and all the people together) pays its fare out of the public pocket. That is what exemption from taxation "amounts to." A great deal depends on the form of statement.

5. "The religious use [of church-income] is preeminently a public use, and no part of the income of property which a former generation or the present generation has devoted forever to this particular public use should be diverted by the State to other public uses." What is the "public use" of church-income? Is it not paying the necessary expenses of the churches? The money paid out by the churches to ministers, sextons, choirs, coal-dealers, gas-companies, and so forth, is not "diverted" from its proper object. Very well: the cost of the protection afforded to the churches by the State is simply one item of these necessary expenses; and the payment of the State's bill is no more "diverting" the funds than is the payment of a bill for a new carpet on the church aisles. It is futile to cover up or ignore or deny the plain fact that some party or other must pay the cost of the protection given; it is exactly as futile to put it forward as a just claim that the whole community should foot the bill. So long as the State Statutes forbid the direct taxing of any man for the support of a religious society in which he is not a member, just so long is it a grievance to tax all men indirectly for the same purpose. There is no question of "diversion of funds;" there is a question of the rightfulness of robbing unbelievers for the benefit of the churches.

6. "One often hears it urged now-a-days that the State should do nothing but protect life, liberty, and property. My friends, that is a great deal more than a free State can do without the help of the Church as a moulder of private and national character." President Eliot does not mean by "the Church" the Christian Church alone, but "the aggregate of religious institutions" of all kinds. This is a broad and liberal use of the word, and shows that he is no narrow sectarian; yet the intended inference that the State should exempt the Church from taxation is a complete non sequitur. Admitting that religious institutions are necessary to the finest national character, it would not follow that they should not be taxed. The wisdom and necessity, in a free State, of separating State and Church is rapidly becoming an axiom of modern political philosophy; and the tendency in Europe is all in the direction of putting it more completely into practice. If the State is to teach religion, it must either teach some particular religion or else impartially teach all religions. The former is religious tyranny; the latter is religious idiocy. Hence the State, according to American ideas at least, should teach no religion, but leave the people to support such religious institutions as they please, without government support. Church-exemption to-day survives only because the people do not perceive that it is one form of church-establishment. President Eliot's premises would take him a great deal farther than he would cheerfully go. Given a State that cannot discharge its essential function of protection to life, liberty, and property without a State-supported church, the right of the State to punish heresy and irreligion as a crime cannot be gainsaid; and, before we get through with the argument, we shall find ourselves landed in Romanism. It is a dangerous path to which President Eliot opens the gate; it is the interest of his heretic college to shut it again without unnecessary delay.

7. In his closing paragraph, the President eloquently inculcates "energy and elevation of mind." It is a good lesson, well worthy to be laid to heart; and we would fain apply it, as a loyal son of Harvard College, to the case of our Alma Mater. Let her rise to such "elevation of mind" as to seek her own highest welfare, not by insisting on an unjust and invidious privilege, but by postponing her own apparent and merely temporary interests to the real and permanent interests of the whole people. Mankind have no interest so transcendently important as the universal prevalence of just and free principles: let not Harvard College stand in their way. Whatever pecuniary resources she might lose for a time by surrendering the right to be a State pauper, she would gain a thousand times over in moral dignity and self-respect. Let her frankly accept the situation; if she prefers being a private corporation rather than a State institution, let her be ashamed to sue, as she did last winter, for favors not equally granted to all other private corporations. It is humiliating for a proud-spirited alumnus of the university to hear the complaints made by citizens of Cambridge that they are obliged to pay the expenses of her street improvements! Let her spurn the price of her own degradation in the public eye, pay her own taxes, and thus manifest the "elevation of mind" so eloquently eulogized by her able President.

THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

By religious journals of good standing it is assumed that, as people depart from the Christian faith and fall into one or another error—rationalism, positivism, materialism, free religion,—they lose the sweetness of their temper, become uncharitable, morose, acrid, intemperate in thought and expression. It is not directly claimed that a belief in the Christian doctrines ensures kindness and courtesy, but as much is implied in the frequent intimation that no others do. To show how much of truth there is in this impression, I print the following epistolary performance which was sent to me two or three days ago. Similar missives come with varying frequency, on an average of one in a month perhaps. All are not as vulgar as this one, but some are more so. The manuscript is usually disguised to make it appear a dripping from the pen of an illiterate person, as often it is; but not seldom it is well formed; occasionally it is elegant, indicating the practised writer. The letter that preceded this came from a man of education, and apparently from a clergyman, for clergymen are not always above doing mean things. Here is the letter:—

"YOU SCOUNDREL, HUMBUG, LIAR, FRAUD:—

"You are leading men to hell as fast as you can; and, if the devil picks any bones, he'll have yours, unless you repent and stop preaching such ungodly doctrines. Repent! Repent! I am, sir,

"A NEAR NEIGHBOR."

Of course there are a great many Orthodox Christians to whom the above note will seem as disgustingly indecent as it is, and as cowardly, too. But it is not the ardor of their faith that will make it seem so. The writer of the felicitous document is, no question, a pious, though coarse, Christian believer; and that feature of him was not inconsistent with this piece of bigoted poltroonery. It is not inconsistent with similar baseness in men of much greater refinement than he. Possibly a Free Religious man may be so lost to all self-respect as to write in like strain to Mr. Fulton or Mr. Murray, to Dr. John Hall or Stephen Higginson Tyng. Perhaps the amiable and forbearing editor of the Christian Register may have in his secret drawer some equally good specimen of rationalistic amenity which his unwillingness to hurt the feelings of his neighbors has made him suppress hitherto. If he has, we beg him to bring it forth, and convict us of an equal intolerance. Let us see which will come out best in a trial of courtesy. The gentleman need not be a Christian, but the Christian should be a gentleman. It is cheerfully conceded that Christianity and sectarianism are different things, and that such rubbish as the above comes from sectarianism, not from the religion it degrades. But until Christianity can repudiate sectarianism, the odium of all this vulgarity will cling to it. O. B. F.

LETTER FROM D. A. WASSON.

The following letter, addressed to a member of the Festival Committee, was intended to be read at the recent Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, but was crowded out for want of time. I send it to THE INDEX, knowing that it will be read with hearty interest by many friends of Mr. Wasson in his native land. W. J. P.

5 ALLEEN STRASSE, STUTTGART, May 8, 1874.

MY DEAR MR. WHIPPLE:—

It was a pleasure to me to see the circular of the Free Religious Association, which has just now come to hand, and to be reminded by it of the country, the coadjutors and friends, that, with less perhaps of partiality, I hold only dearer as years increase. I see in that Association, not the nucleus of a new sect, one more sect added to the overplus we have already, but an institute for discussion of the largest problems in the largest spirit. As such, it should be welcome to all those who know in what age they live. I have, for my own part, no quarrel with Christianity, but recognize in it an ideal of goodness, that is in its way unsurpassable, as nothing can be more golden than gold itself. Some antiquated dogmas, again, of Christian theology seem to me adumbrations of truths that many have cast away along with their obsolete forms, and that will have to be recovered, restated, and made familiar to the modern mind. But also it seems to me idle to pretend that, after Newton and Darwin, after Nieburhr and Baur, we are just where we were before, and need to inquire only within the limits of formal Christianity. Farther, I cannot but think it mischievous, almost criminal, to instruct men that they must choose between acceptance of these limits, on the one hand, and materialism, atheism, on the other. That has been but too much done already. Numbers, daily increasing numbers, take the alternative as stated, and, incapable—creditably incapable, I should say—of being mediævalists in religion while moderns in everything else, say, "Well, materialism, atheism be it, then." This is pressed upon my mind by the vast spread of materialistic doctrine among the people, with whom I have been two years living. It does not indeed appear to me that there is more of materialism in Germany than in America; but it has a different character. In this country, it is the materialism of science; in ours, of money-making. In the one case is manifested as opinion; in the other, as motive. In Germany it leaves the Church; in America it perhaps joins the Church, recites the creed, and deacons out the bread and wine. It is plain that, theoretically or practically, one or both, the attitude of the world toward religion has changed; that new mental needs have arisen, and that the old answers to the old questions do not now answer. After all has been said that can be said about the Christian religion, there is still a question, becoming a very serious one, about human religion; and it scarcely serves to discourse of the coat when there has got to be a doubt about the cloth. Under the head, "How to Cook a Salmon," the advice was given, "First catch your salmon." Our theological cooks have their methods and sauces, but while they are getting up a fire, preparing their pans and collecting the condiments, it turns out that the fish is in the sea, and will not bite at the old bait. The Christian dressing is the best, but what use to talk of it to men to whom the reality or value of the raw article has become questionable? Pardon what seems, or is, a trivial metaphor; if I speak in a light way, it is not with a light mind, for indeed the situation is no light matter. It is wholly plain to me that, while Christianity contains an immortal ideal, the Christian institution, the Christian ecclesiasticism, with its "plans of salvation," its confessions, symbols, sacraments, is dying at the root. The churches still make converts, but on cheaper and cheaper terms. The old creeds are still recited, but more and more in the style of a tourist who visits a cathedral to say that he has seen it, or of a man who buys a library because every gentleman should have one. Even what are vaunted as manifestations of faith manifest the want of it. See these people in America, who go about praying, not to God, but at men. What is prayer to them? A social force, like fashion, having its effect, not between earth and heaven, but between mouth and ear. A great change goes inevitably on. The Church resembles a town whose business has decayed; the enterprising, daring minds migrate to seek their fortune elsewhere; the timid and ease-loving stay, with those who are detained by tender considerations of kindred, domestic ties, etc. The town remains, but grows somnolent. A wit said that Newport is Newburyport without the bury. The ecclesiastical institution, Augustine's "City of God," has come to have much bury about it. Look for the daring activities, and you find them in some rampant Chicago, itself not perfectly pleasing to the mind, but "going ahead" and making the future. It is time that this state of things was recognized. Without preaching a crusade against the old towns, somebody should look after the Chicagos, give them sobriety of thought, moral texture and tone, the fine spirit of culture, the deep spirit of reverence,—should take up for them the old truth, and make it new; and share with them the new truth, to give it the ripeness of age. I see in your Association a look that way, and trust it will look to some purpose. You will keep it large and hospitable, I hope; not the organ of any small, speculative polemic, not the exponent of an exclusive modernism, and cheap because exclusive, as if nobody had thought until our day. He that shuts the "spirit of the age" out of religion, and he that would shut up religion in that spirit exclusively, are simply rival jailors, opposite and alike. The merely modern mind has its own limitations, some of them very stringent ones. There can be too much spirit of the age. Progress only in that spirit is like those fertilizers which force the land without feeding it; there is a crop for this year and an exhausted soil for the next. We want the organic, structural spirit of all ages,—all that has made civilization and that sustains it. Do not think me renegade if I say that the mere modernist—for an example of his limitation—is trying to get more out of liberty than there is in it. Liberty, simply as such, is inorganic, indeterminate; not structure, but mere let alone. At best, it is but the timber in the forest, which, observe, has to be felled before you get your ship or châlet. But your president, I see, has the last winter been emphasizing the word discipline. That was to me a cheerful token. There the organic, the structural, thought comes in. Man has not a human condition without liberty, and liberty itself is not human without discipline. I attribute many of the moral confusions which prevail with us to our having a blind eye upon that matter. Our Jeffersonian liberty would have done us to death long ago, if that puritan discipline which Jefferson so hated, and which was indeed too priestly, had not been behind it.

Enough, you will say, of this; but indulge me a moment more. What I wish to suggest is this: the world is in for a hard time; and that the time may not prove too hard, some things must be seen to. The old is dying out, and the new—well, it is new, raw, half-made. Civilization is removing into another habitation. This removing is at best an ugly, topsy-turvy business, demoralizing to all domesticities; but removing into a house that as yet is but a composite of wall, scaffolding, litter, and out-of-doors, upsets orderly habits in a peculiar degree. That is the modern situation. Indeed, there are many who have moved out, and will not even try to move in, but camp around, gypsy-fashion. Well, I do not say, Stay in the old homestead; that is tumbling down. But I do say, Get a whole thought about the new one, and mean structure, with the liberation of human virtue within it; not Bedouin freedom, that liberates the beast to enslave the man. You do not need my counsel, but I offer what I have; and if the guest at my table has as good dishes at home, so much the better.

Give my greetings to your friends and mine, and assure them that, in my own way, I am working as sincerely as they, or as any, for the new time; and not working without good hope, though aware that, as ever, courageous hearts and clear heads can alone give hope its fruition. I am conservative, no doubt of it, and mean to be so, as Nature is; being of opinion that without a good deal of conserving our world would not probably be here. Only I have no intention to conserve rotten wood; and if a resolution to see when the wood is rotten be radicalism, count on me for a radical. It is a question of eyes, this of conservative or radical. The conservative principles that go into a good wall are a good thing, and the radicalism that means building solidly, at the right time and place, is another good thing. Your Association means both, I trust. Faithfully yours,

D. A. WASSON.

Communications.

TEMPERANCE--THE CRUSADERS AND THE LIBERAL PRESS.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

The advantages of temperance are so great and obvious that no sane man will deny its importance to the individual or to society. But while all are agreed on this point, there is a great variety of views as to what really constitutes temperance; what means are to be employed to promote it, or to prevent intemperance. Where there exists so great a diversity of opinions, it is not much to be wondered at to see the most astounding alliances and combinations of the most incongruous elements; to find the most liberal united with the most Orthodox; to see the ultra-radical standing on one and the same platform, meeting in one and the same "Lodge," with the creed-bound sectarian. For they are all equally prejudiced in "the cause of temperance," view and judge it only from one side, and that colored by their prejudices; they cannot, or will not, acknowledge—like those two disputants in the well-known story of the two-colored shield—its other side and color. But what is most astounding is that not only the ever blind and prejudiced "religious" and the servile "secular," but even the best "liberal," yea, ultra-radical, journals, such as THE INDEX, the Investigator, etc., are as blind and prejudiced as any of the former; that these noble advocates of liberalism and freedom are, on this subject, as fanatical as any sectarian press, and thus contradict their own teachings and principles to such a degree as at least tacitly to approve of the famous Jesuitical maxim, "The end sanctifies the means." This they have done over and over again, as well in editorial articles as in casual notes on the "Woman Crusaders." If the editors of said liberal papers were not so much blinded by their unwise and fanatical zeal for temperance as to fail to see that these "Crusaders" are only tools of the (especially Methodist) clergy, or of those philanthropic laymen of whom the unselfish Dio Lewis, with his reported insignificant salary of but fifty dollars a day, is the typical man, they might at least be cool-headed enough, I think, to discriminate between true temperance and the sacerdotal trick that uses, for its own purposes, these praying women ostensibly to promote temperance, cure intemperance, and stop the liquor-traffic—all by prayer! But, instead of discriminating thus, they defend and encourage these fanatical "Crusaders,"—including their praying,—regardless of the violation of decency, and of legal, business, and other rights attacked by these prayers and crusades. If they did but show up the folly, uselessness, and even perniciousness, of these prayers, they would act consistently, wisely, and beneficially. Since, however, these are obviously none of their motives, they are in contradiction with themselves, their teachings and principles. Their prejudices get the mastery over their better judgment.

To make this clearer, and to prove the correctness of these imputations, let us answer the question, What is temperance? For it is the misunderstanding and misconstruction of this much-abused term, I believe, that lie at the bottom of the evil I complain of.

"Habitual moderation in regard to the indulgences of natural appetites and passions," says Webster.

This I consider a very judicious and comprehensive answer to the above question, recognizing as it does all the appetites and the passions, and not only one appetite, a passion, as do the temperance advocates. Nor does it interdict all and every indulgence of the appetites and passions, but—and this is the true essence of temperance—it demands merely that the indulgence be moderate (temperate), and habitually so.

Now, as we have a correct and authoritative definition of temperance, let us apply it to temperance as commonly understood, and more especially as understood by these praying and crusading women; and their error will immediately become apparent. The appetite for liquor I will, for argument's sake, allow to be as bad and dangerous as it is commonly represented to be; and I will further allow that, on this account, the unconditional and absolute prohibition of its indulgence is rational and wise enough to justify the zeal (but not all the measures) of those calling themselves temperance men and women. But, sir, if I allow all this, and if it all were true and correct, their limited temperance forms but a small part of that comprehensive temperance which governs all the appetites and passions. There are yet other appetites and passions just as strong, and their immoderate intemperate indulgence is just as pernicious and ruinous. What of these? Prejudice or fanaticism may single out this particular one and attempt its suppression, or arrogate its regulation in the usual way of fanaticism; i.e., by all fair or foul means. But shall rational men imitate them, and make common cause with them? Or shall they endeavor to "habitually moderate" this and all other appetites and passions, in themselves and others, by all rational and just means? By which course would true and real temperance be best promoted, by the former or by the latter?

True, liquor is intoxicating, and it is, on that account, claimed that indulgence in it is the most dangerous and pernicious. But is this true? Apparently, to the superficial, it may be so, because its effects, its nearer or remoter consequences, are most strikingly visible, more public, than the indulgences in other appetites or passions; but they are by no means the worst. There are still other appetites and passions the consequences of whose indulgence are far worse, more destructive, and criminal. But they are also less detestable, better concealed, and practised more (though by no means exclusively) by the "better classes" of society, and probably for that reason less spoken of and prayed against. Consult any well-educated, practical physician (one not infatuated with temperance fanaticism), and you will find my assertion corroborated. He will, if sincere and honest, tell you that, bad as the appetite for liquor and its intemperate indulgence undisputedly is, there are yet other appetites, other passions, as much and as intemperately indulged in, the consequences of which are far worse, much more ruinous, and proportionally more immoral. And he will, or may at least, further add that it is they which bring him the largest number and unhappiest class of his patients. He probably will instance to you the numberless victims of the sexual passions and their intemperate indulgence, and hint to you at a certain horrible, criminal practice—a practice as widespread as criminal and destructive—among American ladies.

Further, many and many a financially and morally ruined husband will point you to the luxury, fashion, and extravagances of his family, as the cause of his ruin, perhaps of his having become a drunkard. Have you ever considered how many of these very ladies play a conspicuous rôle in the crusades? It is, forsooth, so much easier and more respectable to sing and pray against other sinners than to reform oneself! During the crusades it has been frequently proved that, in the very houses of some of these praying women, the finest wines, selected brandies, etc., are kept, used, and offered to their guests, while they ask poor men and women to pour out their liquors, etc.,—often the sum and substance of all their riches, and their only means to make a living for themselves and their poor little ones.

But, my dear Mr. Abbot, do not from the foregoing misjudge me, and conclude that I am an opponent to temperance. I am only opposed to the fanaticism of those who arrogate to themselves the championship of temperance, sometimes to conceal under its cloak their own insincerity and intemperance. I am, indeed, not only a friend to temperance, but a very temperate man myself; much more so, in all respects, than the average temperance man, albeit I drink a glass or two of good grape wine or lager-beer, when I think best, but never any liquor.

This makes me speak of yet another aspect of the temperance fanaticism, before I close my article. It is neither the least folly nor the least mischief of it, not to discriminate between poisoned, injurious liquor and pure grape wine or nourishing, healthy lager-beer; or I might even say genuine, pure liquor, if it could be had in this country. But as the liquors usually drunk in America are, almost without exception, adulterated, and consumed to excess, it is especially they that make the most drunkards, and cause the most harm. This being a notorious fact, I should think the exertions of the real friend of temperance would be mainly directed against the use of these liquors as a common beverage, to abolish the custom of liquor-drinking. This gained, a great deal would be gained in the cause of temperance. But by what means could this important step be surer gained than by generalizing beer-drinking? The beer-glass would, more than all fanatical measures, all prohibitory laws, banish the whiskey-glass. It would diminish at least, if not altogether suppress, liquor-drinking. "But lager-beer, too, is intoxicating," cries out the fanatical and prejudiced temperance saint. So it is, when drunk to excess,—when taken in very great quantities; but when drunk, as the large majority do drink it, moderately, only a glass or two at a time, it is healthy, nourishing, strength-giving, while liquor in any quantity is injurious. Even in the very worst case, when one gets intoxicated on lager-beer, it is physically not nearly as bad as when he gets drunk on bad liquor; for he does not get so crazed by it as in the latter case. Besides, a man has to drink a much greater, often a very great, quantity of lager to become drunk, while even quite a small quantity of liquor will make him drunk. Why, then, shall the great advantages lager-beer has over liquor be ignored, and this healthy and invigorating beverage be classed with and put under the same ban as poisoned liquor? It is certainly only fanaticism and blind prejudice that can do it.

"But," says the temperance-man par excellence again, "There are still some who do drink lager-beer to excess, and get habitually drunk on it." True; but there are also those who will eat to excess and be made almost habitually sick by it,—who labor, study, do almost every other good thing to excess. Will you, on their account, prohibit also eating, labor, study?

Would it be any more unreasonable? But you certainly will not think of doing it; you will encourage the good thing and condemn only the irrational excess by which it is changed into an evil. Why not take the same sound view of temperance in drinking as in eating? Why proscribe healthy drinks, as beer and wine certainly are, because they may become unhealthy and injurious by drinking them intemperately? Look to Germany. There you may, any fine summer day or evening, find several thousand men and women, husbands and their wives, young men and their sweethearts — yes, women, true ladies too,—gathered at one beer-garden, enjoying their wine or beer and the fine music discoursed by an able band, though it may even be Sunday; and, though all be merry and hilarious, yet they are also orderly and decorous. No drunkenness, no rowdyism, no disturbance—probably made almost impossible by the presence and influence of the ladies there. But how do you think it would be at these beer-gardens, if from one to six thousand American whiskey-drinkers were there?

No doubt, the great advantages of beer, at least of beer over whiskey, would long ago have been admitted, and been substituted for whiskey in this country too, if unhappily a very strong prejudice of an other nature had not prevented it,—the prejudice against Germans and foreigners generally. But, in the case of temperance, this prejudice has its effect on, and is made use of by, the so-called "temperance people," although even they must admit that the Germans, as a class, are as industrious, sober, and moral citizens as any of this great republic. On the other hand, it is the clergy and puritanically pious who hate the Germans, and nourish this prejudice against them, because the large majority of Germans are freethinkers and have their own thoughts in religious matters, more especially of the sanctity and the manner of "keeping holy" the Sunday. Thus it is that the temperance people, the Orthodox, and the clergy are most hostile to the Germans, the most implacable adversaries and decriers of them and their lager.

But, in spite of their frantic efforts, beer-drinking is getting more and more generalized in this country; and I hope it will help to abolish whiskey-drinking, and thus become, as it certainly may be made to become, one of the most effective agents of true temperance.

Yours for true and rational temperance,

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., May 24, 1874.

[If our usually accurate correspondent can point out a single word of our writing, either in THE INDEX or out of it, that even seems to "defend and encourage the fanatical 'Crusaders,' including their praying," he will astonish us still more than he has done by not comprehending our very explicit language on the whole subject of temperance. There is nothing new in the idea of temperance above set forth, which we have not only advocated for years, but heard advocated by a great many Americans as a matter of commonplace; and Mr. Einstein's opinion of the good influence of a general use of wine or beer in diminishing intemperance is shared by thousands of them. We should really be obliged to him if he would quote the passages which have given him the curious impression that we favor the "praying crusade." Such an impression on the part of a good friend, who usually understands us and always means to, is, we confess, not a little surprising.—ED.]

THE TRUE VIATICUM.

On the first page of THE INDEX of May 7, I find a brief notice of the death of Austin Holyoake, closing with these words: "He held to his atheistic belief to the end, but died with calmness and resignation." Would it not have been better to use and instead of "but" in this sentence? It is not to be supposed for a moment that "A. W. S." shares the Orthodox conceit that an intelligent and conscientious man is likely to fail in calmness and resignation at the approach of death because he rejects the fantastic conception of a personal origin and government of the universe, which may be taken to be the meaning of the phrase "atheistic belief" in this instance. "But" was probably written in allusion to the false state of mind prevalent on this point through church influences. And would have expressed the natural state of the case, and have steered clear of the religious nightmare on the subject of death. How sad it is that this last solemn passage of mortality should still be invested with a factitious gloom and horror so little in keeping with its real character, and with the inevitable relation it bears to every living human being! Those monstrous parts of the Christian mythology which have made death so dreadful to the common imagination are now to a great extent kept in the background, or presented in very modified aspects, where they are not yet abandoned, and have very clearly lost the hold which they once had on the genuine belief of educated and uneducated alike; yet we find remaining, wide-spread, and of great surviving force, a notion of the importance of a magical preparation without which it is neither safe nor respectable to die or to be buried. And yet, one would think, it should long ago have been apparent to reflecting men, that when a mind has ceased to attribute this world with all its evil to an Arbitrary Cause, that mind has arrived at the very point where calmness and resignation set in and become abiding qualities. If all the wrong and suffering we see around us here be in pursuance of the inscrutable designs of a ruling Will above, why may it not be so, or infinitely worse, hereafter? With such a faith, accompanied with the expectation of individual immortality, magic indeed is the natural resort of the foreboding soul, though hardly any magic can be relied on to secure the coveted salvation. Thus it is that theism commits us to supernaturalism. By its one unreasonable assumption it makes Butler's Analogy unanswerable, justifies St. Remigius in his assertion that but few Christians are saved, and gives Albert Barnes good reason for the melancholy view of human destiny avowed in his published correspondence with Mr. Gerrit Smith. It is visionary belief, and not unbelief, that misreads both life and death, and renders their contemplation appalling. The lesson of Mr. Holyoake's last hours is one his generation needs. The man who has rejected all theology, not through a spirit of opposition, but through conscientiousness and a study of the problem for himself, turns not again to dogmas and rites at the end. In reading of such a death, I am moved to sympathy and respect; for during twenty years my detestation has been constantly deepening for that fell spirit which works amain to render the death-bed, that should be curtained with holiness and peace, a scene of the most intensified selfishness it is possible to excite, and of the most cruel and humiliating terrors that Superstition has ever brought into play for the degradation of her subject, Man.

N. R. WATERS.

BALTIMORE, May, 1874.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Another convention has been held of late, at Pittsburg, for the purpose of waking up the people of the United States to the importance, indeed the imperative necessity, of amending the Constitution, so that it shall recognize God as the sovereign of the universe, Jesus Christ as the ruler of the nation, and the Bible as the revelation of the will and law of God, and the true foundation of all human law. The reverend gentlemen who took a prominent part in the deliberations of the convention seem to think that such an amendment would cure all our national troubles, put us on the highway of prosperity, and secure for us national grandeur and perpetuity. They disclaim all intention of uniting Church and State; they hold up both hands in horror at such an unholy alliance; they only wish to honor God and perpetuate our liberties. We distrust all this. They must hold innumerable conventions, and read through their gold spectacles countless thousands of disquisitions on the honor and glory of God, before they will convince the plain, common-sense American citizen that there is not a cat of the very largest size under that heap of innocent-looking meal. Surely the simple insertion of the name of the Deity in the Constitution would be but an empty honor, the like of which would be regarded by man as a very small affair. One act of justice or of Christian charity would be infinitely more acceptable. Our Constitution, as it now stands, does honor to the men who made it, and to the God who gave them sense sufficient to frame it. If God is so easily honored, if they think him pleased with such trifles, why do not these gentlemen make broad their phylacteries, and embroider the name of God all over their clothing, and stamp it on every article of furniture and every implement of labor? Let them do so, if they see fit; but it is to be hoped that "we the people" have more sense. These Constitution-tinkers would have us believe that the grand object of government should be the defence and promotion of religion; their religion. They are not content to enjoy it themselves, and defend the government that guarantees them enjoyment of the right to worship God according to the dictate of their own conscience. Oh no! They will force their religion upon others, or exclude them from possession of those rights which are so dear to themselves. Now suppose the Constitution amended as proposed, what good would result? Would our politics be any purer? Would bad men be kept out of office? Would unscrupulous demagogues stand back awed by God and the Bible in the Constitution? Would not such an amendment be a premium for perjury most outrageous and damnable? If the Constitution is to be interpreted by or in the light of the Bible, who is to decide authoritatively what the Bible means? Probably we might be furnished with an ecclesiastical court for this purpose, but who should compose it? "Ay, there's the rub." The theory of these would-be reformers is, that government is an ordinance of God, therefore none but Christians can properly administer it; we are Christians, hence of necessity we are the men and the only men fit for office. They propose to shut out from full citizenship all who differ from them in their religious opinions. They say to the Atheist, the Deist, the Jew, the Unitarian, the Seventh-Day Baptist (for they include them all in the same list): "Gentlemen, in the mere matter of opinion as to religion you do not agree with us. This of course proves you wrong, so wrong that you are unfit for self-government. Such being your sad case, we will kindly govern you. To be sure we will tax you; you shall pay for the care we give you; be thankful that we spare your lives. In our case taxation without representation would be tyranny; in your case it is justice." Give these men the power, and would they not say: "The State cannot be sustained without religion, religion cannot be sustained without public worship, worship cannot be maintained without great expense; therefore, as every man is to be benefited, every man shall pay for and also attend public worship"?

Last year a convention was held in the city of New York for the purpose of securing this "religious amendment." At that meeting a doctor of divinity, speaking of Jews, Deists, Seventh-Day Baptists, and Atheists, said: "These all are, for the occasion, and so far as our amendment is concerned, one class. They use the same arguments and the same tactics against us. They must be counted together, which we very much regret, but which we cannot help." How would the reverend doctor treat them? He said: "What are the rights of the Atheist? I would tolerate him as I would tolerate a poor lunatic. I would tolerate him as I would a conspirator. He may live and go free, hold his lands and enjoy his home; he may even vote; but for any higher, more advanced citizenship, he is, as I hold, utterly disqualified." "He may even vote," says the D.D.; but he forgot to add, "provided I may select his candidate." Is it not passing strange that men are so apt to consider all who do not agree with them as to religion lunatics or fools?

We have a glorious Constitution securing liberty and equality to all. Let us jealously guard it, and keep it from the power of that worst of all enemies of the human race, religious fanaticism. Under the Constitution we have become a mighty nation. True, we have been cursed by slavery, and as a consequence scourged by war; fraternal blood has flowed like water, and every family in the land has been clothed in the sable habiliments of woe; but the broken fetters of the slave now rust in the graves of our fallen heroes. Liberty has been proclaimed throughout the land, to all the inhabitants thereof, and one cannot help thinking that, if the clergy of the United States had been half as anxious in years long gone to get slavery out of the Constitution as some of them are now to get God and the Bible into it, we should have had no war. Gentlemen of the convention, do what you can to propagate true and undefiled religion, love to God and good-will to man; but, for God and humanity's sake, be good enough to let the Constitution of the United States alone.

KINO.

THE CONDITION OF OUR PRISONS.

Miss Mary Carpenter, of Bristol, England, whose recent visit to the United States is remembered with so much pleasure and satisfaction by all who had the pleasure of meeting and hearing her, has recently addressed to the Prison Association of New York a very interesting letter, giving the results of her observations upon the condition of our prisons, so many of which she visited.

Miss Carpenter begins by laying down the true principles of prison discipline and the conditions requisite to their successful operation, and concludes with observations and suggestions concerning the various prisons which she visited. Her theory of prison discipline is this:—

The State has a right, for the protection of society, to deprive of liberty any person, man or woman, who is doing an injury to it by breach of the laws. But, in thus depriving him of his liberty, the State has no right to inflict upon him any unnecessary pain, and is bound to provide for his well-being—physical, intellectual, moral, and religious—in every way consistent with the object of his imprisonment, which is the protection of society and the minimizing of crime. This object is inseparably connected with the reformation of the offender and the prevention of his future criminal conduct, which may therefore be regarded as the immediate object of his imprisonment. If the shortness of his sentence of detention renders the first (reformation) impossible, the nature of his imprisonment should at any rate be of such a character, in accordance always with his real welfare, as to warn him from a repetition of his offence. The State, that is to say, the Legislature, representing society, is responsible for the true development of this principle, and for the right treatment of all the persons whom it has deprived of liberty. In order to carry out in each State this general principle, which should be at the foundation of all treatment of criminals, the following conditions appear essential:—

That a board of commissioners, selected by the Legislature for their fitness for such a duty, and responsible to it, shall be appointed in every State to superintend and regulate the condition of all places of legal detention and the treatment of the prisoners. The members of such board shall not be removable, except for due cause. Two of the board shall retire annually in rotation, but shall be eligible to reëlection.

That the board shall have power to enforce the adoption, in places of detention (jails, police stations, and reformatories), of the general conditions appointed by the State for such places.

That the board shall have power to appoint the chief officer of the State institutions, subject to the approval of the Governor and Council of the State; such officers (warden, and religious and moral instructors) being irremovable except for misconduct or inability; and that it (the board) must sanction the appointment, by local authorities, of such officers in county jails or reformatories and all places of legal detention under voluntary management; such officers being irremovable as above.

That the board shall appoint inspectors, who shall visit from time to time, at least twice a year, and whenever it may appear desirable, all jails and other places of legal detention, all persons in detention having the power of laying any grievance before them; and that the inspectors shall lay a monthly report before the board. The inspectors of all female jails and institutions to be ladies, who shall recommend to the board for approval all the chief female officials.

The board should present annually a complete report to the Legislature.

Until some such boards as this are established, with the powers here briefly specified, there will be no security for the due protection of persons whose liberty has been forfeited by the State from serious injury, physical and moral, arising from bad system, improper treatment, and the misconduct or neglect of officials.—Liberal Christian, April 25.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS.

Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUCHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations . 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.. 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
J. SEDGEBEER, Painesville, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHAPTERS
FROM
The Bible of the Ages.
FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by
GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.
FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

FREE DISCUSSION is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished in plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

DITSON & CO.'S
Home Musical Library.

Price of each Book in Boards, $2.50; Cloth, $3; Full Gilt, $4.

MUSICAL TREASURE. Vocal.
SILVER CHORD. Vocal.
WREATH OF GEMS. Vocal.
GEMS OF SACRED SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG. Vocal.
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG. Vocal.
OPERATIC PEARLS. Vocal.
SHOWER OF PEARLS. Vocal Duets.
ORGAN AT HOME. Reed Organ Music. Instrumental.
GEMS OF STRAUSS. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. I. Instrumental.
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. II. Instrumental.
PIANIST'S ALBUM. Instrumental.
PIANOFORTE GEMS. Instrumental.

Large, splendid books of bound music, two hundred to two hundred and fifty pages, full sheet music size, and contain a very large proportion of all the good sheet music ever published.

Sold by all dealers. Either book sent postpaid for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1874. WHOLE NO. 234.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

MRS. AGASSIZ is soon to give the world a biography of her great, lamented, deceased husband.

THE CITY of London, England, has a population of 4,025,800 souls. It also has 1800 churches, and 4500 drinking saloons.

THERE has been some talk about Professor Huxley succeeding Professor Agassiz, at Harvard. We fear this suggestion is too good to ultimately prove true.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL has demonstrated, by recent experiments, that water in a vaporous form mingled with air is the real enemy to the transmission of sound; and this may exist on days of surprising clearness.

THE INTERESTING ESSAY which appeared in THE INDEX of June 4, entitled "Causes of the Increase of Crime," by Mr. Talbot of Portland, Maine, was read to the Second Radical Club at its last meeting but one of the season, at the house of Rev. John T. Sargent.

IT IS ESTIMATED that the amount of indebtedness owed by the Nation, by States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals of the country is about eight billions. The amount of gold in the United States, at the present time, is said to be not over one hundred and fifty millions.

MR. SEDLEY TAYLOR, of the University of Cambridge, England, has recently given a lecture on Galileo before the Royal Institution in London; and he says that the story about that gentleman's saying, under certain supposed historical circumstances, "The world does move," is a myth! We should just like to know if it is a fact or not, that anybody ever said anything?

THE LONDON Spectator tells us that "ants are very fond of the honey-dew which is formed by the Aphides, and have been seen to tap the Aphides with their antennæ, as if to induce them to emit some of the sweet secretion." It is an art worth any one's learning of the ants, to be able to tap those with whom they come in contact, and draw out the "sweetness and light" which every real character contains.

PERHAPS no passage in Mr. Curtis' Music-Hall oration was finer, or more heartily applauded by the audience, than the following: "The sure foundations of the State are laid in knowledge, not in ignorance; and every sneer at education, at culture, at book-learning, which is the recorded wisdom of the experience of mankind, is the demagogue's sneer at intelligent liberty, inviting national degeneracy and ruin."

THE Free Religious Society of Milford, Pennsylvania, is without a minister, or lecturer, at the present time; and it wishes to obtain one. Its officers inform us that the Society would like to open a correspondence with some man of ability, who desires a situation as lecturer where free thought and free speech can obtain a reasonable support. Mr. Cyrus Barlow, New Milford, Pennsylvania, can be addressed for further information.

THE Christian Union speaks well of Mr. Conway's Sacred Anthology. But it says: "For ourselves we are bound to say frankly that a reading of it enforces upon us one conclusion which, probably, Mr. Conway would not be very anxious to maintain; to wit, that placed in close contact and comparison with the choicest sentences taken from all the ethnical Scriptures, the moral dignity, the concentrated intellectual power, and the literary merit of the book which we are still inclined to call the Bible appear to us to be matchless."

THE METHODIST clergy of New York City have regular "Monday Meetings" for talk and discussion; and sometimes the truth meets with them. At a recent session, Rev. Professor Blyden, of Liberia, pronounced a eulogy upon Mohammedan morals. He thought that, in many respects, they were superior to the "Christian" article. Liquor, he said, was sometimes drunk in Liberia; but never among the Mohammedans. It was in fact, he affirmed, the Mohammedan religion that thus far had protected central and pagan Africa from the introduction of "Christian" rum!

THE RADICAL CLUB, of Philadelphia, is a most vigorous and enterprising organization. It does not confine itself to speculations about the infinite, but grapples with finite and sublunary affairs; and does it, too, in a very direct, forcible, and sensible manner. At the last meeting for the season, Wednesday, June 10, it discussed "Dress Reform," and the President's late financial "Memorandum." Mrs. Lucretia Mott was present, and took part in the former discussion; while the Chairman, Mr. E. M. Davis, who has his own thoughtful views on finance, reviewed and criticised those of the President on the same subject. The Club then adjourned till next September the 16th.

IT APPEARS that Professor Swing is not the only new heretic in Chicago. A Roman Catholic priest shares his blushing honors with him. Father Terry is his name; and he has recently terrified his church by saying that Genesis is all a fiction, or rather a grand epic, and the stories of "creation" and man's "fall" are poems; that science has overturned the dogmas of the church! In a few days after Father Terry preached this eccentric sermon, or gave this iconoclastic lecture, his bishop—Bishop Foley—dropped him a laconic but significant little note, telling him that his "services" in that diocese were no longer needed. And so Father Terry is at large! We give him our congratulations on his emancipation.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS' eulogy on Charles Sumner, at Music Hall, last week Tuesday, was characterized by all the oratorical grace, scholarly style, and fervent eloquence for which he is so well and widely known. If it was not altogether so masterly a performance as that of Senator Schurz—as we are free to say we do not think it was—it should be remembered that Mr. Curtis labored under some disadvantage in comparison with Mr. Schurz' relation to the same subject, his oration coming after that of the latter gentleman, who had so thoroughly, vividly, and adequately treated the life and character of Mr. Sumner. But it was well to have both of these grand orations on our great Senator, inasmuch as they came from men who occupied quite different political relations to the one whose portrait they both so faithfully and finely drew.

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE has an article in the Independent, of June 11, on "Christianity as Name and Thing." Much of it is devoted to comments on the discussion in the late convention of the Free Religious Association between Messrs. Abbot, Calthrop, and Higginson, on the Christian, anti-Christian, and extra-Christian positions. Of Mr. Abbot Dr. Clarke says: "I admired Mr. Abbot's evident honesty and sincerity. I felt, while he spoke, that he was himself one of the pure and sweet products of Christianity. I thought that probably on the last day the great Master of us all would say: 'Well done, good and faithful servant!' and he would be astonished at finding that he had been a good Christian all the time, without knowing it. Not a word dropped from his lips, which had any touch of bitterness, of egotism, of wilfulness in it." It is astonishing how ready Christians are to claim all goodness, sweetness, and purity of life as the result of Christian teaching and influence! But all this seems to us human rather than Christian. A Mohammedan might as well claim it as a Christian. But it belongs to neither; it simply belongs to humanity and to God.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Herbert Spencer

AS A MATHEMATICIAN, A METAPHYSICIAN, AND A DISPUTANT ON RELIGION.

BY PROFESSOR F. W. NEWMAN.

Although our editor, who takes mental science as his special sphere, has written an elaborate paper concerning Herbert Spencer's metaphysics, I do not think this supersedes other argument on the same topic. Hence I am induced to offer to him a paper which has long been written, but has lain by, without seeing the light.

The name of Herbert Spencer, as a writer on physics, has attained respect and admiration in Europe and America. But physics, metaphysics, and religion differ greatly in their methods. Mr. Spencer writes as confidently on logic, and metaphysics, and history, and mathematics, and the logic of religion, as on physics. If we are to concede that ability in physics makes a man arbiter in religion, we may as well give up religion as a lost affair; for it is certain that no religion worth having can be constructed out of mere physics. Personally, I esteem Mr. Spencer, as well as admire his talents; but the tone which he assumes on religion forces one into opposition. It is the more to be regretted; for if he had cut off the First Part of his First Principles I believe that no one would have missed it.

In the "Fragments of Logic," published in my Miscellanies, I have adverted to Mr. Spencer's dogma (without his name), that this or that assertion is untrue, because one cannot "conceive" the thing asserted. Mr. J. Stuart Mill had a controversy with him on this point, and could not convince him. Mr. Spencer does not seem to know what I have written against his dogma (Miscellanies, p. 20), and it is not expedient to repeat it here to the letter. But I shall need to touch on this, when the topic comes up. I am commenting on the First Part of his First Principles.

His first chapter starts with a politico-historical attempt at an induction, where his imagined historical facts appear to me very inaccurate. Yet it is needless to go into detail, so vehemently does he overdraw his conclusions. But he pretends that when men differ, we may assume that that in which we find them to agree is true. I have always regarded the very opposite as probable; namely, that when able reasoners persistently differ, and neither can convince the other, it is probably because they hold some falsehood in common, which makes each vulnerable to the other. In that which neither suspects to be wrong, the source of their endless contention may reasonably be searched for. But Mr. Spencer, in religious thought, and apparently in that only, would have us carry mutual respect so far as to accept only that for true in which we agree with our opponents! Accordingly, he would have us place the "vital element" of religion in that which atheists, pantheists, and theists hold in common. Why not say "the vital element of irreligion"? To state the fact seems to me sufficient to show that he is wholly unreasonable. The difficulty of answering his arguments lies in this, that through their very paradoxical character one may be thought to misrepresent him.

By a discussion of seventeen pages, he brings out that a religious sentiment, somehow or other, does exist in human nature; but he allots to it as its only sphere for exercise "that nescience which must ever remain the antithesis to science." Truly a great condescension on his part to religion! I accept his declarations, that creeds are not priestly inventions, that the source of religious ideas is deep seated, that they are evolved independently in many races, and that a religious sentiment is a constituent of man's nature. But the nearest approach which I can make to his doctrine of nescience is to avow that a sense of both knowledge and ignorance—the contrast of the clear and the dim—is as needful to religion as to painting. Of course, every sound mind is aware that it knows some things with a certainty sufficient for practical life, concerning many other things has an opinion weaker or stronger, and is totally ignorant concerning an infinitude beyond. But, except by a play of words, science cannot be identified with the knowledge which is justly regarded as practically certain. By universal agreement, science means a body of organized and connected truth, which has been tested and confirmed by methods appropriate to the subject. Each science generates its own logic. To call the antithesis to this nescience is a monstrous fallacy and falsity. Rather, popular knowledge is the antithesis. To allot to religion nescience as its sphere might seem merely a bitter sarcasm; but Mr. Spencer evidently supposes that he has got upon a philosophic track, and does not mean to be insolent.

I wish here in passing to enter my protest against the jargon of using think as an active verb, in the monstrous verbals thinkable, unthinkable. I believe they are in fact mere slavish translations from German. Conceivable, imaginable, are classical, intelligible English. "Thinkable" is an unintelligible epithet, and a disgrace to our recent literature. To think a man, to think a word, to think a sentence, are alike nonsense. Of course we may have a cognate accusative after a neuter verb, as, to think a thought; but a cognate accusative only.

Mr. Spencer proceeds to lay down (§ 11, p. 30) that "respecting the origin of the universe three verbally intelligible suppositions may be made" (he certainly means only three); "that it is self-existent; or that it is self-created; or that it is created by an external agency." In passing, I say that the third is not to me intelligible, but self-contradictory; for to the universe nothing is external. If Mr. Spencer does not exclude from the universe the God of the pantheist, there is no reason to exclude from it the God of the theist. The early Hebrew theists undoubtedly regarded God to be internal to his own universe and to all his creatures. The spirit of God was in the human intellect and in "the hinds which calved." He identifies his first hypothesis with atheism (p. 31), and declares it to be "unthinkable," because (he says) the conception of a past eternity is impossible. The second hypothesis (he says) practically amounts to pantheism (p. 32). This he explodes, because (he says) "it is similarly incapable of being represented in thought" (whatever that means). Next (in p. 33), we find, "There remains to be examined the commonly-received or theistic hypothesis—creation by external agency." This he supposes (p. 34) to be a mere attempt, and of course an unsuccessful one, to explode mystery! If we say the world was made by God, he will retort upon us, "How came there to be an external agency" [i.e., a God]? "As was proved [i.e., asserted] at the outset of the argument, self-existence is rigorously inconceivable. . . . Thus these three different suppositions respecting the origin of things, verbally intelligible though they are, turn out to be literally unthinkable. . . . We can entertain them only as we entertain such pseud-ideas as a square fluid and a moral substance, only by abstaining from the endeavor to render them into actual thoughts." (p. 36.)

What does Mr. Spencer mean by "verbally intelligible"? If it be the same as "intelligible," why does he put in "verbally" to puzzle us? Apparently he means some difference. Does he then merely mean that a sentence in which we understand each word separately is "verbally intelligible," even if it have no coherence, no syntax? But this is ridiculous. In this way not "three" verbally intelligible suppositions may be made, but three thousand or three million. The formal statement that, "Respecting the origin of the universe, three verbally intelligible suppositions may be made," can bring no other sense to ordinary minds than "three intelligible suppositions." Yet he ends by telling us that they express no actual thought, i.e., are not intelligible. Hence he ought to have written simply, "Respecting the origin of the universe NO intelligible supposition has yet been propounded." If he had so written, and had meant that we cannot imagine HOW the universe was created, we should all perfectly agree with him, young and old, philosophers and unphilosophic. Is this really all that he meant? Surely he is trying to make three hypotheses which logically exhaust the subject, marked by the epithets "uncreated, self-created, externally created." But he most gratuitously assumes that a process cannot have been, because WE cannot conceive HOW it was; which is simply ridiculous.

Moreover, if his three hypotheses are logically exhaustive, to disprove two out of the three establishes the third. Either one of his refutations is false, or the three do not exhaust the possibilities of the case. If none of the three have any meaning, it is nonsense to say that they are the only admissible hypotheses. But to my mind he has offered no refutation of any of the three. To believe that an eternity is past is not peculiar to atheism. Again, what does he mean by "represent in thought"? Does he mean "set before the mind a pictorial representation"? If "represent an assertion in thought" simply mean "understand an assertion," he takes a great liberty with other men's intellects, in simply telling us all round that we do not understand what we say, and regarding his reproof as equivalent to proof.

While he thinks he has refuted atheism, he establishes to his own satisfaction that no such God is to be believed in, as alone is now worshipped in civilized nations. He argues: Self-existence implies past eternity; past eternity is inconceivable; what is inconceivable is vicious and inadmissible; therefore a self-existent God is inadmissible. But no theist now recognizes any God but one self-existent. Yet Mr. Spencer fancies he has refuted atheism as well as theism! If his arguments have any weight, he establishes what theists must regard as atheism.

His object here seems to be to confute the human mind itself as incapable of "conceiving" these vast topics. But in this way it is not religion only that he reduces to nescience, but science too. Self, space, time, motion are all involved in metaphysical difficulty. Past eternity, which he so presses, is not an invention of theists any more than of atheists. It is a puzzle of human thought; but has no more to do with religion than with astronomy, or geology, or chemistry. He himself tells us (p. 48) that "time and space are unthinkable." If so, what can it concern us whether other things be "thinkable" or not? But his reason for the assertion is, that they are unlimited, have no outline, and therefore "we can have no mental image of unbounded space." But I do not want to have a mental image of it. I have no mental image of an hour or of a minute, though they are bounded. I have no mental image of electricity, or of gravitation, or of oxygen, or of hydrogen; yet these words enter science, and aid to form sentences assuredly intelligible enough for practice. Mr. Spencer tells us (p. 25) that it is impossible to "conceive" (to "conceive in its real magnitude") a sphere of the size of this earth. If so, then to "conceive" it is wholly needless. Certainly we can reason accurately concerning a huge sphere as easily as concerning a little one; and unless we understood clearly what we were saying, we could not reason with certainty. Hence he does but heap up refutation of his dogma that "inability to conceive" stops our processes. In page thirty-six he tells us: "It is impossible to avoid the assumption of self-existence somewhere; and whether that assumption be made nakedly or under complicated disguises, it is equally vicious, equally unthinkable;" namely, because, he says, it implies past eternity. He intends this as an impartial confutation of atheism, pantheism, and theism; but, as just said, he might as well make it a confutation of an astronomic treatise. Would not the sentence last quoted have run more reasonably as follows? "It is impossible to avoid the assumption of self-existence somewhere; hence it is absurd to impute the idea as a confutation or objection to any definite theory."

In page thirty-five he writes: "Those who cannot conceive a self-existent universe, and therefore assume a Creator,"—which he intends as a description of all theists. But in common with many theists, I find no greater difficulty in conceiving of a self-existing universe than of a self-existing Creator. I find no greater difficulty in conceiving of a thing or person having existed a year ago, or ten thousand million years ago, than of his or it existing now. I do not assume a Creator; but I see an active Power, and know no reason for saying that it came into existence at a definite time. That is all that any one can mean by "self-existent." In page forty-six Mr. Spencer says: "It is an ultimate religious (!!) truth of the highest possible certainty . . . . that of all possible hypotheses concerning the universe, not one is even thinkable." I hardly expect it to be believed that I am quoting him truly; but I cannot help that.

In his third chapter, Mr. Spencer carries his doctrine into pure mathematics, and calmly tells us (p. 50) that infinite divisibility is inconceivable! Why not? Hear his reason: "We can bisect, and rebisect a body, and, continually repeating the act until we reduce its parts to a size no longer physically divisible, may then mentally continue the process without limit. To do this, however, is not really to conceive (!) the infinite divisibility of matter, but to form a symbolic (!) conception incapable of expansion (!) into a real one (!), and not admitting of other verification. Really to conceive (!) the infinite divisibility of matter is mentally to follow out the divisions to infinity; and to do this would require infinite time." No better proof is wanted of the total unimportance of this "conceiving," of which he makes so much. When a mathematician speaks of an inch as infinitely divisible, there is no reference to physical properties at all; he means that "however often it be divided, there is no internal incongruity in supposing it further divided." If a lump of gold be taken, we have no right to assert that physically there can be no end to dividing it. For aught we know, there may be ultimate atoms physically indivisible. But Mr. Spencer intends to deal not with physical but with mathematical division. The one has no greater difficulty in conception than the other. Apparently, like Bishop Berkeley, he does not understand the infinitesimal calculus. Infinite, in mathematics, as in common sense, is a negative word, meaning endless, boundless; it is only perverse metaphysicians who struggle to give it a positive sense. When I say, "There is no imaginable end to division," I know perfectly well what I mean, and I will not let Mr. Spencer throw dust into my eyes by assuring me that I cannot "conceive" this or that. I repeat: "Then I do not need to conceive." I admit that I cannot conceive (pictorially) a regular polygon with a billion sides, or a gnat's wing vibrating five hundred thousand times in a second; but to reason concerning these is as easy and as safe as if a billion were changed to six, and half a million to three; nay, sometimes is much easier. I can understand without (what he calls) conception.

Mr. Spencer rather arrogantly (p. 51) contradicts all our greatest mathematicians, who with one voice speak of discontinuous velocity; but he merely shows his own false notions on elementary mathematical thought. Imagine a point to describe a line A P B with varying velocity; and that it approaches P from the side A with a velocity estimated as 2 (as two inches in a second); but that in starting from P towards B it receives a sudden increase as by impact, making the velocity suddenly 4 (say four inches in a second); then mathematicians call the velocity at P discontinuous, because of its sudden finite increase. Or again, it may be suddenly diminished from 4 to 2 by some obstacle, as by collision. What says Mr. Spencer to this? "[The body] must then be moving with velocities 4 and 2 at the same instant; which is impossible." (p. 52.) This does but display his mathematical ignorance. Great mathematicians are not such fools as to say that 4 is 2, or 2 is 4; but Mr. Spencer does not understand how they estimate velocity, and how only it can be estimated. The velocity at P cannot be conceived of or estimated from the mere point P. The velocity of arrival at P is estimated solely by the previous motion; the velocity of departure is estimated solely by the after motion. There is no necessity that the two velocities should be the same. They may be supposed to differ to any extent, without confusion of thought. The velocity of arrival, however great, may be suddenly annihilated by an impervious obstacle, or even reversed; much more, suddenly diminished. (Physical considerations, such as elasticity brings in, are not here to the purpose. The question is not physical, but mental; namely, we inquire, in pure mathematics, what statements are intelligible and coherent.)

Mr. Spencer believes that in physics "the law of continuity" prevails. He may be right or wrong; nevertheless continuity and discontinuity are words alike intelligible. I do not quarrel with his physics; but he wants to carry these into logic, that is, into pure mathematics. He is so dogmatic (and every high mathematician will add, so ignorant) as to write (p. 51), "It is a law, of which the negative is inconceivable, that in passing from one degree of magnitude to any other, all intermediate degrees must be passed through." Mr. Spencer is trying to see geometry and pure mathematics (as he tries to see religion) through the spectacles of his physics, and utterly goes wrong. La Place, or Canchy, or Poisson, and every mathematical treatise, give him flat contradiction every time the word discontinuous is used. The negative of which he speaks as inconceivable is both conceived, and received, and enters into whole masses of coherent, verified, and valuable science.

The instructive matter here is, that Mr. Spencer undertakes to confute and puzzle the human mind in the sphere of religion, and overshoots his mark by extending his doctrine into the sphere of science; to the matters whose basis is common material experience equally with those on which he zealously fixes the word inscrutable, in order to nail up the door of entrance. What is plainer than that we are born to know something of many things, but not of anything to know everything? That knowledge can never be absolute (that is, perfect) in a finite, imperfect mind, is an axiom needing no elaborate argumentations. Talk about "the absolute" is generally wasted breath. Peculiarly in religion it is unplausible. I will here go as far as Mr. Spencer.

A dog can form a kind of friendship with man; can know that his master exists, can often come in contact with his mind, understanding some of his thoughts and wishes; can apprehend many things concerning him; yet assuredly cannot comprehend the man. Are we to suppose that the gap between the dog and the man is greater than that between man and God? We cannot deny that in the animal there is both thought and reasoning; but we are sure he cannot understand (to put a simple case) why his master does a hundred things every day.

Mr. Spencer (p. 101) taxes religionists with "self-contradiction" in "professing to have some knowledge of that which transcends knowledge." Yet I suppose he will admit that a dog has some knowledge of a man, and that the man transcends the dog's knowledge; or again, that I have some knowledge of that part of the globe of the earth which touches me, though the earth as a whole is beyond my knowledge, and (he tells me) I cannot conceive or "represent to myself in thought" the entire earth. He requires us to be content with total ignorance of the attributes of God, taunting religious persons as follows (p. 101): "While with one breath they assert that the cause of all things passes understanding, they with the next breath assert that the cause of all things possesses such and such attributes; can be in so far understood." Certainly. They never said or implied that nothing could be known about God, but only that God himself could not be wholly known. He can be apprehended, but not comprehended. Can Mr. Spencer seriously think that any one in calling God inscrutable meant that nothing at all could be known about him? He foists upon us his own doctrine of "Nescience," and then rebukes us for not holding to it. If the negative fact that God is inscrutable to us (which means that his nature and his doings cannot be thoroughly explored) were, as he asserts, "the vital element and central part" of religion, the most ignorant savage or child would be nearly on a par with the wisest man. Without some positive knowledge concerning God, the negative fact that "we cannot know him thoroughly" is worthless. It is astonishing that Mr. Spencer does not see how suicidal is his argument to all philosophy. It is not God only who is inscrutable and passes understanding. On all sides we are surrounded with infinite mystery; it is certain that nothing can be fully understood or thoroughly explored. Life and death, heaven and earth, matter and spirit, time and space, gravitation and electricity, and all other forces, are incomprehensible: yet a great deal is apprehended concerning them.

He winds up his second chapter by avowing it as "the deepest and most certain of all facts, that the Power which the universe manifests to us is utterly inscrutable." He might have said plainly (what perhaps is all that he here meant) that "by means of physical science we cannot know whether the forces of the universe are intelligent or blind." To this I give full assent. But I deny that physical science exhausts human knowledge. There is such a thing as the human mind, fully as important an object of study as sun and planets.

But Mr. Spencer, like a Greek philosopher, wants us to make religion a problem of physics. He will have us assail the problem from the most arduous side,—scale the wall where it is precipitous, instead of walking in at the open gate. Every religion, according to him, "is an apriori theory of the universe." He taunts theists that they have not enabled him "to conceive how matter was made out of nothing;" which, he says, is "the real mystery" (p. 34); and asks us (p. 35), "How came there to be an External Agency?" (which is his gratuitous phrase for a God.) He treats believers in God as aiming to explode mystery,—and not succeeding. Most assailants of religion, on the contrary, accuse religious persons of loving and cherishing or inventing mystery, and are undoubtedly nearer to the truth. It is Mr. Spencer who absurdly claims that we shall explode mystery. If a man reports that the King of Dahomey has massacred many of his subjects, I suppose Mr. Spencer will not disbelieve him, unless he can further reply, How came there to be a King of Dahomey? How long has he reigned? How tall is he? Why did he massacre, etc.? and so on. Because I claim to see and know that God lives and moves and acts in me, and in all men, and in all the elements, I am not thereby bound to explain to Mr. Spencer the origin of matter, or any other natural mystery, cosmogony, generation, or evolution. So far as my theism is concerned, nothing hinders my replying that, for aught I know, matter is coeval with God; but concerning the remote past it is obviously as impossible to know anything, as concerning the remotest depths of heaven; and to ask such questions is not the part of a wise man. He wants to make the origin of the universe the fundamental question of religion. He will have us start from a past eternity, in order that he may be able to reply, "You do not know what you are talking of; you cannot put meaning into your words." Just as reasonably he might claim that we will start from an infinite distance in space to explain what is now going on there, instead of beginning physics from near and sensible objects. The historical theism which he admits to be an abiding and weighty fact in human nature did not take this course. Nations of men begin from a perception and belief of spiritual power higher than man, which NOW lives and moves and rules. Superiority in power and wisdom is the primitive and essential attribute of Godhead, not all-mightiness nor eternity. Concerning the past duration of the gods (or of God, when monotheism arises), there is probably for a long time very little thought; nor is it essential to religion. That a God or gods exist, is discerned as matter of fact, fundamentally in the same way that each discerns other human minds beside his own. He sees neither the spirit of God nor the spirit of man with his eyes. To learn the attributes of Godhead is a longer and more difficult problem, in which experience coöperates with meditation and consciousness. With an increased observation of the unity in the physical world, a belief of monotheism arises, with virtual omnipresence and omniscience. Inferior gods or spirits, if still believed in, are depressed into angels or demons. By studying what things cause men to be immoral, a conviction spreads that no cause exists, or can exist, to make God immoral; and that as he is higher than we are, he must also be better; thereupon unblemished goodness is attributed to him. Before this stage is attained, religion is of very doubtful value, and may be a fantastic and wild folly, or the parent of dark fanaticism. But henceforward religion both conduces to morality, and becomes more beneficent in proportion as morality improves, though mean and narrow imaginations may remain attached to it. Where physics are little understood, religion as a moral force may yet have a noble development; while, if viewed as the solution of a problem of physics, it is contemptible; moreover, physics, we know, are of very recent growth. The nobleness of a religion by no means depends on accuracy in physical science. The religionist may believe that the blue heavens are a crystal vault, and that there is no existence beyond it; that God dwells in brilliant clouds which hang below the crystal, and has no other world than this interior sphere; that he has geometrical shape and size,—both unknown to us; yet probably has eyes and hands fundamentally like ours, though able to act at once anywhere within this limited but vast region. In like manner, the worshipper, however assured that God is older than man, has not necessarily at all entertained the question how old he is. To call him "the Ancient of Days" was quite sufficient. The Homeric Greeks supposed the gods to have been created by the elements at a definite time; and when their wiser men abandoned fable, it is not clear that they speculated about the past eternity of God. The Syrians or Hebrews who first entitled him The Existing One probably intended to deny that he was created, but for eternity past or future their language had no phrase; they could only say "ages," "ages of ages," "to an age," "from age to age," etc. And is not this quite philosophic, that is, quite accurate, speech? All that I can understand by eternity is an endless succession of finite ages; just as all that "an infinite series" in mathematics means is, term added to term without cessation.

Nor was it essential to the religious sentiment to define anything about the origin of the physical world. One Hebrew might believe that matter was created by God out of nothing; another that it preexisted in a chaos before it was organized by him. Learned "Orthodox" commentators (for instance, Dr. Pusey) insist that this is all that the Hebrew word (Bara) for "create" means; viz., shape, form, as certainly in Arabic. A Greek or a North American Indian might believe matter to have organized itself rudely, until a Great Spirit came to animate, perfect, rule it. These speculations, essentially physical, lie outside of the religion, as a crust or case, and are not the core. It is not the religious sentiment, but the speculative intellect, the would-be philosophic spirit, which presses these inquiries, and among other endless, fruitless theories talks of past eternity and predestination. If Mr. Spencer merely warned unwary religionists of the depth and difficulty of such questions, I should applaud him; but he brings them as a confutation of religion; whereas they belong not to religion, but only to a wild and barren philosophy.

A vast majority of common religionists, lower as well as higher minds, are satisfied with believing that God exists, and never think of asking, "How came there to be a God?" to which Mr. Spencer absurdly expects us to reply. I admit and maintain that the question is a legitimate retort from an atheist to a theist, if the theist have attacked the atheist by the question, "How came there to be a world?" But theism does not depend, as Mr. Spencer fancies, on solving the problem of cosmogony; and he has no right to expect theists to answer how and why, when they assert that God is a living certain fact, as much as man or the visible universe. Aristotle, and I believe Bacon, point at the vanity of perpetually asking how and why. The late Sir William Hamilton of Edinburgh insisted much on a passage in Aristotle which runs thus: "Not to be content with ultimate fact, but ever to ask why, is a weakness of the understanding." Of course no sooner is an answer given to the question why than it instantly suggests a new why and how; we must at last rest on fact somewhere. To explain all mystery is to become omniscient; no sober-minded man aims at anything so absurd; it is only the dream of some who puzzle themselves, and want to puzzle others. They are apt to tell us that God is a hypothesis, and yet does not account for the facts so as to explode mystery. But God with us is no hypothesis; and we do not try to account for ante-mundane facts; nay, but we think a man the reverse of wise who fancies that the human mind can ever explode mystery, in which we live and breathe forever. The vital part and nucleus of theism is the recognition of a present, living God,—present alike in time and space; of course it is at once understood that to explore his nature and purposes fully is beyond us; i.e., that he is inscrutable. But Mr. Spencer has not a shadow of right to pretend that this reduces religion to nescience. As said above, with equal right may he say that astronomy and history have nescience for their sphere.

CHRISTIANITY AS NAME AND THING.

BY JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D.D.

During the last week I attended two meetings in Boston where the discussions particularly interested me. One was that, on Tuesday morning, of the American Unitarian Association, where the subject of debate was whether the officers of that Association had done right or wrong in dropping from their catalogue of Unitarian ministers the name of the Rev. Wm. J. Potter, of New Bedford, pastor of the Unitarian church in that place. Their reason was that this gentleman had publicly declared that he did not wish to be called a Christian, and had given up the name. As this catalogue was notably a list of Unitarian Christian ministers, it was thought proper that his name should cease to stand there, so that the record should conform to the fact.

Some of the members of the Association, however, friends of Mr. Potter, or speaking in the interest of Christian liberty, protested against this omission, on the ground that Christianity was not a name, but a thing,—not a profession, but a reality,—and that Mr. Potter, by universal consent, was admitted to be in character, spirit, and life as good a Christian as could easily be found in the State of Massachusetts. To some persons it seemed like persecution for opinion's sake; to others like putting the form above the spirit; to others like a breach of Christian unity and a casting out of the fellowship of the body one whose communion it was most desirable to retain.

In listening to this discussion, it seemed to me that the question in this case was only of the name, not of the thing. This Unitarian catalogue did not profess to be a list of persons possessing a good Christian character, but only of those claiming a certain denominational title. It was a list of men who accepted the name of Unitarian Christian ministers. They might be better or might be worse than others who refused that designation; but it did not seem proper to put into the list of Unitarian Christians any man who declined to be called a Unitarian, or who declined to be called a Christian. It was only a question of the proper use of language, not a judgment of character. No one ever claimed that a man was considered any better because his name was contained in the Year Book, or any worse because it was omitted. Nor was it a question of fellowship. All men regard Mr. Potter as a worthy Christian minister in his faith, spirit, and life; and no one who so regards him will be any the less disposed to treat him as a Christian friend and brother because his name is not on a certain list. The question was not of fellowship or of censure, but of verbal accuracy.

But there was another discussion this last week at the meeting of the Free Religious Association, the subject of which was not Christianity as a name, but Christianity as a thing. The issue made here was between those who believe that Christianity, as a faith and life, is the real power by which mankind are carried forward, and those who think that it is an impediment to human progress. This debate was naturally vastly more important and interesting than the other, and it was conducted with great ability on both sides, and in perfect temper. In this respect, both of the discussions to which I have referred were remarkable instances of the strongest antagonism of opinion expressed without a word of harshness or the least tinge of bad temper. The bitterness of theological controversy was wholly absent, though the strength of opposing conviction was fully shown.

The charges made against Christianity by Mr. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX, were two: First, he said that in defining Christianity, and seeking for its essence, we are bound to take the belief of the great majority. We have no right, said he, to take the views of the Broad Church, which is everywhere in a minority, as giving the true type of the religion. Christianity means, he maintained, the doctrines of total depravity, substituted atonement, absolute decrees, and an eternal hell of fire for all unbelievers—since these doctrines have been the belief of the great majority of Christians in all time. If we think these to be false, we ought to consider Christianity to be false, and so to oppose it.

I admired Mr. Abbot's evident honesty and sincerity. I felt, while he spoke, that he was himself one of the pure and sweet products of Christianity. I thought that probably on the last day the Great Master of us all would say to him: "Well done, good and faithful servant!" and he would be astonished at finding that he had been a good Christian all the time without knowing it. Not a word dropped from his lips which had any touch of bitterness, of egotism, of wilfulness in it. But I was astonished that one brought up in the bosom of that Liberal Christianity which has always contended that the creed is one thing and the faith another, the theology is one thing and religion another, should have identified Christianity with any of its special theologies. Theodore Parker might have taught him better, for Theodore Parker always kept clear the distinction between religion and theology. It was sad to me to see a man who had been educated to a broad view go back to a narrow one, who had seen from childhood earnest Christians who were outside of all special theologies revert to such narrow definitions.

For what is Christianity? Some people will tell you that it is a belief; others that it is a church; others that it is a sentiment of feeling; others that it is morality or outward good conduct. All these, however, are results of Christianity, rather than Christianity itself. Christianity takes an outward form in creeds, in churches, in moralities, in emotions. But Christianity itself is something back of all this. Just as civilization is not steamships or railroads or power-looms, but knowledge behind them, and science, which takes these forms, so Christianity is not a creed or a church, but a life behind creeds and churches—a life in the mind and heart, which takes the forms of creeds and churches.

Behold that tree, planted by the river of water!—a stately sycamore, a lordly oak, a graceful elm. What is the essential thing in it which makes it a tree? Is it its root, its trunk, its branches, its leaves, its flowers, or its fruit? The tree produces all these. It goes down into its root; it goes up into its trunk; it spreads abroad in its branches; it expands into its innumerable leaves; but the tree itself is something back of all this. It is the mysterious, unitary life which lay hid in the seed, and which has worked after its kind, making either an oak, an elm, or a sycamore—something you cannot see, cannot weigh, cannot analyze. But when it departs, then the tree is dead. Then the essential thing about the tree is gone. The roots remain, the trunk remains, the branches are there, the leaves are perhaps not yet withered. But the tree is dead. It is no longer a tree; it is only the corpse of a tree. The hidden life in the tree is that which made it a tree.

So there is a hidden life in the world, which has made that great tree which we call Christianity—a tree in which all the birds of heaven make their nests. It is this which gives to it its unity under all its variety; it is a unity of the spirit, with diversity of ceremonies, creeds, customs, forms. There is a living force which we can trace back to its origin in Jesus of Nazareth; which works on to-day, creating anew faith and works in human hearts and lives. And, as we call science a knowledge, the source and essence of civilization, so we may call love the source and essence of Christianity.

Civilization is knowledge applied to life; not abstract knowledge, but applied knowledge—science turned into art. It is knowledge of the mineral kingdom turned into the arts of masonry, metallurgy, agriculture; knowledge of the vegetable kingdom turned into the textile arts—into cotton-looms and woollen-mills, into horticulture, arboriculture, carpentry. It is knowledge of chemistry, electricity, hydraulics, hydrostatics, magnetism, and other sciences, developed into telegraphs, steam-engines, railroads, printing-presses. It is knowledge changed to power, making one man with a machine as strong as a thousand without it. It is knowledge changed to wealth, making a hundred men in England as rich as a million in Arabia. Analyze civilization, and you will find it to be knowledge transmuted into power.

So analyze Christianity, under all its forms, creeds, rituals, churches, confessions, and it resolves itself in the last analysis into a life—a life born with Jesus of Nazareth, a life which has been creating and recreating the world. It is, as Col. Higginson said, the smallest and most scholastic view of Christianity to identify it with any of its creeds. It is the principle of love which, flowing from the life of Jesus, has made all things new in the world.

Another charge brought against Christianity by Mr. Abbot was that it was always opposed to mental freedom. He instanced, of course, the Roman Catholic Inquisition and all Protestant forms of persecution. But Col. Higginson well replied to this charge that it was not the spirit of Christianity which persecuted opinions, but the spirit of sects and parties. It was not religion, but organization, which persecuted; and Col. Higginson showed that this spirit of persecution showed itself in science also—that scientific men were just as apt to be intolerant of new opinions as religious men. Col. Higginson spoke not as a Christian, but as one standing outside of Christianity. But he proved, very conclusively, as against Mr. Abbot, that it would be a great loss to mankind if Christianity should perish, and that nothing could supply its place. The needs of the heart and soul, which religion meets, could never be supplied by science. The North American Review and the New York Nation could hardly, said he, take the place of the Christian Church.

In truth, liberty of opinion is the child of Christianity; not of science nor of civilization. "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." The martyrs of freedom have commonly been sustained by a religious faith. Very few men have consented to be burned for a scientific formula. Galileo renounced, on his knees, the Copernican theory. But Peter said to the Sanhedrim, who threatened him with death: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. For we cannot but speak the things we have seen and heard." This is the power which conquers liberty of thought for mankind—the religious faith which says: "We cannot but speak the things we have seen and heard."

Mr. Calthrop, of Syracuse, made a very comprehensive argument to show that the true development of humanity would take place inside of Christianity, and not outside of it. Assuming the ground of evolution, he showed that all the developments of life came from exceptional germs unfolded under favorable conditions. External conditions accomplished nothing without the presence of exceptional personalities. In other words, he proved that the progress of the world depended on the presence of inspired men—men raised up from time to time to be leaders and teachers of the race. Such men as Mohammed, Buddha, and Zoroaster were as essential to the unfolding of the Eastern religions as were the prophets of Judea to the production of the religion of the Old Testament. And so, he argued, the exceptional and wonderful life which was in Jesus was absolutely essential to the production of modern civilization and progress. Outside of the sphere and influence of this life all is dormant; within all is progressive. Christian civilization means the advance of the human race in science, art, literature, freedom, and human happiness. Into this civilization, born out of the life of Christ, all the old civilizations of the world flow. This is the ample stream which receives into its bosom all tributaries. Greece brings its literature and art; Rome brings its organizing and law-making powers; Egypt contributes its arts of domestic life; the Northern Teutonic nations bring individualism and freedom. The grandeur of Christianity consists in its being not exclusive, but inclusive. It is so large that all rivers of faith and thought can flow into it, and yet it is never full.

I could not but think, in listening to all this argument, how little Christianity has to fear from outspoken heresy. How much better to encourage all honest utterances than to try to check and repress them. Out of the heart of the Free Religious Association come some of the ablest arguments for vital religion and generous Christian faith.—Independent, June 11.

THE NAME AND THE THING.

What is Christianity? is the question which Dr. J. F. Clarke asks once more in another column. What sort of a man may properly be called a Christian?

So far as we can make out from Dr. Clarke's extremely figurative and analogical answer, Christianity is very like a lordly oak, and it is very like civilization, and, for aught we know, it may be like a whale or a weasel. What we want to know is not what it is like, but what it is.

But we must not seem to do our able correspondent injustice. He tells us that, "as we call science or knowledge the source and essence of civilization, so we may call love the source and essence of Christianity." And again: "It is the principle of love which, flowing from the life of Jesus, has made all things new in the world." This seems to come a little nearer to the point, for we would give more for two lines of definition than for a page of simile. We think we catch Dr. Clarke's idea, then, when we define the Christian as the man who controls his life by love—by love to such beings as he knows anything about and believes in,—love to parrots and goats if he be a Crusoe and they are his companions; love to men if he happens to be thrown among them; love to some God if he happens to know of or believe in any God. And Christianity, as we understand him, is the abstract of this concrete, is the living under the law of love, if it be not rather (for we are not sure) the Golden Rule itself reduced to the single word "Love." In accordance with this, Dr. Clarke calls Mr. Abbot "a good Christian without knowing it," and tells us that "all men regard Mr. Potter," another man who protests that he is no Christian, "as a worthy Christian minister in his faith, spirit, and life."

But according to this definition what has Christ to do with Christianity? He was an excellent Christian, doubtless, but certainly not the inventor of love. His Golden Rule he quoted from Moses. He gave an impetus to the principle of love and was a shining example of it, but was not its "source." Are Christianity and love identical?

We cannot think so. When Messrs. Abbot and Potter tell us they are no Christians, they seem to us to be right; for Christianity is as truly a doctrine as a life. We do not mean by this to say that the doctrine is as important as the life, nor that the doctrine does not produce the life. We prefer Penelope to Queen Catharine, Socrates to Pope John XII. We believe that Abraham and David and Isaiah were no Christians, but were much better than many Christians, and true children of God. We rejoice to believe that many a pagan, who could not know of Christ nor believe in him, has seen the invisible things of God, and lived a pious life. We rejoice to hope that others who have heard of Christ, but who, through some error of teaching or some misfortune of their mental structure, could not believe in him, or perhaps even in God, have yet lived according to the light they had, and have pleased God. Such men (we will not refuse to take Dr. Clarke's word for it) may be Mr. Potter and Mr. Abbot, although when the latter shall show more candor and charitableness toward Christian missions he will exhibit more signs of it.

Christianity has a historical sense. It means that system of faith and morals which Christ taught, or, to be more severely accurate, which Christendom has in all its ages and sects agreed in believing that Christ taught. It includes a claim of mastership or lordship on his part, and of salvation through his death. In the narrower and stricter sense, that man is a Christian who accepts Christ's theology and ethics, as that man is a Platonist who accepts Plato's ethics and philosophy. In its fuller and better sense, that man is a Christian who not only accepts these notions, but governs himself by the ethical principles laid down in Christ's teachings, and exemplified in his life. But, in historical fact, right living came before Christianity, and is incorporated within Christianity, and is distinguishable by terms of definition from Christianity. To identify right living with Christianity by conterminous definition is to abuse language. The attempt to foist this new meaning on Christianity is a very modern one, made by a few men who like the term, and are enamored of the moral teachings embodied in the system, but who reject the atonement of Christ and discipleship to him as Master, which are what makes Christianity something different from the lofty morality of Socrates or of Buddha.

Although we must utterly dissent from the definitions of Christianity made by Mr. Abbot and Mr. Potter, we cannot but believe that in rejecting the Scripture teachings in reference to Christ they have acted honestly in giving up a name so honored. In agreeing with them, as against Dr. Clarke, that they are not Christians, we mean no opprobrium, but only to stand fast by history and etymology. We are not denying that they may be as good men as Dr. Clarke says they are—better than many Christians; nor that God may see more to approve in them than in many who claim the name which they reject; but they are as much outside of Christianity as any godly Pagan or Mohammedan, and it is a mistaken charity to try to keep them where they know they do not belong.—Independent, June 11.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN NEW YORK STATE.

FOURTEEN WEEKS' INSTRUCTION IN EACH YEAR—EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN REGULATED—VIOLATIONS PUNISHABLE BY FINES—TEXT-BOOKS FREE TO POOR CHILDREN—THE LAW TO TAKE EFFECT JANUARY 1, 1875.

ALBANY, May 14.—The following is the text of the Compulsory Education Act, approved by the Governor on Tuesday last, which will be read with interest by the parents of children and the friends of education.

An act to secure to children the benefits of elementary education:—

MUST BE INSTRUCTED.

SEC. 1. All parents and those who have the care of children shall instruct them or cause them to be instructed in spelling, reading, writing, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic; and every parent, guardian, or other person having control and charge of any child, between the ages of eight and fourteen years, shall cause such child to attend some public or private day school, at least fourteen weeks in each year, eight weeks of which attendance shall be consecutive, or to be instructed regularly at home at least fourteen weeks in each year in spelling, reading, writing, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic, unless the physical or mental condition of the child is such as to render such attendance or instruction inexpedient or impracticable.

RELATIVE TO EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN.

SEC. 2. No child under the age of fourteen years shall be employed by any person to labor in any business whatever during the school hours of any school-day of the school term of the public school in the school district or the city where such child is, unless such child shall have attended some public or private day-school, where instruction was given by a teacher qualified to instruct in spelling, reading, writing, geography, English grammar, and arithmetic, or shall have been regularly instructed in said branches by some person qualified to instruct in the same, at least fourteen of the fifty-two weeks next preceding any and every year in which such child shall be employed, and shall at the time of such employment deliver to the employer a certificate in writing, signed by a teacher or school trustee of a district or of a school, certifying to such attendance or instruction; and any person who shall employ any child, contrary to the provisions of this section, shall, for each offence, forfeit and pay a penalty of $50 to the treasurer, or chief fiscal officer of the city or supervisor of the town in which such offence shall occur, the said sum or penalty, when so paid, to be added to the public school money of the school district in which the offence occurred.

TO BE EXAMINED.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the trustee or trustees of every school district, or public school, or union school in every town and city, in the months of September and of February of each year, to examine into the situation of the children employed in all manufacturing establishments in such school district; and in case any town or city is not divided into school districts, it shall, for the purposes of the examination provided for in this section, be divided by the school authorities thereof into districts, and the said trustees notified of their respective districts, on or before the first day of January of each year; and the said trustee or trustees shall ascertain whether all the provisions of this act are duly observed, and report all violations thereof to the treasurer or chief fiscal officer of said city or supervisor of said town. On such examination, the proprietor, superintendent, or manager of said establishment shall, on demand, exhibit to said examining trustee a correct list of all children between the ages of eight and fourteen years employed in said establishment, with the said certificates of attendance on school or of instruction.

CHILDREN DISCHARGED FROM EMPLOYMENT.

SEC. 4. Every parent, guardian, or other person having control or charge of any child, between the ages of eight and fourteen years, who has been temporarily discharged from employment in any business, in order to be afforded an opportunity to receive instruction or schooling, shall send such child to some public or private school, or shall cause such child to be regularly instructed as aforesaid at home, for the period for which such child may have been so discharged, to the extent of at least fourteen weeks in all, in each year, unless the physical or mental condition of the child is such as to render such an attendance or instruction inexpedient or impracticable.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 5. The trustee or trustees of any school district, or public school, or the president of any union school, or in case there is no such officer, then such officer as the board of education of said city or town may designate, is hereby authorized and empowered to see that Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this Act are enforced, and to report in writing all violations thereof to the treasurer or chief fiscal officer of his city, or to the supervisor of his town. Any person who shall violate any provisions of Sections 1, 3, and 4 of this Act, shall, on written notice of such violation from one of the school officers above named, forfeit, for the first offence, the sum of $1; and after such first offence shall, for each succeeding offence in the same year, forfeit and pay to the treasurer of said city, or supervisor of said town, the sum of $5 for each and every week, not exceeding thirteen weeks in any one year, during which he, after written notice from said school officer, shall have failed to comply with any of said provisions. The said penalties to be added to the public school moneys of said school district in which the offence occurred.

TEXT-BOOKS FREE FOR CHILDREN OF POOR PARENTS.

SEC. 6. In every case arising under this Act, where the parent, guardian, or other person having the control of any child, between the said ages of eight and fourteen years, is unable to provide such child for said fourteen weeks with the text-books required to be furnished, to enable such child to attend school for said period, and shall so state in writing to the said trustee, the said trustee shall provide said text-books for said fourteen weeks, at the public school, for the use of such child, and the expense of the same shall be paid by the treasurer of said city or the supervisor of said town, on the certificate of the said trustee, specifying the items furnished for the use of such child.

TRUANTS.

SEC. 7. In case any person having the control of any child, between the ages of eight and fourteen years, is unable to induce said child to attend school, and shall so state in writing to said trustee, the said child shall, from and after the date of the delivery to said trustee of said statement in writing, be deemed and dealt with as an habitual truant, and said person shall be relieved of all penalties incurred for said year after said date, under Sections 1, 4, and 5 of this Act.

STREET CHILDREN TO BE CARED FOR.

SEC. 8. The board of education or public instruction (by whatever name it may be called in each city) and the trustees of the school districts and union school in each town, by an affirmative vote of a majority of said trustees, at a meeting or meetings to be called for this purpose, are hereby authorized and empowered and directed on or before January 1, 1875, to make all needful provisions, arrangements, rules and regulations concerning habitual truants, and children between said ages of eight and fourteen years of age, who may be found wandering about the streets or public places of such city or town during the school hours of the school day of the term of the public school of said city or town, having no lawful occupation or business, and growing up in ignorance, and said arrangements shall be such as shall, in their judgment, be most conducive to the welfare of such children, and to the good order of such city or town, and shall provide suitable places for the discipline and instruction and confinement, when necessary, of such children, and may require the aid of the police of cities and constables of towns to enforce their said rules and regulations, provided, however, that such arrangements shall not go into effect as laws for said several cities and towns until they shall have been approved in writing by a justice of the Supreme Court for the judicial district in which said city or town is situated, and when so approved he shall file the same with the clerk of the said city or town, who shall print the same, and furnish ten copies thereof to each trustee of each school district or public or union school of said city or town. The said trustee shall keep one copy thereof posted in a conspicuous place, in or upon each schoolhouse in his charge during the school terms in each year; in like manner, the same in each city or town may be amended or revised annually in the month of December.

JURISDICTION.

SEC 9. Justices of the peace, civil justices, and police justices shall have jurisdiction, within their respective towns and cities, of all offences, and of all actions for penalties or fines described in this act.

EVENING SCHOOLS.

SEC. 10. Two weeks' attendance at a half-time or evening school, shall, for all purposes of this act, be counted as one week at a day school.

TO TAKE EFFECT JAN. 1, 1875.

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1875.—Brooklyn Argus.

THE DOGMA OF PAPAL INFALLIBILITY.

[In view of the great interest felt in the struggle of the German Empire with the Romish Church, our readers will like to read the following translation of the concluding portion of Chapter IV. De Capite Ecclesiæ, promulgated by the famous Œcumenical Council of 1870.—ED.]

"Wherefore, we, adhering faithfully to the tradition, which dates from the commencement of Christianity, for the glory of God our Saviour, for the exaltation of the Catholic religion and the salvation of Christian peoples, we teach and define, with approbation of the Sacred Council, as a dogma, divinely revealed: That the Roman Pontiff, when he speaks 'ex cathedra'—that is to say, when discharging the functions of pastor and doctor of all the faithful by virtue of his supreme apostolic authority,—he defines a doctrine of faith or morals to be held by the Universal Church, he fully enjoys, by the divine assistance promised to him in blessed Peter, the same infallibility which our Divine Redeemer intended His Church should be endowed with when defining anything concerning faith and morals; or consequently such definitions of the Roman Pontiff are of themselves irreformable, independent of any consent of the Church.

"If any one shall presume, which may God forbid, to contradict this our definition, let him be anathema."

[In connection with the above, the following translation from the Berlin Volks-Zeitung, showing that the dogma of infallibility is by no means a mere abstraction without practical bearings, will also be of interest.—ED.]

"We have received the following communication from Rome, which we publish unabbreviated: 'Your newspapers of all political shades talk a great deal about the question of the personal infallibility of the Pope, but none of them has defined the true point of view from which it ought to be regarded, the majority, probably, because they are badly informed, and some because they are not permitted, or do not wish, to show their cards before the proper time is come. For eighteen years the Jesuits have been pursuing a deeply-laid plan, which they have of late matured, since the conviction has forced itself upon them that the temporal power of the Pope is approaching its end with irresistible rapidity. New pecuniary resources had to be found to supply the place of those which would be closed to the Holy Chair by such an event. Now all the possessions of the Jesuits belong to the whole Order. Nothing is the peculiar property of a special mission, monastery, etc. The General has an unlimited power over all the pecuniary resources of the Jesuits, which he disposes of according to the wants of the time, and can recall and divide in a different manner when, by so doing, he hopes to further the purposes of the Order whose head he is. This is not the case with the rest of the property of the Church. It belongs to certain chapters, monasteries, etc., which, as may well be supposed, are not always inclined to renounce their possessions in favor of the whole Church. Very rarely, and only in special cases, do they sacrifice a part of it for general purposes, and they never do so without reluctance and resistance. This is to be changed. All clerical possessions are to become the common property of the whole Catholic Church. In order to effect this, the right of disposing of them must be placed in the hand of a single person. The dogma of infallibility is only the means of securing this end. When it is once proclaimed, the bishops, abbots, and chapters will be placed in a position which will render it impossible for them to assert their claims to the separate enjoyment of the property they have hitherto possessed. The minority suspect the dangerous arguments which may be based on the doctrine. The dogmatic discussions are, after all, only sham fights. The Jesuits are no idealists; they have always practical ends in view. Men of a similar character are also to be found among the bishops, though they do not form the majority of the episcopate, and they are beginning to perceive the threatening danger. When the Pope, by means of his infallibility, has become the absolute master of the entire property of the Church, he will have to decide whether he will go hand in hand with the General of the Jesuits, or venture to commence a war with an Order which is powerful enough to prevent the next papal elections taking a turn likely to render such a conflict imminent.'"

THE CHURCH ALMANAC of 1874 gives the following summary of the Episcopal Church in the United States: Dioceses, 41; missionary jurisdictions, 9; bishops, 52; other clergy, 3,042; ordinations of deacons, 147; priests, 113; candidates for orders, 340; churches consecrated, 66; baptisms. 39,944; confirmations, 23,515; communicants, 260,000.

Poetry.

"THE LIGHT WHICH LIGHTETH EVERY MAN."

WRITTEN FOR THE FREE RELIGIOUS FESTIVAL, BOSTON, MAY 29, 1874, BY SAMUEL LONGFELLOW.

O Life that maketh all things new,—
The blooming earth, the thoughts of men!
Our pilgrim feet, wet with thy dew,
In gladness hither turn again.
From hand to hand the greeting flows,
From eye to eye the signals run,
From heart to heart the bright hope glows;
The lovers of the Light are one.

One in the freedom of the Truth,
One in the joy of paths untrod,
One in the soul's perennial youth,
One in the larger thought of God;
The freer step, the fuller breath,
The wide horizon's grander view,
The sense of life that knows no death,
The Life that maketh all things new.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 12.

Chas. Parsons, $3; Robt. Mochrie, $1.50; Thos. Tasker, $3; D. G. Crandon, $4; Wm. H. Bisbee, $3; James S. Dodge, $4; Geo. P. Mayhew, $3; Geo. J. Adams, $1; C. Neuman, $3; D. G. Shillock, $1.50; Jno. Blain, $11.30; M. S. Rogers, $3; Jas. Boyd, $5; J. G. Holtzwarth, $6; W. Clark, $3; Jas. Blinn, $3; J. Gist, $4; Sam'l Egalf, $3; R. McIntosh, $1; John S. Cox, $3; J. M. Hall, $1; B. B. Griswold, $1.75; Joseph Gitskey, $3; Herman Baumbach, $3; Jacob Romeis, $3; Joseph Knight, $3.20; Mary Shannon, $280; Mary C. Shannon, $50; A. S. Latty, $70; Mary E. Bird, $10; G. H. Foster, 60 cents; G. H. Talbot, $2; Geo. Lewis, 35 cents; Alex. Lemcke, 50 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

JOSEPH TUCKERMAN ON THE ELEVATION OF THE POOR. A Selection from his Reports as Minister at Large in Boston. With an Introduction by E. E. Hale. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1874.

SEA AND SHORE. A Collection of Poems. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1874.

SOME WOMEN'S HEARTS. By Louise Chandler Moulton, author of "Bed-Time Stories." Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1874.

PAPA'S OWN GIRL. A Novel. By Marie Howland. New York: John P. Jewett. 1874.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

THE PENTATEUCH in Contrast with the Science and Moral Sense of our Age. By a Physician. Part IV.—DR. CARPENTER AT SION COLLEGE; or, The View of Miracles Taken by Men of Science.—Published by Thomas Scott, Esq., No. 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E. 1874.

THE ABSOLUTE SUFFICIENCY OF NATURAL RELIGION as a Revelation from God, Examined in the Light of Reason and the Bible. By A. B. Bradford. Salem, Ohio: Walton. 1874.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Board of Directors of the St. Louis Public Schools, for the Year Ending August 1, 1873. St. Louis: 1874.

THE UNITARIAN REVIEW AND RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE. June, 1874. Boston: L. C. Bowles, 3 Tremont Place.

OLD AND NEW. June, 1874. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 143 Washington Street.

THE PENN MONTHLY. June, 1874. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut Street.

LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE. June, 1874. New York and Chicago.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JUNE 18, 1874.

GLIMPSES.

The Secretary of the "Clearfield County Freethought Association," in Pennsylvania, writes that he is instructed by that Association to report it to us as a Liberal League. The President is Mr. Samuel Widemire, and the Secretary is Mr. Harry Hoover.

The Occasional Observer, a very small sheet of four pages, has appeared in Lynn, Massachusetts, as we "prophesied" two or three weeks ago, in defence of the essay by Mr. Augustine Jones on Quakerism. It says that The Index "misunderstands both the essay and its friends;" but as it fails to point out in what, we are none the wiser and can make no reparation.

The Lansing (Michigan) State Republican has this paragraph: "The crusading women at Pittsburg to the number of forty, and at Cincinnati to the number of forty-three, have been arrested and tried in the Police Court for violation of the ordinance against obstructing sidewalks. There is no doubt of their technical infraction of the law, and the authorities seem determined to enforce it. In Michigan there has been comparatively little of this style of warfare carried on, and the facts will show that greater progress has been made in checking the liquor traffic here than among the more excitable people of Southern Ohio, where the crusade began with street-prayers and hymns,—or that more of the work stays done here."

The Third Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association was held at Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 6. A majority of votable shares was represented, and the following gentlemen were elected Directors for the ensuing year: William J. Potter, A. E. Macomber, Frank J. Scott, E. W. Meddaugh, R. H. Ranney, G. W. Park, H. K. Oliver, Jr., A. W. Stevens, F. E. Abbot. In the evening a delightful re-union of our old friends was held at the hospitable residence of Mr. Macomber, and it was a pleasure indeed to meet them after a year's absence. Next day we delivered a lecture on "The Coming Religion" in Odeon Hall, and found the same indulgent audience with which that Hall is so pleasantly associated in our memory. Toledo is growing at a wonderful rate, two hundred new houses (so we were informed) being now in process of erection in a single ward of the city. The Index has many warm friends there, and wishes them all the utmost possible measure of prosperity and happiness.

Here is a parody on Orthodox mysticism, entitled "The Cosmic Egg," which is as trustworthy a cosmogony as that in vogue:—

Upon the Rock yet uncreate,
Amid a Chaos inchoate,
An uncreated Being sate—
Beneath Him Rock,
Above Him Cloud,
And the Cloud was Rock,
And the Rock was Cloud.

The Rock soon growing moist and warm,
The Cloud began to take a Form,
As though a Something would be Born—
A Form chaotic, vast, and vague,
Which issued in The Cosmic Egg.

Then the Being uncreate
Upon The Egg did Incubate,
And thus became the Incubator;
And of The Egg did Allegate,
And thus became the Allegator;
And the Incubator was Potentate,
But the Allegator was Potentator.

"RELIGION AND SCIENCE."

A thoughtful communication in another column makes inquiries as to the meaning of "scientific religion." Mr. Potter's very able treatment of this subject, in the first portion of his Horticultural Hall lecture (published in The Index of March 26), is the best answer to some of these inquiries; but the theme is of perennial interest, and fresh statements are continually necessary.

1. Science is rightly considered by Mr. Adams to be "knowledge which is verified, proven, or capable of verification and proof by processes of the logical mind." But religion, at least as we conceive it, is something more than "a natural sentiment, an inherent feeling of wonderment, reverence, or worship," whether dependent upon or independent of knowledge (science). It must aim at the symmetrical and highest possible development of all human faculties, if it is to maintain its place as the chief interest of man. To adopt a narrower view is to shear it of its greatest dignity and importance, and make it the special culture of certain faculties rather than a universal enlargement and elevation of our whole being. If its main aim is to make us conversant with "subjects outside of and above Nature," then a naturalistic philosophy which identifies Nature with the totality of all that is real must shelve religion as the chief superstition that has survived the early barbarism of man. The dualism of natural and supernatural cannot co-exist with the modern conception of Nature as the all-inclusive unity of the universe.

2. The common distinction between "the knowable and the unknowable" rests on the contradiction that we know nothing at all of that of which we nevertheless do know that it cannot be known. It is an inherent inconsistency to talk of "the unknowable,"—as if we could in advance pronounce upon the attributes of what has never yet come within the range of our faculties. Who can venture to say that the unknown is unknowable, when this very statement itself assumes a certain knowledge of it? It is a fallacy to account for the bare fact of human ignorance by postulating a fictitious quality of necessary incomprehensibleness in objective being. It is the business of science to learn all it can, but not to excuse its own failure to learn everything all at once by the shallow device of pretending that this, that, or the other "cannot be known." Stellar chemistry was once considered a part of "the unknowable;" let us learn wisdom by experience, and be more modest than to arrogate knowledge to ourselves in the very act of disclaiming it. True science is content to teach what it has learned, to learn as fast as it can, and to teach nothing about what it has learned nothing. But its motto must be—nil desperandum.

3. The intellect alone affirms or denies, constructs propositions, connects subject and predicate. The verb is the expression of a purely intellectual act. There is immense confusion on this subject. A man is conscious of certain emotions and sentiments; he has feelings of reverence, awe, worship; he exclaims, "God must exist!" and he jumps to the conclusion that his "heart," that is, his emotional nature, makes this affirmation. Not at all. Feeling affirms nothing: only thought affirms. The intellect may make its affirmation on good or bad or even no appreciable evidence; but the mental act by which connection is made between any subject and its predicate is purely intellectual, and we deceive ourselves if we fancy that any belief which can be stated rests on any other ground than this intellectual act. Now the scientific method simply requires that religious opinions shall be formed with as scrupulous deference to the laws of the intellect as any other opinions; that they shall be grounded on genuine facts and constructed on logical principles. Without this conscious regulation of belief by the natural laws of thought, religion degenerates inevitably into superstition. Sentiments may be the sole data on which many a religious opinion is built; but intellect is the builder, and it is a vast mistake to think that any opinions may be true in defiance of logic. Science, when mature, must recognize all facts, including those of pure sentiment; but the conclusions it draws from them must be drawn in strictest conformity with scientific method. The moment you have stated your belief in the form of a sentence or proposition, you have brought it within the jurisdiction of this method; and what you cannot state in that form is not entitled to be called a belief at all. This is what we mean by "scientific religion": not religion which is independent of sentiment or emotion, but religion whose thought concerning sentiment or emotion is in harmony with the laws of all thought and the facts of all being. So far as religion includes thought or belief at all, it is amenable to logic; and if any one fancies otherwise, he is like the man who talked prose all his life without suspecting it. The only way to escape from the jurisdiction of the logical intellect is to stop thinking altogether; and the unsatisfactory character of intuitionalism results from its attempt to carry on thinking to which the laws of thought do not apply. Just so far as the knowledge of truth is an element of religion, just so far must religion submit to obey the laws of scientific inquiry: it cannot afford to despise these laws without becoming a teacher of the imaginary or the false. All truth that is known is known by the intellect, and it is a simple confusion of terms to speak of knowing anything by feeling or sentiment—by the "heart."

4. There is no tendency in what we have said to disparage the "heart." We only say that it is not the "heart" which thinks, believes, or knows, but rather the "head," the intellect. Feeling untranslated into thought is not belief or knowledge at all; the moment it becomes thought, it comes within the domain of science; but feeling nevertheless constitutes a large part of our life, and a very important part. Religion includes it quite as really as it includes belief or knowledge; and no one who is devoid of the deepest and finest feeling is qualified to study religion in the truly scientific spirit. Religious feeling as such must be shared in order to be understood or criticised intelligently, and mere familiarity with physics, astronomy, or chemistry does not qualify one to be a scientific student of religion. It takes a very broad and deep sympathy, an intense and profound experience, to fit any one for the critical and strictly scientific investigation of religion as an historical and spiritual reality. But it also takes a perfectly clear comprehension of what constitutes scientific method, and a thorough conviction of the necessity of conforming all religious thought to the requirements of the most rigorous logic. Mr. Adams very excellently expresses our meaning when he says: "I suspect that by the term 'scientific religion' you mean, not religion springing out of science, but religion somehow made conformable to the largest and truest knowledge." Religion does not spring out of science; it is the whole of human life directed towards the highest ideal aims, and science is simply the intellectual side of it. Taken as synonymous with the sum-total of human knowledge of the universe we inhabit, science is a part of religion, as the perfection of man's intellectual nature; while at the same time religion in its entirety is itself the highest subject of scientific study and investigation.

5. Of course it follows from what we have said that we can have no "exact and final knowledge" of what is "beyond the grasp and comprehension of the knowing powers." There is no such knowledge as that. Neither science nor religion, in any acceptation of the words, can furnish it. The pretensions of religion to teach "inscrutable mysteries" are summarily abated, when the scientific method is accepted as the only means of attaining real knowledge; and the attempt to make "intuitional assumptions scientific" is speedily abandoned by it. Science cannot assume God in order to explain the universe; but it can and does reverently study the universe to learn what it has to teach about God. There is an immense difference between these two positions and objects, and it is the difference between the intuitional and the scientific schools of religious thought.

NOT QUITE SO.

In a recent number of the Liberal Christian, in an editorial article on the Unitarian "Year Book Controversy" (wherein decided ground is taken against the action of the Assistant Secretary, since endorsed by the Unitarian Association), an incidental misstatement is made which seems worth correcting. The writer says that, after Mr. Frothingham (the President of the Free Religious Association) had requested that his name should be omitted from the list of ministers, it was only a simple act of courtesy on the part of the compiler of the Year Book to consult the wishes of "the only other member of that Association whose name appeared in the book." That part of this statement which I have put in quotation-marks is incorrect, though, of course, accidentally so. As a matter of fact, there are some thirty names still enrolled in the Year Book list of Unitarian ministers, that are also duly recorded, or have been within the last two years, in the membership of the Free Religious Association,—not to speak of a number of others, recognized in the Year Book as Unitarian ministers, who are active coöperators with the Free Religious Association, though not formally putting their names to its list of members. And at the time Mr. Fox began the Year Book correspondence there were, besides Mr. Frothingham's, three names on the Executive Committee of the Free Religious Association that were also in the Year Book list of ministers. Two of these still remain on the Committee, and on the accredited list of ministers.

I state these facts simply to correct the accidental error into which the Liberal Christian has fallen, and not to draw any inference from them,—excepting this, that those specially interested in the free religious movement have from the outset refused to consider it as a secession from Unitarianism or from any sect, or as in itself the organization of a new sect. From the beginning, the Second Article of the Constitution of the Free Religious Association has said, "Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations." The Free Religious Association does not therefore exclude from its membership those who may be connected with any of the sects; and it has actually among its members not only many who are accounted good Unitarians, but Quakers, Jews, Spiritualists, and even a few Orthodox Christians, as well as those who give no name to their faith. If the names of the thirty Unitarian ministers that are in its membership were to be printed, the fact of some of them being there would probably be a surprise to their brethren.

W. J. P.

PRESIDENT ELIOT'S POSITION.

The skill and ingenuity of President Eliot are well known, but he never showed these qualities more conspicuously than in his address before the Christian Union on the taxation of church property. It seems to me that General Butler himself never achieved a feat of more brilliant audacity than when the President of an untaxed corporation of enormous wealth, like Harvard College, stood before the community with the claim that he spoke on the subject of tax-exemption "with disinterestedness and freedom," because he was a layman and had been a professor of chemistry! Yet I am grateful for this amazing stroke of daring, since it has helped to convince me, at least, of what I had before doubted,—that the principle of tax-exemption is precisely the same whether applied to churches or colleges, and that so long as either class is exempt it will help to shield the other from taxation. This is one inevitable inference from President Eliot's position. The other is, that he is utterly inconsistent in his opposition to President White, of Cornell, in regard to State education. President White maintains that the State should have a share both in the endowment and the control of universities. President Eliot claims the right to tax the community for their support; but says, "Hands off!" in respect to their control.

T. W. H.

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF FREE LOVE.

To the Editor of The Index:

My dear Sir,—The letter from Mr. Voysey which has provoked a reply from Mrs. Woodhull and a comment from Mr. Morse is unfortunate for the interests of truth, if discussion is to stop here. After your words expressing desire that "the subject may rest here at present," Mr. Voysey may be silent; yet silence seems to leave an unfair slur on him. His letter had my sympathy and general approval, as soon as I read it in your columns, although I had absolutely no knowledge of the facts concerning Dr. Nichols, and only imperfect knowledge concerning Mrs. Woodhull. I now see that what he writes, up to the mention of Mrs. Woodhull's name, has no proper application to Mrs. Woodhull personally. My present letter aims at clearing up confusion, with the least possible pretension of advocacy or judicial decision. But if you think that to admit this letter will open the door to too lengthy discussion, I beg you to suppress it:—not but that I believe this question of free love to be of far greater importance than the discussions in dozens of your columns.

1. Mr. Voysey himself avows that he does not understand Mrs. Woodhull; for he says, "She must blame herself, if we cannot guess what she is driving at:" i.e., if we are perplexed as to her designs and wishes. It is evident that he did not understand her; nor did I; but now all is plain. She says she "sees clearly, in the near future [manifestly with hope and approbation], that the question to be asked of mothers will be, What is the status, physically, mentally, and morally of your child? and not, Who is its father?"

2. Mrs. Woodhull further speaks with disparagement of keeping man and woman together "one and one." Her words are: "In the strife to keep ONE AND ONE tied together, their offspring are forgotten." Add to this her implication that it is of secondary importance "who is the father," and it seems beyond question that a truthful lady must utterly disapprove of any marriage vow of faithfulness to one husband. She does aim, therefore, "to go backward" into the state which preceded the institution of legal marriage. She may complain of the moral coloring in the word savage; but she ought to admit, as a fact, that she desires to go back into savage freedom. Instead of being affronted at what Mr. Voysey says about adultery, ought she not to reply that his argument is out of place? For it implies that a vow of exclusive union to one husband has been made; which is the very thing that she deprecates.

3. Since I discern in Mrs. Woodhull the enthusiast for ideas (certainly not the apologist of vice), I conclude her to desire to put the union of parents on the same moral footing as the union (say) of sisters. If two sisters have lived together thirty years in great harmony, a breach and separation may be as painful as the separation of the parents of a family. Mrs. Woodhull may lament, as deeply as Mr. Voysey, that a wife should leave her husband or a husband his wife after long and intimate union, and may think that this, as in the case of two sisters, will rarely happen without very grave moral cause; but she maintains (if I understand her) that the right of judging whether there is adequate cause must be retained jealously by the individual, and never be delegated to a legal tribunal. She would have the [unmarried] pair legally as free as the two sisters; and in a case of separation she would approve or disapprove, not by a general formula of morals, but by considering the details of fact.

4. Thus it appears that Mrs. Woodhull can find little in the public law of marriage to censure; the great weakness (from her point of view) is in women themselves, who, when they are capable of feeding themselves and a young family, are so foolish as to enter into vows of faithfulness to one man. If a lady of fortune choose to invite one gentleman after another, of suitable age, to be her temporary chamber-friend, and she thus produces to the community a troop of remarkably fine children, Mrs. Woodhull is indignant that such a lady should receive moral censure, or be excluded from society. If the children are physically thriving, we must hope well for "their moral and mental status." But the law would leave to the mother the sole control of the children, and sole responsibility for them, and would not acknowledge the smallest right of any of her lovers over her person or her property, any more than over the children. No change in the law is needed, in so far, but only a refusal of women to put their heads into a noose.

5. I gather that Mrs. Woodhull thinks that both law and custom are unjust to women in making it artificially hard for them to maintain themselves. So think I; so probably thinks Mr. Voysey, and thousands of those who shudder at Mrs. Woodhull's theories. But while everything should be done which can be done, by reform of law and customs, to give full justice to women as to employments and remuneration, Mrs. Woodhull will hardly shut her eyes to the fact that, after all, few women out of a great nation will be competent to rear a family (if it were just to put the whole burden on the mother), much less to put them forward in life; hence the tendency of her efforts is to induce a pecuniary bargain, that the lover chosen by the lady shall make a large payment, partly positive and partly conditional. The moral results of such a relation must on no account be thrown out of sight; but I do not here discuss them.

6. When Mrs. Woodhull says that "to marry for a home is not a whit better than prostitution,—indeed, is prostitution," she seems hardly to understand the true meaning of that ugly word,—which is, "presenting oneself for public or indiscriminate sale." It is to be lamented that any woman should marry either chiefly or solely for a home; yet oftentimes such a marriage is far from unhappy, and to confound it with prostitution is surely extravagant; but I write now solely to recall attention to the true meaning of this word. A kept mistress or concubine is not a prostitute, though, alas! she is too often on the road towards becoming one.

7. Mr. Voysey's question: "Are we men, or are we beasts?" and his phrase "bestiality" have exasperated Mrs. Woodhull; and certainly the color of the last word must be deprecated. But she differs little as to fact. Her own words in reply are that she "is determined to rise to the level of the female brute," and in fact she makes the freedom of the brute the goal of her aim, as far as appears. If she merely insisted that no woman whatever, married or unmarried, should forfeit her control over her own person, I (for one) heartily agree, and have in print maintained the need of changing our laws of marriage on this very matter; moreover, I find the analogy from the brutes of value as strengthening the female right of Veto,—though I wish all the facts were clearer. But it is one thing to say that marriage ought not to give to a husband compulsory powers over a wife; another thing to say that no legal marriage ought to exist at all. All antiquity regarded marriage by law as the beginning of civilization,—"concubitu prohibere vago;" and to overthrow this institution is to go back to the state of brutes. Mrs. Woodhull desires "the physical, moral, and mental status" of children to be improved; brutes have no care for the moral and mental state of offspring. Herein consists their difference from us: else those in which the sexes are numerically about equal would be entirely a pattern for us.

8. Mrs. Woodhull writes as if it were certain scientific fact that children are now "born murderers, drunkards, and other criminals." If she allude to the enormity of drunken fathers, she touches on what is abominable, but exceptional. Evil rights given by the law to husbands are open to her attack. But an overthrow of marriage does not remove the evil. It is too notorious to us in England that intoxicating drink, above all other things, carries men into sexual debauchery. On the other hand, she must not expect us to believe, on the word of some medical practitioners, that vice and crime exist solely or chiefly through hereditary transmission.

9. Some strong passages that Mr. Voysey has written apply to phases of sexual liberty different from that claimed by Mrs. Woodhull; especially the right of having, besides one's wife or husband, a spiritual wife or husband. The spiritually married are supposed to have an unlimited mental and moral intimacy, including a frequent companionship and interchange of sentiment. This is that which will only too often cause people to fall "over a precipice." I think Mr. Voysey will modify his epithet, "nasty theories," and the phrase bestiality, without at all weakening his deep disapproval of the theories, as tending to the overthrow of family life and to entire social licentiousness.

It is impossible now not to discuss these matters, and in the circles which are free from religious authority they will be most faithfully and usefully discussed.

Francis William Newman.

[If "silence" on Mr. Voysey's part should "seem to leave an unfair slur upon him," it would be both unjust and unkind to avail ourself of Professor Newman's generous permission to "suppress" the above letter. But we have not the slightest wish to "suppress" it. On the contrary, we are very glad to publish it, if for no other reason than to present a notable instance of the discussion of a very delicate subject in a style at once fearless, frank, courteous, and totally free from personal reflections of an invidious nature. Professor Newman has set a noble example of the true way, and the only effective way, of criticising views which are too often met with an irrelevant torrent of abuse; and what he has said on the subject we consider eminently fitting and forcible. Mr. Voysey's letter, as we understand it, was not at all designed to cast any reflections on personal character; but we saw with regret that it would almost inevitably be considered to do so, and our only effort has been to avoid getting The Index involved in profitless personal controversies. If he feels desirous to rectify any misunderstanding of his words or his intent, he will not hesitate to do it; for we trust no one, least of all Mr. Voysey, supposes that we meant to intimate any wish to the contrary. Our own disapproval of the "Free Love" theory is every whit as emphatic as that of Mr. Voysey or Professor Newman; but the latter's opinion of Mrs. Woodhull as an "enthusiast for ideas [of a very crude and one-sided nature], certainly not the apologist of vice," is also ours. We add that we agree to every word of the closing sentence of the above letter; and discussion of the "social question" in these columns is just as much in order as that of any other, provided it be conducted with the same dignity and decorum that mark this letter throughout.—Ed.]

LONDON LETTER.

To the Editor of the Index:—

Sir,—Changes occur so slowly in our old institutions here that we hail with delight any kind of innovation in the right direction. I have to record a very pleasant episode in church matters which occurred here a few days ago.

The Rev. Dr. Parker, calling himself a Congregationalist, and representing a sort of Evangelical type of Dissenters, has recently had built for him a very large chapel, called the City Temple, abutting on the Holborn Viaduct. He is a very popular preacher, second only to Mr. Spurgeon among the Nonconformists; but I believe he is considered "Broad," if not yet absolutely unsound. Things have so changed even among Orthodox Dissenters that it is not considered "unsound" to drop hell-fire out of the teaching, and to have very mystical and Maurician views of the atonement. I know nothing but by hearsay of Dr. Parker's preaching, and therefore make no imputations of heresy against him. But he has performed an act which, from our side of the hedge, is a credit to him, and gives promise of still better things.

At the opening of the Temple there was, of course, the inevitable cold collation, to which the Lord Mayor had been invited, with many other persons of civic distinction. But Dr. Parker, in a happy moment, invited also the Dean of Westminster, who, from a rigidly Orthodox point of view, is the best-hated man in the English Church; and but for his personal will towards Dissenters would be as much an object of aversion to them. Not all his reticence and caution, nor all his occasional Orthodox professions, have saved him from suspicion of heresy; and the "safer" he has made himself, the more he is doctrinally distrusted. Apart from religious views, however, no man is more loved and honored within and without the Church. He is goodness, tenderness, and charity blended. His great learning commands the respect even of his most bitter assailants, while his position in the Church and his connection with the Royal Household give him a greater prestige than he already derived from being the son of a late Bishop of Norwich and a member of the family of the Stanleys of Alderley. The charm of the man is that he regards all his great gifts and advantages as a trust for the benefit of his age—for his country, his church, and his fellow-men. Hence it is that he is always found on the weaker side, in defence of it against the strong. Whether it be a harassed cause or a persecuted man, he gives his right hand to the defence. Such a man may have but little direct influence upon doctrines and opinions, but he has all the more upon the characters and lives of those who witness his example.

When I began my letter, I did not intend to praise him as I have involuntarily done, but I wished to point out how such action as he invariably takes in public and in private tends to lead to free thought, and of necessity sets men thinking for themselves, and putting less value than they once did on their venerable but exclusive dogmas.

The Dean's speech was quite up to the level of his own breadth of mind and sense of justice. He is a gentleman, and therefore incapable of patronizing the Dissenters, who had invited him to their table. But he spoke out from an honest recognition of rights which have been too long disputed, and he claimed as a duty and a privilege what in former days had been regarded not only as a condescension but a sin.

Now, if our forefathers (not all dead yet, remember) were right in their horror of contact with Nonconformists,—were justified in their apprehension of danger to their own close creeds if they consorted with Dissenters, and were wise in their generation for their rigid exclusiveness,—it must follow that the Dean of Westminster's frank confraternity with them must do some harm to the Orthodoxy of one side or the other. And this is absolutely true. Such intercourse does result in both parties separating with less reverential awe of their own special beliefs than they felt before they socially met.

Two men radically asunder on such a point as that of the resurrection, or atonement, or hell-fire, having found each other out to be "downright good fellows," will not, cannot, attach the same importance as before to the points on which they differ. The very atmosphere of true sociability seems fatal to dogmatism and assumptions of infallibility. A man's rigid Orthodoxy receives a fatal shock under the subtile influence of humane and brotherly intercourse with a heretic. Let not a word about any doctrines be spoken, the "mischief" is done before it can be detected. Thus amor vincit must still be the motto for all who wish to be scientifically guided in their opinions and lives. True fraternity is the pathway to a higher faith; it widens and levels by being trodden. Rough places are made plane, and thorns and briars get trampled under foot, when they cease to impede and to annoy.

As a freethinker, I think we want a little more of the Dean's spirit of coalescence—even with the Orthodox. Sooner or later we shall suffer for our isolation, and put off the time of liberation for those whom we deem enthralled.

Some may answer: "Very true, but it is no fault of ours; the antipathy and seclusion are on the side of the Orthodox." There is some truth in this, but there would be less, if we were less proud, and not so unwilling to be snubbed or reproached in our first endeavors after social union. At all events, the example of the Dean of Westminster is a most wholesome one, and, as I said before, though his written words may be of little value in the mighty controversy between the old and the new religions, his noble actions and kind, genial, and most just speeches will do more to break up the old traditions, and to place church-and-chapel-bound men on a field of liberty, than all the fierce words of warfare which jealous disputants have hurled at each others' creeds.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

Charles Voysey.

Camden House, Dulwich, S. E., May 30, 1874.

Communications.

RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

Editor of The Index:—

I perceive the question is urged upon you often, and from many different quarters, as to your views of religion and science; and, if I understand you, you claim that there is a scientific religion, a scientific idea of God.

I am interested to know what this scientific religion is. By science we understand the knowledge which is verified, proven, or capable of verification and proof by processes of the logical mind. It is knowledge, not belief; at least, such ideas and conceptions of knowledge as stand the tests of comparison and inductive reasoning. But knowledge does not express the whole of human life and experience. We live quite as much in feeling, in believing, in aspiration, as in knowing, or knowledge. Religion appears as a natural sentiment, an inherent feeling of wonderment, reverence, or worship, not at all dependent upon knowledge, but existing and bearing sway independently, sometimes in spite, of knowledge. I do not quite see how science has anything to do with religion, except by modifying its superstitions and giving it another form of belief or expression. Religion, being a sentiment or passion, incites to some belief about the unseen, the unknown, the mysterious subjects outside of and above Nature, which cannot, in the nature of the case, be known scientifically. The mind may suppose or conjecture what it will; it can prove nothing, except within the realm of the knowable.

Now excuse, I pray, the apparent dogmatism of these statements. I make them only for the sake of the argument, and in order to get at the truth, if possible. I am troubled to see how we can have a scientific religion, or how science can have a God and a worship. That science may modify and culture the form or expression of religion is easy to understand; but how, unless we assume or admit some intuitional authority, some clairvoyant vision, we are to say we know the Infinite, the Absolute, I am not able to perceive. Obviously we can only know what is finite, limited in time and space. We call that infinite which is only indefinite. We call that absolute which is only relative. Theology has assumed to declare a knowledge of the Infinite and Absolute, but where is it to be found? Nature is perhaps practically infinite, though we know it only as the finite; while science has only to do with the limited, with what can be positively known. The border-land of the indefinite belongs to religion, to the sentiment of wonder and worship.

Religion implies the supernatural; a God separate from and greater than Nature, who has a personal will and character. The pantheistic God of the scientist does not satisfy the higher demands of reason and the moral sense. There must be some personal will-power outside of and greater than the Nature which he creates; else he can have no supreme claim to the soul's allegiance and love.

Worship of the sun, as a representative of Nature's life-giving and sustaining force, appears as an eminently rational worship from the scientific or pantheistic point of view. Might we not say that the Parsee religion is more scientific than the Christian? Can that be scientific which has no property of fixedness, which is undergoing modification and change from age to age?

Exact knowledge does not appear to be the condition or concomitant of religion. In fact, worship appears to be in an inverse ratio to verified knowledge. "Ignorance is the mother of devotion," is the common and universal observation.

I suspect that by the terms scientific religion you mean, not religion springing out of science, but religion somehow made conformable to the largest and truest knowledge. No doubt there is some sense in which the sentiment of religion, worship of the mysterious, is not antagonistic to the scientific knowledge of Nature; but is it not more by way of accommodation than it is exact truth to speak of a scientific religion?

How, I repeat, are we to know that we have exact and final knowledge of what is objectively absolute,—beyond the grasp and comprehension of the knowing powers?

That there may be a conscious projection into objectivity, a deification, of one's subjective conceptions or self-hood, I am not unaware; but where is the ground or test of certitude? How can we make this intuitional assumption scientific, as we understand scientific knowledge?

I write for information, wishing to be set right where I may be wrong, and to cherish such a faith as shall not be inconsistent with science and philosophy.

A. H. Adams.

Fair Haven, Vt.

BOLTING.

"A bolt is always in order," said James Freeman Clarke at the Worcester Convention. Would that this gentleman's perceptions were always as clear in a Unitarian conference! A bolt is always in order there, when one sees a greater field of good outside. Such a time always comes when his freedom is infringed. The doctrine that it is best to stay in an organization as long as one can is a delusion and a snare, both false in theory and pernicious in practice. Nothing is more damaging to the minds of young men than this playing fast and loose with principles. Nothing meets with a more pronounced and open protest from the past, for the whole glory of our colonial and Puritan history has come from those who "bolted."

Such newspapers as the Independent and the Christian Union are practical frauds upon the community, helping to maintain creeds and organizations they do not believe in, and counselling freemen to remain slaves or become hypocrites. "Our whole personal and national life would be higher and holier, our religion would be purer, our politics more honest, if every man and woman of us would refuse to stay in organizations whose creeds and platforms we do not accept, whose government is irksome, and whose doctrines we have outgrown. Staying in and protesting is of little avail; going out, declaring our independence, and hoisting an honest flag, doubles our power while it increases our virtue." We rather admire and respect the action of the Unitarians in rejecting Mr. Potter. However they may dodge a definition and shun an impartial application of it upon such men as Bartol, and Alger, and Ames, and Chadwick, there can be now no doubt what they mean by the word Christian.

And such as Hall, and Calthrop, and May can remain no longer in doubt as to the compatibility of that word with the most unfettered thought or the freest fellowship, or whether they can longer call themselves Unitarian Christians. The policy of Beecher and Bowen we do not endorse. We prefer much more that of Professor Swing. Had they bolted long ago, the religious atmosphere in their communion would have been much more healthy for free souls to breathe. But with our Unitarian friends there seems to be no other alternative. Healthy counsel was it that "a bolt is always in order;" especially so is it when liberty is in danger.

C. T. Fowler.

THE "NEGATIONS" OF LIBERALISM.

Chelsea, Mass., May 25, 1874.

Mr. F. E. Abbot:

Dear Sir,—One of my "Christian" friends, no doubt with the good of my soul in view, left with my wife the Boston Post of May 15, with the special request that her husband should read the article headed the "Swing Heresy Trial;" said "Christian" well knowing the liberal tendencies of the said husband.

The article in question, among other things, says: "The issue of heresy is becoming a more profoundly interesting one almost daily. It has a convenient habit of disguising itself in the term of liberalism, which is made practically to mean one thing, another thing, or nothing in particular." To quote further: "When it is substantially admitted that liberalism stands for license,—that free-thinking is synonymous with irreligion,—that loose and latitudinarian phrases, that hold the thought in no restraint, are better for the daily life and advancing hopes of men than even a rigidly defined creed, which is sure at least to yield obedience and faith, and all the moral and social decencies which form its constant significance,—then it is undeniably preferable that the restraining principle should take precedence of the laxative."

I have quoted sufficiently at length to show the whole tenor of the article, and also to show how totally blind the writer is to the real significance and purposes of the liberal movement in this country. Now this misconception under which the above writer is laboring I find to be wide-spread; in fact, it is the only conception that church people generally have of liberalism.

I have done something in the way of missionary work in extending the circulation of The Index, and have worn my own copies of it almost to pieces in circulating it from week to week, among my conservative friends and acquaintances; and I find the one criticism these people make of The Index, its writers, and radicals generally, is of their negations. They say they are given over to denials; that they are chiefly remarkable for their constant attack on what others believe, but never advocate a belief of their own. Now, as unjust as this criticism may be and (as I believe) is, nevertheless it is made, and is the honest thought of many good people. Perhaps the best way to put it would be, the honest opinion of many good people, not thought; for if they did really think sufficiently, they would see that, while rejecting many of the ecclesiastical doctrines, liberals are not chiefly remarkable for their negations. They do not believe less than Christians, but more. Back of every negation is a greater affirmation, and the things they hold to and advocate with intense conviction outweigh by far those things which they reject.

Now I wish THE INDEX writers would emphasize a little more what they believe; for, you know, such papers as yours are few and far between, and it has to act as a pioneer as well as a cultivator.

In short, what I want is to spread the "glad tidings" of radical religion faster.

Yours truly, DANIEL G. CRANDON.

[We wish it were possible to correct the misconception that Mr. Crandon so well points out; but, no matter how emphatically the great ideas of liberalism are asserted, the "church people" see and hear nothing but the negation of their own negations. For instance, they declare that man has one Savior, and only one; which is denying that man can save himself. Liberalism declares that man can and must save himself from evil, if he is to be saved at all; which is denying that he has only one Savior. Both deny; but which denial is the worse? Now we must stand stoutly by our own, and prove it; that is the only way to show that the negation of church negations is itself affirmation. But, frankly, we do not care a fig whether the truth is negative or affirmative; that is a mere matter of form of statement, while the substance of truth is always positive. This question of true or false is alone important; and we are weary of trying to convince the Christian believer that we affirm rather than deny. Prove your denial, and then he can see your affirmation.—ED.]

MODERN ETHICS VS. ANCIENT THEOLOGY.

OZARK, Mo., April 29, 1874.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Recently, at a Sunday-school in this place, the lesson of a class studying the Old Testament related to the conquest of the land of Canaan by the Israelites; and one member of the class, whose name bears not the slightest stain of "heresy," so far lost his unquestioning reverence for the "inspired history" as to ask why the "chosen people" were instructed to drive out the inhabitants of the Land of Promise, instead of settling peaceably among them and teaching them their superior religion? The incipient but doubtless unconscious heresy was met by a veteran champion of the Orthodox school, who informed the young apostate that he was attempting to investigate one of God's "mysteries;" that he should accept whatever he found in the history of the "peculiar people," however much his human sense of justice might be outraged by their apparent deeds of cruelty.

This pious rebuke, if it did not subdue the rebellious thought of the tyro sceptic, at least silenced his dangerous utterances. The opportunity to submit a remark on the improvement of theology since those "good old times" was too favorable, however, to be neglected; and the Christians of the nineteenth century were represented as following the example of the ancient Jews, by marching into heathen countries, accoutred with all the improved implements of modern warfare, to massacre the unoffending inhabitants, and establish the "true religion."

It was concluded that the conduct of the Israelites, though dictated by their divine Leader, would not bear imitating now, since the New Testament teaches a more human manner of treating the benighted heathen.

I think the defenders of "Orthodoxy" would manifest discretion by using the "law and the prophets" with discrimination in Sunday-school, if they would avoid a collision between their theology and modern ethics.

Truly yours,

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

UNIVERSAL HARMONY.

"All Nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good."

How sublimely philosophical was Pope's faith! In contrast with the cringing superstition of Orthodox creeds, this fearless trust in universal Nature is nobly rational. We have been taught to believe that Nature is at war with itself,—that there is an eternal antagonism between certain principles in the universe,—until we cannot think of a universal harmony unmarred by devils and hells. The God of religious creeds, a being wrought by weak, ignorant, human conceptions, is too monstrous to excite the worship of love; we fall before his throne, and, with servile incantations, seek to avert from ourselves the thunderbolts of wrath with which we suppose the Divine Ruler defends his own peculiar dominions against the encroachments of his incorrigible enemies.

Fettered by such narrow and debasing ideas of the nature of things, when the mind attempts to catch a strain of the universal symphony the discord of some minor key strikes the ear, and the music is pronounced imperfect. Our faith is yet weak and puerile. It stumbles over the little apparent irregularities that fall under present observation, and mourns over the transient evils of to-day, instead of looking up to the grand procession of universal laws, which with unerring certainty guide the eternal evolution of life.

Ignorance and superstition still command us to appease their gods and fear their devils. The infinite perfection of Nature is arraigned before bigoted creeds. Our faith is now struggling to free itself from the bondage of superstition and selfishness, and rise to the loftier heights of knowledge and universal love. We are learning to regard the whole with trust and reverence, instead of a part with fear and hatred. We begin to hear the universal harmony above the partial discord, and live in serene hope where we trembled in fitful despair.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

REFLECTIONS BY A NEO-CHRISTIAN.

Many thoughtful persons are now asking, "What will be the result of our non-acceptance of so-called fundamental Christian doctrines? Will it go hard with us if we do not believe the 'essentials' of the Orthodox pulpit and press? That all men are responsible for their treatment of truth, none can deny; but as all cannot clearly see what the truth is, who is to decide respecting our responsibility, and declare us false?"

How do men come to the possession of truth? Truth, it is clear, is apprehended by all in the same way; but by none to the same extent. Moreover, each ray of truth, as it penetrates the human mind, is affected by the medium through which it passes. Some, also, see more or less than others. Truth is grasped by two faculties—first, probably, by the intellectual, and secondly by the moral. That which the moral lays hold upon must needs be different in its effects from that which the intellectual nature seizes. Besides, it is generally allowed that moral truths are self-evident. If a man does not see that purity and honesty and honor are better than their opposites, no arguments can do him much good. Hence all codes of moral law have been set before mankind in the form of commands. After the command is seen to be right, the reason for giving it becomes obvious. Generally, then, all men conclude that moral truth is good and beautiful and binding, and ignorance of its positive statements does not excuse disregard of them. Accordingly, we punish the thief, liar, and dishonest person, the vicious, impure, and mean, even though each declare he has never seen a law ordering him to be otherwise. The wrong-doer is made to suffer because he outrages and offends the moral instincts of society and mankind everywhere. Because the happiness, order, and progress of good society is secured by punishment of moral delinquents, retribution is approved, even if it occasionally seems to be too severe.

But when we come to deal with truth that is deduced from speculative thought, and is always dependent upon the certainty of things of which none are certain, how very different indeed is the position of each in relation to these matters! Ignorance of the command, "Thou shalt not steal," may not save a man from prison; but surely ignorance respecting the nature of the First Great Cause, and inability to see in that Cause the Trinity of the Orthodox believer, should scarcely subject any to the condemnation of Christians.

Then, again, in some manner or other, all men are convinced by experience that one act is related to another, and that all our actions have a moral, we may say a retributive, effect. But does such an intellectual belief necessitate the reception of faith in never-ending torments and a materialistic hell? The inference is certainly hardly as necessary as the moral instinct from which it is deduced.

Suppose, again, that it should be held that the Creator, by his volitive act, should have forever fixed the condition of things, and that in his kingdom there is no change. From our views of divine perfection this seems clear. Yet from such an intellectual consideration shall we leap to the conclusion that evil is to be a never-ending power in the universe, and Satan its God? Is Calvinism a fact because it fits in with the theories of a law-system in creation?

Let us leave these discussions, and come down to a more plain ground. What, for example, shall be the position of those who see clearly the fact of a historic Christ, receive with all docility the divine words that fall from his lips, and love, reverence, and imitate him, and daily obey his commands—who see him to be the Son of God in a peculiarly unique sense, but do not see him to be what popular teachers of a magical atonement make him out to be? Their moral trust in his purity, sweetness, grace, gentleness, and truth may and does lead them to call him Teacher, Master, Saviour, Friend, but not to regard him in aspects which seem of infinite importance to some saintly souls and fearfully alarmed spirits in the prospect of everlasting condemnation. The moral trust seems necessary to all who understand Jesus Christ; the intellectual belief respecting his relation to each soul of man seems different to each. But we are getting too long. Let us briefly deal with other thoughts, and hasten on to the practical inference from the whole argument.

Here comes a strong Calvinistic divine with his string of proof-texts, and he is sure Calvinism is true. Next comes a follower of Arminius, who is sure that the theory of that great teacher is right, and the exegesis of the Calvinistic instructor wrong. Immediately these are followed by one who reads us the Athanasian Creed, and begs us to give our assent and consent to the same, for "without doubt he who does not believe it shall perish everlastingly." Yet, as we take the pen in our hand to sign the document and secure our salvation, we hear one say, "Stay!" and lo, there stands by our side a sedate, thoughtful, and scholarly person, who tells us the ideas of the aforesaid creed are unscriptural, and result from the corruption of primitive Christian teaching. But now there crowd around us Universalists and non-believers in that doctrine; Baptists and non-Baptists; Episcopalians and Orthodox-Congregationalists; Swedenborgians and Methodists, all having something to say against each other and to us; to persuade us to believe them in full possession of truth, and to lead us to conclude we are in danger, if we do not instantly join their ranks and accept their dogmas. Now we can find no fault with this state of things, for it is the result of human weakness and strength, and shows the living, combative power of truth. Much of it is painful, but all pain is not evil, and much health of soul may result from the pangs of suffering minds and hearts.

Every sect of men, Christian and non-Christian, suppose they have got all the truth in their keeping; or at least more than anybody else has. Yet this idea is hardly wiser than his who fills a mighty set of china cups with water from the ocean, and then turns complacently to you, and says, "I've drained the ocean dry," when he sees a small basin is emptied in order to fill his teacups. You hardly think so, when you hear the sound of seething waters, and see the crests of mighty waves white with foam. But he has logic to show he is right, and because you object won't invite you to sup in his house. This is absurd, of course, but is it any more so than the conduct of those who fill their theological teacups, and call them a system of theology, and then say, "We have exhausted the ocean of truth; take away one of these vessels, away goes the ocean; add one, and the deluge will be the result." Shall any then believe that the great ocean of God's truth rolls not on, fresh and full as ever, even though systems of teacups seem to be full of its tide?

What, then, should be the outcome of all our thought? Shall any be indifferent to any view of truth presented for his consideration? Nay. Indifferent to truth no sane, right-minded man ever should be. But all men should be tolerant and full of charity. Unkind and rancorous words should never flow forth from the lips of those who profess to love the Divine Teacher of truth. He never expected his followers to have the same ideas respecting his aims and doctrines—or, if he did, never dealt with his disciples as though he did. He is a fitting teacher of all who would deal righteously with truth and truth-seekers; when they shall act as he ever did, there shall be perfect religious freedom and a really united church. There shall then be one flock and one Shepherd. He never trifled with truth, or spoke as one who let it appear that he thought it mattered not what a man believed. Yet one thing he ever did, and that was to frown on him who was false to his convictions and untrue to his light. Orthodox pharisees he despised; but seeking lawyers he commended. He never stood aloof from one who differed in religious opinion, but called that man strong in faith who appeared outside the Jewish Church. He turns away only from those who are morally wrong,—who are inhuman, unmindful of present daily duties, of the hungry, sick, and suffering,—who fail to discharge the claims made by common human beings on each other. Those who could neglect and forget those who wept in lonely despair, or pined in wretchedness and shame—these he could not but cast away to shame and sorrow themselves; not because they were unsound divines, or meagre theologians, not because they had no rounded view of fundamental dogmas, as they are described in approved text-books, or were sceptics, rationalists, or any other ists; nay, but in consequence of their want of faith in the goodness, beauty, and power of truth, that truth which makes men fit to be called brethren of the Son of Man. Shall we then isolate ourselves from any one whom Christ can and will call brother? God forbid. Let man damn him and us for holding strange opinions; we will bear it, if an honest conscience tells we seek the truth in the spirit of Christ, and have love towards his and our brethren. Man, be fearless; thy non-acceptance of Christian doctrine, through inability to see it is truth, will never ruin thee, but thy acceptance of truth and unwillingness to do it may harm thy soul forever.

THE USELESSNESS OF PRAYER.—To the Editor of the "National Reformer."—In your issue of November 9th, J. McGrigor Allan, after alluding amongst other topics to the usefulness of prayer, says: "Any one of us may be compelled to go the longest of all journeys at a moment's notice, as in the case of the sudden death of Bishop Wilberforce." I wonder if it has ever struck this or any other Orthodoxist, that the "sudden death" of this dignitary is, and must remain, a lasting example of the uselessness of prayer. Here is an individual—well on to, if not fully, threescore and ten, and in "holy orders" to boot—who had been during the whole of his professional life, if not from his earliest years, putting up that petition, in the Litany, which says: "From battle and murder, and from sudden death, good Lord deliver us," murdered, in the long run, by his horse pitching him over its head, and breaking his neck so effectually that he must have died almost as instantaneously as if he had been then and there slain by a stroke of lightning.

Can we, sir, have a more convincing proof of the utter futility of such a practice than this stunning rebuke, for rebuke it must be called, if we have at the helm of affairs such a Being as a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God? And yet, if we are to judge of the future by the past, such is the blindness and such the infatuation of "believers" that it is to be feared that this, and all other supplications to be found in the Book of Common Prayer, or that fatherless bipeds can by hook or crook invent, will continue to be presumptuously made to "God the Father in Heaven," in the vain hope that he may be importuned or worried into sooner or later granting them. Lengthy comment on the fate of this spiritual peer and his prayers is unnecessary, as the catastrophe speaks trumpet-tongued for itself to those who have ears to hear; so with a view to not encroaching further on your valuable space, I beg to at once subscribe myself, Yours truly, G. R. N.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (Dr. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays ... 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Mr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series .. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.. 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25.
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address

J. SEDGEBEER, Painesville, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HAVE WE

TWO BRAINS?
Dr. C. E. Brown-Séquard.
IS ALCOHOL A POISON?
Dr. Wm. A. Hammond.
THE POET LONGFELLOW.
James T. Fields.
U. S. SURVEY OF THE WEST.
(With Map.) Under Lieut. G. M. Wheeler.
THE HORSE IN AMERICA.
(Illust'd.) Discoveries by Prof. O. C. Marsh.
SAFETY AT SEA.
(Illust'd.) IRON STEAMERS THAT WILL NOT SINK.

These interesting Lectures and Letters, with a careful report of the important papers read at the April meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and at the May meeting of the American Oriental Society at Boston, are published in full in THE TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 19. Price, in sheet form, 10 cents; in pamphlet, 20 cents; or seven for $1.

Circulars, giving full details of the contents of all THE TRIBUNE EXTRAS, free by mail.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE,

THE FARMER'S FAVORITE PAPER,

until January 1, 1875, for $1.

Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

POPULAR COLLECTIONS OF

ORGAN MUSIC!

FOR PIPE ORGANS.

Organ Gems.	Davenport.	$2.50
Batiste's Organ Voluntaries.		2.50
50 Pieces for Organ.	Batiste.	2.50
Clarke's Short Voluntaries.		1.50
Organist's Portfolio.	Rimbault. 2 Vols., each	3.00
Hile's Short Voluntaries.	9 Nos., each	.50
Zeuner's Voluntaries.	Complete.	3.00
250 Easy Voluntaries.	Zundel.	2.00

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK NEARLY READY.

FOR REED ORGANS.

Organ at Home.	2.50
Recreations for Cabinet (Reed) Organs.	1.50
Clarke's Short Voluntaries.	1.50
Clarke's Reed Organ Companion.	2.00

Fine collections of Pieces, Songs, and Tunes may also be found in Emerson's New Method, Clarke's New Method, and in Root's School for Cabinet Organs.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK.—IN AUGUST.

Either of the above books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,

paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,

Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1874. WHOLE NO. 235.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THE SUMNER-MEMORIAL Committee, of Boston, wish to raise fifty thousand dollars (less than half that sum is in their hands already); and with that amount they propose to secure a statue of Mr. Sumner.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL will come home from Europe a degree more in the estimation of his admirers than when he went out—because the University of Cambridge, England, has recently conferred upon him an LL.D.

AN ENGLISH paper suggests that smoking be allowed during divine service, "as a means of increasing the attendance at church." In old times there used to be the "deacons' pew;" in modern times we may have the smokers' pew.

THE THEATRES of Boston, it is said by good authority, have done a better business during the past season than those of any other city in the Union. Edwin Booth and Miss Clara Morris, it is also asserted, have been the best paying "stars" of the season.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY recently addressed the Free Religious Society in Providence. Her subject was, "Love, Duty, and their relations to each other; and how Free Religion helps to adjust these relations." A good and timely theme; and, doubtless, well treated.

"THE FRIENDS of Human Progress" held their twenty-sixth Annual Meeting in Waterloo, N.Y., on the 13th and 14th of June. Mrs. Lucy N. Coleman was chosen President, and H. L. Green and Miss Prudence Linton Secretaries. "The Friends" indulged themselves in a free discussion on Temperance, Religion, Capital and Labor, and the Equality of the Sexes. Some good speeches appear to have been made on all these subjects—none better than those of C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, who always speaks earnestly and well on all subjects that interest him.

SPIRITUALISTS have occasion to congratulate themselves on the endorsement which Spiritualism has lately received from Mr. Alfred Wallace, the distinguished English naturalist. In a recent number of the Fortnightly Review Mr. Wallace has an article entitled "Defence of Modern Spiritualism," in which the following explicit and pronounced statement occurs: "The facts of Spiritualism are ubiquitous in their occurrence, and of so indisputable a nature as to compel conviction in every earnest inquirer." Spiritualism has long been regarded as a heresy by the Church, and a delusion and superstition by Science; yet who knows but out of this very "Nazareth" may come the long-hoped for demonstration of immortality?

SOUTH CAROLINA is a sadly misgoverned State. Knavery and vagabondism are in political ascendancy there, and hold the keys of office. The latest revised list of officials indicted and waiting trial are one governor, three county treasurers, two sheriffs, one school commissioner, one trial justice, twenty-four county commissioners! This does not include the much larger list of officials who deserve indictment and conviction. Verily it would seem that, since Federal intervention in State affairs is a doctrine highly orthodox in Washington at present, South Carolina presents an excellent case for Congressional and Administrative treatment. But Federal intervention appears to mean, in most cases, getting States into difficulty but not getting them out of it.

AND NOW Mr. Beecher has said another startling thing. Recently, in a sermon, he held out that the story of the Garden of Eden was a parable, and that the view that we are held responsible for what Adam and his wife did is so contradictory of God's justice, that no man should regard it but with repugnance. The men, too, he said, who believe that the world was made in six days are brothers of Egyptian mummies, and the mummies are the best men of the two! Only a little while ago he said that it has not been the Church that has preserved religion, but religion that has preserved the Church; and that organized Christianity has been the poorest part of religion! Really, another Council ought to be called, which should make short work with Brother Beecher.

THE JEWISH element, in the business interests of the city of Richmond, Virginia, is said to be very conspicuous and enterprising. Jews occupy many of the largest stores in that portion of the city which has been rebuilt since the war's devastation laid it low, and they contribute much to the material prosperity of the former Confederate capital. Not only pecuniarily, but intellectually and religiously, the Jews are "looking up" in this country, remarkably. We hail the omen! Our "Christian" civilization will be all the better when it becomes more human than "Christian;" when all elements of all nationalities and religions will combine to make this country—however geographically limited—as large as the world in its mental and moral sympathies and charities.

GOETHE is said, on his death-bed, to have uttered these words: "More light! More light!" This is what the real truth-seeker is always saying, living or dying. No man, not a dogmatist, supposes that he has at any time all possible light upon any subject; he never presumes, for instance, that he knows certainly either that there is or is not a God, that immortality is a truth or a fiction. Belief in what are called "spiritual things" is largely a matter of temperament and education; but a truly liberal man will believe or not believe in all modesty, well knowing that it becomes him not to dogmatize on any point where demonstration is, and ever may be, lacking. Yet he is always desiring, and always grateful for, "more light" on any and every subject, let it come from whatsoever source it may.

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB are to have their Picnic, next Sunday the 28th, on the banks of the Charles River near Waltham. The members are invited to bring their baskets of refreshments, which a common table will receive. Buildings are on the ground sufficient to protect the entire company, in case of rain. The excursion will be by cars and boat. Cars leave Fitchburg dépôt at 9:45 A.M., and 1 P.M. Return from Waltham at 6 P.M. Tickets for the round trip are, for adults, sixty cents; children, thirty cents. Tickets may be obtained at this office, or at the Fitchburg station after 9 o'clock on Sunday. The wives and children of members are to go along; also invited friends. The "good time coming," it is expected, will be found to have arrived with this occasion.

THE TIME of "Vacations" is near at hand. Schoolteachers worn out with much teaching, and scholars equally worn out with being much taught; men weary of confinement in stores, offices, and shops; women oppressed with home cares and duties; clergymen exhausted with the strain of pulpit and vestry labors, and church-goers crammed to repletion with an over-dose of preaching and praying,—all are beginning to look with longing to the season of respite and emancipation, when they may slip off the harness of labor and the burden of routine and monotony, and flee away to the cool breezes of the sea, the bracing air of the mountains, the refreshing of summer scenes and occupations in the country, where they shall have a better chance to get at God's blessing and at Nature's divine serenity and peace. We are heartily glad that they can go; and we give them each and all our best wishes for a good and beautiful, a reviving and happy, time!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

Dr. Carpenter at Sion College;

OR

THE VIEW OF MIRACLES

TAKEN BY

MEN OF SCIENCE.

REPRINTED FROM A TRACT PUBLISHED BY THOMAS SCOTT, ESQ., IN LONDON.

The following correspondence originated from the sending to a divinity professor the copy of a notice which appeared in THE INDEX, a short time since, of a lecture delivered by Dr. Carpenter at Sion College, on "The Reign of Law," particularly in relation to the efficacy of prayer, before an audience two-thirds of which consisted of clergymen. As exception has been taken to the notice referred to by some who were present at the meeting, on the ground that it was not strictly accurate, it may be well to give the reader an authoritative summary of the doctor's line of thought, by way of introduction to the general discussion of the subject which succeeds. No report of the lecture appeared in the English press at the time, and no formal minutes were kept of the proceedings by the officials of Sion College. It may just be premised, further, that while the lecture went to show that there was no proof of the uniformity of law observable in the physical universe being in the least altered by prayer, Dr. Carpenter left his hearers to infer, by natural sequence, that no evidence exists of the course of physical Nature ever having been interrupted preternaturally from any cause whatsoever. This latter principle underlies the whole argument of the lecture, and interlaces Dr. Carpenter's thought throughout. It may be otherwise defined thus. The structure of the universe seems, from all that can be known of it, to be incompatible with the occurrence of physical miracle; and the investigation of this principle will be chiefly kept in view by the present writer.

Dr. Carpenter began by expressing his entire agreement with Dr. Chalmers and other theologians, who have known what science means, in regarding "the laws of Nature" as simply our expressions of the uniformities observable in the phenomena of the universe. The lecturer referred specially to Dr. Chalmer's sermon, entitled "The Constancy of Nature: a Testimony to the Faithfulness of God." He showed that the whole of our action in the world proceeds upon the assumption of this uniformity; and whilst he did not question that the Deity could depart from it if he so determined, he did emphatically question whether we had any ground to expect that he ever would, in accordance with human entreaty.

"If the whole scheme of creation," argued Dr. Carpenter, "has been devised with a view to the highest happiness and welfare of God's creatures, any departure from that scheme must be for the worse. And so, if I ask God for something that I think would be better for me, it must be at the expense (even supposing that I should really be the better for it) of some one else. But any one who really believes in the infinite paternity of God would shrink from importunity for any change that he may desire for himself; just as much as a child who trusts implicitly in the wisdom and affection of an earthly father will abstain from importuning him, when told that what he asks would be bad for him."

"To importune God for any departure from his uniform course of action seems to me tantamount to saying either that we know better than he does what is good for us, or that, knowing that his way is best in the end, we prefer the immediate gratification of our own selfish desires."

"In earlier times, pestilences were supposed to be punishments inflicted by the vengeance of an offended Deity, who was to be propitiated by prayers and sacrifices. Now, we regard them as the result of habitual violations of the laws which God enables us to read in the course of Nature; and when such occur, we set ourselves to find out the misdoing and endeavor to correct it."

The doctor then narrated a very remarkable case, which occurred at Baltimore in the cholera epidemic of 1849. "Though the poor-house," he said, "was supposed to have been free from any special liability to its attack, and there was no prevalence of cholera in the town, yet at two or three miles' distance from Baltimore, and in an open, salubrious situation, there was a most fearful outbreak in this poor-house, thirty dying in a day out of about eight hundred. This was traced to a defect of drainage, which was at once rectified, and immediately the plague was stayed." With reference to this Dr. Carpenter asked: "Does any gentleman in this room believe that, if all Baltimore had gone down on its knees for a week, God would have been moved to avert the visitation?" His argument was that, "in regard to the course of Nature, it is for the man of science to study the uniformities of the Divine action, and to bring down his own into accordance with it." He drew, however, "a broad line between the action of Deity in the physical universe and his spiritual agency on the mind of man." "The religious experience of ages," he said, "sanctions the idea that prayer for enlightenment to know the will of God, and for strength to enable us to do or bear it, has an effect—how or why we cannot tell;" and to this view he gave his entire assent. "Such prayer," he maintained, "is in accordance with the deepest religious instincts, and is expressed in the noblest passages of sacred literature." "But, in regard to the work of life," he contended "that laborare (on the highest principles of action) est orare."

One clergyman said, at the close of the lecture, that if Dr. Carpenter's position were correct he might as well shut up his church. He said: "I ask God for things I want, and I expect to get them." But this did not seem the general impression, which was, that "prayer does not change the course of Nature, but that, in the ordination of Divine Providence, prayer is a condition of our obtaining what we ask."

In a letter written afterwards by Dr. Carpenter to a friend, containing comments on this latter view of prayer, he says: "This is as much as to say that if we did not ask we should not receive (yet we are told that material blessings are bestowed alike on the just and the unjust, on the thankful and the unthankful). I should call this the mechanical theory of prayer. It puts us in the condition of children just learning to talk, who are made to say 'Ta!' for a cake or a sweetie; and it seems to me to lower the spiritual value of prayer to the material, instead of raising the material to the spiritual—or, as Miss Cobbe said to me, to bring God down to us, instead of trying to lift ourselves to God."

"Mr. Llewellyn Davies expressed his general accordance with me; and I had subsequent communications from other clergymen to the same effect. I believe that liberal and thoughtful men generally would accept these conclusions, if not trammelled by the letter of Scripture. Many have revolted at the parables of the unjust judge, and the importunate widow, and of the friend who yields to importunity what he will not give to friendship, as conveying a low idea of the Divine Fatherhood. Their best interpretation has, I think, been given by Robert Collyer (of Chicago), in an admirable sermon entitled Knocking at the Gate of Heaven,—their lesson being that nothing good or great can be got without persevering effort."

Letter from the Rev. Dr. ——, Professor of Theology, to Mr. ——.

—— COLLEGE, 14 March, 1874.

MY DEAR MR. M——:—

If the report [from THE INDEX] of which you have kindly sent me a copy be correct, . . . there must have been a most melancholy exhibition of bigotry, narrowness, and fanaticism. . . . What a god in knowledge Dr. Carpenter must be to be able to use such words as: "Nature represents a kingdom of orderly evolution which has never been invaded by anything preternatural or supernatural; and all liturgies, litanies, collects, and prayers that were ever uttered never have influenced — never could influence — the course of this universe, nor mankind, nor a single individual in the slightest degree."*

Do you really think Dr. Carpenter knows the entire history of Nature and humanity from the beginning down to this time so exactly as to be able of knowledge to affirm that? If he do not, such a statement, scientifically considered, is the product either of ignorance or fanaticism. If this be what is called "truth, whatever be the consequences," the so-called scientists are as self-deluded as they are fanatical—viewed from the point of view of sober science. The paper you have sent has supplied me with another proof that there are no men more narrow and incapable of reasoning outside their own limited department than the "scientists." They are constantly protesting against metaphysics, philosophy, faith, etc., and yet they are perpetually making a system of the universe out of the wee bit of earth to which they have devoted special attention. Speaking solely from a scientific point of view, I maintain that statements like Dr. Carpenter's are as unscientific and fanatical as the crudest assertions ever enunciated by a preacher. There is now far more real scientific sobriety and caution in believing than in unbelieving circles. Fanaticism is fast becoming—as has been foretold—the specialty of those who do not believe. Excuse me expressing myself plainly. I do so as a thinking man, not as a Christian teacher. Wishing that you yourself may soon again pass from darkness to the true light of life in Christ,

I am, etc., ——.

* These words are cited from the notice in THE INDEX.

Letter from Mr. M—— to Dr. ——.

B——, 19 March, 1874.

MY DEAR DR. ——:—

. . . The report of the proceedings at Sion College, which I forwarded you, is substantially correct on the main points, though faulty in omitting to record that one-third of the audience was composed of laymen, in erroneously stating that bishops were present, and in making too much of the protests uttered by the clergy. Moreover, it puts the argument of Dr. Carpenter too baldly, and without due qualification. The lecturer did not deny the possibility of Deity effecting a physical miracle or acting discordantly with the uniform operation of material law, though he asserted that there was no ground to expect that the Deity ever would depart from that uniformity, in accordance with human entreaty. Again, in justice to the doctor it should have been stated in the report, that he admitted prayer to be efficacious in the spiritual sphere as far as to enable us to obtain "enlightenment" respecting "the will of God" and "strength to do or bear it."

Now one point is clear. Dr. Carpenter practically recognizes interference with the uniform operation of the laws of Nature as a conception at variance with the perfect wisdom and beneficence he would attribute to the Deity; for he says in his own account of the lecture written to a correspondent: "If the whole scheme of creation has been devised with a view to the highest welfare of God's creatures, any departure from that scheme must be for the worse." In this view I entirely concur, notwithstanding the epithets with which you gratuitously bespatter the lecturer and the scientific laymen present who shared his opinions. As for some of the worthy clergymen present, their uneasiness under the statements to which they listened is far from unaccountable. They are not accustomed to be contradicted by their people, and perhaps many of them had not imagined that it was possible for their fond traditions and devout faith in the miraculous to receive so rude a shock from the inexorable conclusions of science. Such conclusions tended to disturb their faith, which is usually felt by them to be consoling and strong in proportion as it is not subjected to the test of historic criticism and to the anti-supernatural analyses of science.

While virtually at one with Dr. Carpenter on this head, I should be disposed to define my position without his qualifying considerations. He admits that whatever the Deity may have the power to will, there is no proof that he has ever performed a miracle in answer to human entreaty,—and I would venture to add that there is no real proof that he ever performed a miracle under any other condition. I believe Nature to be a system of orderly evolution, and in the very essence of the constitution of the universe the possibility of what is popularly understood as supernatural or miraculous interference with its laws is necessarily precluded. Nature would cease to be Nature, and the universe to be the universe, on any other supposition. This is the inductive view of the matter, which one, unsophisticated by theological bias, instinctively arrives at, as the result of intelligently observing the structure, phenomena, and laws of the universe. And in this view we are impregnably supported by the experience of the greatest thinkers of modern days and by the testimony of all verifiable history, as distinguished from incoherent, contradictory, and half-mythical records which belong to unscientific and superstitious times, and which relate, for the most part, to communities notoriously credulous and unacquainted with the simplest facts of natural science. Niebuhr has played considerable havoc with some pleasant stories in the early history of Rome; and, much to the dismay of those who have been indulging similarly happy illusions affecting the professed biographies of Jesus and his apostles, Strauss, Bauer, Schenkel, Meredith, Scott, and others, have demonstrated many historical statements in the four gospels to be not only irreconcilable with each other, but incapable of proof. The authenticity of these gospels touches the very core of the question of miracles, for they are claimed to be an inspired history of a supernatural revelation from God; and for this reason I must ask your permission to submit a few remarks on these venerated documents in connection with this subject.

Pagan, Jewish, and Christian writers alike, nearest to the days of Jesus and his apostles, knew nothing of the four gospels. Moreover, as to the writing spoken of in the alleged works of a certain Christian father, under the title of Memorials of the Apostles, there is no proof that these Memorials ever existed; no trace of them can be found; and it is quite possible that the single reference to them in early Christian literature may be spurious. But even granting that such Memorials were genuine and authentic, there is nothing to show that they were identical with the gospels in the main, or that they substantiate the claims of the latter. In no instance do the fathers for the first one hundred and fifty years mention Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John, or quote words which can, beyond dispute, be verified as of the authorship of the "Evangelists." There is no proof that the gospels, in their present shape, or in any real shape, were known to the fathers during the period above stated. Not till the time of Irenæus (A.D. 180) does the doctrine of the Divine origin of the gospels begin to be propounded and believed; and even then Christians were greatly divided as to which gospels, and how many, were worthy their acceptance. Nor can it be denied that the second century was preëminent in Christendom for "pious frauds" in connection with the "sacred" records of the Church,—these frauds being shamelessly practised and justified because calculated to advance the material and external interests of the Christian faith. A hundred years from the death of the oldest apostle was surely a sufficiently long space—under such lax ideas of honesty as then prevailed among Christian writers—to bring to maturity a considerable crop of fictitious narratives; and it is well known that tales of this kind abounded in those times, respecting Jesus and his immediate followers. A distinguished Church of England theologian writes: "Books, countless in number, were written [in post-apostolic times], professing to give a history of Jesus and his apostles. The authorship of these was attributed to Christ himself, or to some of his apostles and their companions; our four gospels were selected from this countless number." By whom were they selected? When were they selected? Why were they selected? Let Mosheim answer these questions. "As to the time when, and the persons by whom, the books of the New Testament were collected into one body, there are various opinions, or rather conjectures, of the learned; for the subject is attended with great and inexplicable difficulties to us of these latter times."*

What, then, can really be known of how and by whom these selected gospels were composed? Is there no unmistakable source of information open to us as to when and how they came into existence, and when and how the original autographs of them were lost? Such autographs are unknown to history. The very earliest MS. of the gospels the world has, as yet, had access to is dated no further back than the beginning of the fourth century.

Even Orthodox theologians of repute saw away the branch to which they cling, by the admissions which facts compel them to make concerning the impenetrable obscurity and, I might add, the strong doubtfulness in which the origin of the gospels is shrouded. The late Dean Alford, in his Critical Introduction to the Greek Text of the New Testament, writes: "THE CHRISTIAN WORLD IS LEFT IN UNCERTAINTY WHAT ITS SCRIPTURES ARE as long as the sacred text is full of various readings. Some one MS. must be pointed out to us which carries the weight of verbal inspiration, or some text whose authority shall be undoubted must be promulgated. But manifestly neither of these things can ever happen. To the latest age the reading of some important passages will be matter of doubt in the Church, AND THERE IS HARDLY A SENTENCE IN THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR GOSPELS IN WHICH THERE ARE NOT VARIETIES OF DICTION IN OUR PRINCIPAL MSS., BAFFLING ALL ATTEMPTS TO DECIDE WHICH WAS ITS ORIGINAL FORM." A frank concession truly for a learned, exegetical theologian who, notwithstanding, strangely adhered to the notion that the gospels were miraculously inspired!

Canon Westcott, who has bestowed, if possible, even more attention upon the question of New Testament canonicity, speaks in yet more decisive terms on this point. "It is certainly remarkable," he says, "that in the controversies of the second century, which often turned upon disputed readings of the Scripture, no appeal was made to the apostolic originals; the few passages in which it has been supposed that they are referred to will not bear examination." † Orthodox critics themselves being witnesses, therefore, there is no evidence that the gospels were written by those whose names they bear; there is a total absence of contemporary testimony in their favor, and no proof whatever in the next two generations that the books were veracious, or written by the persons to whom they are ascribed. Canon Westcott himself admits that clear quotations from the gospels do not occur till the time of Irenæus (A.D. 180), Clement of Alexandria (A.D. 220), and Origen (A.D. 250).

The accepted doctrine of the New Testament, as containing a supernatural revelation, then, seems simply "to have had its origin in tradition for at least the first hundred and seventy years of the Christian era; for the following one hundred and thirty years it was a matter of speculation, among men whose ignorance was only equalled by their superstitious credulity; and, finally, it was decreed to be a divine truth by a majority of votes in one of those turbulent assemblies of bishops, which too often had to be dispersed by military force, after terrible rioting, which was sometimes attended with bloodshed."

Until the third Council of Carthage (A.D. 397), numerous gospels and epistles were in circulation and use among the Christians, all claiming equally to be of inspired authority. By the bishops assembled at that Council a catalogue of the books to be chosen and recognized as canonical was drawn up and passed, because found to serve best the ends of the theological party then in power. All other books that seemed to clash with the dogmas of this ruling party were promptly burned. ‡ After much episcopal wrangling at the Council on the subject, the number of gospels to be included in the Canon was limited to four, with the consent of the majority of the bishops, for the following ingenious reason, which proved to be irresistibly conclusive to their Orthodox minds! Irenæus was reported to have said, two centuries before: "It is impossible that there could have been more or less than four. For there are four climates, and four cardinal winds, and the church is spread over the whole earth; but the gospel is the pillar and foundation of the Church, and its breath of life. The Church, therefore, was to have four pillars, blowing immortality from every quarter, and giving life to men." Hence we happen to have inherited four gospels instead of forty or fourscore!

Yet on the foundation of this arbitrary, conflicting, and unprovable collection of narratives, you and your Orthodox friends expect Dr. Carpenter to believe in the miracles ascribed to Jesus and his colleagues; and you charge the doctor with "narrowness, bigotry, and fanaticism" because he rejects all past accounts of miracles as improbable. We, who are called rationalists, disbelieve in miracles (1) because it is of the nature of supernatural interposition, were such to occur, to introduce confusion and ruin into the whole indissolubly connected chain of causes and effects throughout the universe; and (2) because there does not exist in support of religious miracles, or any other sort of miracles, any proof to satisfy a mind free from traditional or sentimental fetters, and bent on reaching fact by the only legitimate method—the inductive method. I should be willing to leave it to any twelve unprejudiced men of thought and judgment to decide whether fanaticism lies in believing in miracles on the sandy foundation of "pious frauds," obscure superstitions, and conflicting statements, pertaining to an age and a people remarkable for credulity and ignorance; or whether it lies in rejecting tales of the miraculous, and trusting to the uniform "reign of law" as essential to the well-being of the universe at all times and in all regions. If the question be which side lays itself open to the imputation of fanaticism, I should imagine the charge would most apply to those who are satisfied to believe in stories of miracles which are said to have happened nearly two thousand years ago, on the authority of very remote, incoherent, and unverifiable hearsays, coming down from peasants living in ignorant times. The real fanatics are surely those who, while so readily taking in those crude narratives of far-off days, could not be convinced of the supernatural occurring now, by almost any amount or kind of testimony. How shall we characterize so singular a mode of reasoning, except as fanatical? Proof for an alleged miracle in the nineteenth century, before it could be received by the Orthodox, must be indisputable; but the most hazy, myth-woven, and ineongruous evidence is quite sufficient in their view to support the affirmation of many miracles having taken place among illiterate enthusiasts in the first century.

"Do you really think Dr. Carpenter knows the entire history of Nature and humanity from the beginning down to this time so exactly as to be able of knowledge to affirm that? [viz., that a miracle never happened.]" Such is your question; and it contains an intended quietus for the rationalist which won some Evangelical fame for John Foster sixty years ago, and the reply has been already given. There is no proof that the regular course of Nature has ever been departed from, and yet the proof ought to be demonstrable in proportion to the extraordinary phenomena to which you invite our credence. Nay, your question can be matched by another. Do you really think that the planet Jupiter has the alternation of day and night like our earth? Do you really think that Neptune is influenced by the law of gravitation like this "wee bit of earth"? Can you say you know such to be the case? Have you personally been close enough to these stars, and had such opportunities of studying their movements, that you can demonstrate the assertion, of your knowledge, respecting them? Have you seen day and night on Jupiter? Do you possess tangible evidence that the laws of gravitation extend to Neptune? You know you cannot point to the clear evidence of your senses in proof of these things; and yet you are prepared to assert emphatically that the phenomena I have described belong as much to other planets as to our own. You have the analogy of material law within the range of your personal observation to guide you, and the tested conclusions of science deepen your sense of the universality and uniformity of law in its operations. But suppose I were to hurl at you, for your supposed assertions about Jupiter and Neptune, the ecclesiastical thunderbolt you aim at Dr. Carpenter and other men of science—whose pure, life-long, and successful devotion to the study of Nature merits for them the profoundest respect—for their denial of miracles, what then? And yet men of science have simply reached their conclusions, as to the order of Nature excluding the occurrence of miracles, by the same inferential kind of reasoning which might lead you to venture statements about something going on hundreds of millions of miles away. There is, however, this difference. While theologians and men of science in the case supposed would equally base their reasonings on their convictions of an universal Cosmos, Dr. Carpenter and his friends have had much more experience than professors of theology in observing the processes of Nature, a higher scientific culture, and a more extensive and subtle apparatus for conducting scientific research. Consequently, I should feel quite as much justified in accepting the statement of Dr. Carpenter in his challenging the proof of miracles, as I should in accepting your version of certain natural events happening in very distant parts of the universe. What think you now of the severe judgment you have passed on scientific men as applied to yourself, mutatis mutandis? "If he do not [i.e., know, by a personal inspection, all departments of the universe from the beginning, etc.], such a statement [e.i., as the one the doctor makes against the occurrence of miracles], scientifically considered, is the product either of ignorance or fanaticism. . . . The so-called scientists are as self-deluded as they are fanatical. . . . There are no men more narrow and incapable of reasoning outside their own limited department."

Of course theologians (I suppose on Paul's principle of him that is spiritual being at liberty to judge all things) are eminently capable of estimating accurately the profound analysis of science, their "department" being so proverbially expansive—especially where creeds, like high walls, attract their gaze to the vast range of metaphysico-theological inscriptions written in these creeds, and shut out the region beyond! A Pisgah-like prospect certainly, compared with the "limited" vista of science which has the grave disadvantage of being encompassed by no stereotyped creeds—inventions so admirably adapted to enlarge human thought and inspire a bold and wholesome love of "truth, regardless of consequences"!!

I have seen, in my time, a good deal of philosophico-theological gymnastics performed round that word "experience," as used by Hume in relation to the subject of miracles. But I have yet to find the dilemma in which that philosopher put his supernaturalist critics effectually answered by them. "It is more probable (said he) that human testimony should be false than that a miracle should be true;" or as Paley repeats Hume's objection: "It is contrary to experience that a miracle should be true, but not contrary to experience that testimony should be false." This objection to miracles advanced by Hume before science had so completely disclosed to us the uniform, orderly development of Nature as it has since done, I say again, has never been really confuted by theology, but, on the other hand, has been confirmed by the ever-accumulating verities of science.

Both on the principles, then, of true philosophy—the philosophy of scientific fact,—and on the principles of scholarly, historical criticism, the fairly intelligent mind of our day, apart from traditional prejudices, cannot but have a predisposition to trust the order of the universe as an uniform whole, and as all-sufficient for every need of our race, and to disbelieve in the aberglaube of supernaturalism.

When any class of men take it upon them to assert that something miraculous took place somewhat frequently, two thousand years ago in Palestine, among a few obscure Jewish peasants of whom contemporary history says nothing, and of whom trustworthy history takes no account for more than a century afterwards; when any class of men insist on our faith in this preternatural interference on the authority of the most unsatisfactory evidence ever produced—evidence which never can be verified; when any class of men maintain that our escape from eternal misery or eternal annihilation, as the case may be, depends on our reception of vague and unverifiable allegations about events avowedly contrary to the known laws of Nature and to the sum of trustworthy human experience, and more particularly in the most enlightened ages and countries,—then unquestionably a very grave onus of proof rests upon these believers in miracles. For my part, I unhesitatingly own that I regard miracles as impossible, unnecessary, and superstitious; and while I see startling presumption in any party proclaiming the necessity of believing in them on a basis so frail—not to say illusory—as the authority on which they are made to stand, I find everything harmonious with reason and with accredited and sober human experience in the position of those of an inductive habit of mind who disbelieve them.

Your mode of treating the subject calls to one's mind the legal exigency in which the policy is resorted to of abusing the plaintiff's attorney. You denounce the honest, truth-seeking "scientists," as you call them, who have no creed to maintain for pay, and who have consequently vastly less temptation than theologians in the Christian sects have to stick to a dogma because it is the shibboleth of a party. We have had enough of denunciation and reproach from Orthodoxy. What we want is honest and earnest discussion from your side; not elaborate metaphysical dialectics or effusions of pious sentiment, which are quite irrelevant, but calm, logical statements of fact in reply to the historical and scientific statements of fact put forth by learned sceptics. Yet if we invite you to answer Dr. Carpenter and Prof. Tyndall with science for science, you choose either to evade the real point at issue, or to assume a scornful attitude and refuse our reasonable demand as if it were malicious and profane. If we ask you to reply to Spinoza's Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, or Strauss's Life of Jesus, or Colenso's Pentateuch, you simply point us to Neander's Life of Christ, or Aids to Faith, or to the paltering lectures of the "Christian Evidence Society;" and you go your way, reminding us that our "stale objections" have been "answered over and over again." But we will continue to proclaim our dissatisfaction till the whole question of the Christian miracles is dealt with by you in a purely inductive fashion, and the scorn or pity you affect towards "scientists" and "unbelievers" we will only regard as marks of a weak cause. I recommend to your attention the reply of Herder, in his Survey of Spinozism, to the habitual carping of priests at science in all ages. He argues truly that just in proportion as physical science has progressed, men's ideas of God and Nature have been purified and raised, and the old fancies of "the faithful" respecting the universe, as subject to blind and arbitrary control, have been dispelled. "The forces of Nature," he says, "are eternal as the Godhead in which they inhere. All is, was, and ever will be in conformity with beneficent, beautiful, necessary law, twin-sister of eternal power, mother of all order, security, and happiness."

How different this view from the persistent attempts of the guardians of ecclesiastical interests everywhere, who can with difficulty be got to speak kindly of the most disinterested and reverent attempts to unveil the operation of natural law, unless the scientific student happen to profess unquestioning belief in their metaphysical speculations at the same time. It has rather been the habit of Orthodoxy to refer to the framework of life around us as God-forsaken, or as containing, at best, a cold, marred, distant, and unsatisfying revelation of the First Cause; and this disposition of priests to undervalue revelations of universal law through science has usually been associated with a tendency on their part to be most dogmatic and earnest about things that are most inscrutable—most confident in their hair-splitting definitions of what is most indefinable. One of your ablest theological colleagues, I remember some time ago, charged disbelievers in his view of the supernatural with "imprisoning God within a vast and immovable system of natural laws." A strange and, I fear I must say, an ungrateful conception for any man to have of the system of the universe as based upon law,—so constant, progressive, and infinite in its evolutions. Might we not, with some propriety, reply: "Orthodox theologians have imprisoned God in a narrow creed, and represented him as if he were a mere impersonation of dogmatic theology, or a president of an ecclesiastical assembly?" Any one who considers the movements of the Almighty as unnaturally restrained because directed by invariable laws indicates a state of mind very becoming, perhaps, a retained counsel defending a case in which he has some substantial interest; but, in my judgment, neither philosophical nor religious. The very principle of undeviating uniformity which you and your friends oppose the loftiest scientific minds unite in acknowledging to be the highest mark of infinite wisdom and goodness. Without it prudent forethought in the conduct of human affairs would be impossible. Have you ever been conscious of any experience, material, intellectual, or spiritual, that can be proved to be above and beyond the direction of fixed natural law? Your birth, your education, your physical and mental growth, the formation of your religious convictions, the influences you have exerted and received in your intercourse with your fellow-creatures, your work as a Christian teacher—have not all these things been under the dominion of natural law? And have you felt the more on that account your legitimate freedom and happiness limited? Well, then, you have but to project your finite experience, in these respects, upon an infinite scale, to form some idea (remote, I admit, but sufficiently clear for the purpose of the present argument) of how compatible the control of eternal and fixed law is with the freest movements of the First Cause.

* Ecclesiastical History, vol. i., p. 93.

† Art. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, vol. ii., p. 506.

‡ Draper's History of the Intellectual Development of Europe, vol. i., pp. 301-302.

If English Church and Chapel-goers were to trouble themselves less about what is beyond the sphere of rational proof, and were to occupy themselves more with the study of natural law, upon coöperation, with which the true regeneration of humanity depends; if the principles of natural morality had always held sway as the religion of churchism has done; if science and philanthropy had always wielded among the masses as wide an influence as theology and priestcraft have done,—there would now be immensely less social vice, physical misery, and intellectual and moral degradation; better sanitary regulations; a nobler bodily and mental organization in our fellow-creatures; a keener appreciation of æsthetics; a livelier sense of mutual obligations between capital and labor, between the governing and the governed, and between parents and children; a wider diffusion of useful knowledge, and a worthier conception of religion.

I should like to refer, in concluding my remarks on the chief theme of Dr. Carpenter's lecture, to a concession which he makes to Orthodoxy, and to which I am obliged to take exception. The doctor admits that prayer is efficacious in the spiritual sphere, as far as to enable us "to obtain enlightenment" as to "the will of God and strength to do or bear it." This concession is remarkable as showing wherein the lecturer is illogical and unscientific in the application of his principle of natural law. He thinks that there is "a spiritual action of Deity on the mind of the devout petitioner." He accepts the testimony of "the religious experience of ages" in support of this supposed direct operation of God on the devout mind, and he writes in the letter quoted from at the beginning of this paper as if he held this direct operation of God as outside the realm of law; and yet, while finding it convenient to bow to the authority of "the religious experience of ages" on this head, he inconsistently rejects the very same testimony in past times, where physical miracle is concerned. To be logical, he ought to yield to the "sanction" of "the religious experience of ages" equally for both kinds of preternatural interference, or for neither; for the testimony is equally weak or strong—just as we may please to regard it—for both. If "the religious experience of ages" may not be trusted by a scientific man when fervently adduced in support of the disturbance of physical law, why should it be trusted when it asserts the influence of prayer, in modifying the application of law in spiritual matters? I venture to believe that neither in "sacred literature" nor in ecclesiastical history can there be found a single instance in which "enlightenment" or "strength" was ever realized by saints—Catholic or Protestant—as a preternatural result of prayer, and which could not be realized without it. Intense religious susceptibility will readily catch fire, in certain moods of the mind, under any pious act, whether secluded meditation or the strain of a familiar hymn or an impressive sermon; and the glow of the feeling, thus excited, will communicate itself to the intellect and the will, and create a spiritual atmosphere in which spiritual objects will be vividly realized, and spiritual purposes vigorously executed. The reflex influence of religious enthusiasm, when directed by pure desire to know and do what is deemed right, will always be great upon the mind. But for Dr. Carpenter to admit "the spiritual agency of Deity in the mind of man," as he expresses it, as if it were beyond law, while "the action of Deity in the physical universe" as according to law, is plainly a begging of the question. "The mind of man"—whatever that may be—is a part of the universe, and if the universe throughout be "a system of orderly evolution," the harmony of the universe is broken if we allow the spiritual department to be independent of law and the physical to be under law; and surely such a conclusion is quite contrary to the tendency and teaching of science. The simple fact seems to be that Dr. Carpenter has studied law as evinced in physical science; but with the characteristic modesty of one who knows his own class of subjects well, but who has not, perhaps, paid the same attention to the quality of evidence furnished by ecclesiastical history in favor of the efficacy of prayer for spiritual guidance, he excusably hesitates, and especially with the solemn array of "the religious experience of ages" before him, to affirm that preternatural events may not have occurred in that experience. It is not improbable, however, that had his analysis of ecclesiastical testimony been as thorough as it has been of physical phenomena, he would not have been so timid in extending the application of uniform law to the spiritual sphere, and in excluding therefrom the efficacy of prayer as an agent capable of inducing the direct action of the Deity. The early history of all religions, it is now well understood, should be received with extreme caution; first, because sound modern criticism has demonstrated that many of the narratives in the so-called "sacred literature" of nations are incapable of positive authentication, both as to authorship and contents; secondly, because the "sacred" and "profane" literature alike which details "the religious experience of ages" pertains, invariably, to times, places, and societies in which imagination has played a mightier part than reason, and in which credulity and priestcraft, with their attendant fanaticisms, have been signally rampant. Indeed, one might safely add, without the least disparagement of any existing sect of religionists, that those who profess to rely on prayer in our time, as influencing the Deity to impart "enlightenment" and "strength" in the spiritual sphere, are not, as a rule, persons the doctor would think preëminently distinguished for historic and scientific attainment, or for the judicious management of their faculties.

I must add a word on the concluding sentence in your letter: "Wishing that you yourself may soon again pass from darkness to the true light of life in Christ." The wish I cannot doubt is sincere, but it surely is one of the marks of an arrogant system to assume, as Orthodoxy always does, that one is only in a state to have a long face pulled at him, and to be sighed over, if his theory of the universe be not according to the Thirty-nine Articles, the Confession of Faith, or some other sectarian creed. Again, I affirm that in this world of varying religious ideas, where so-called "believers" are more affected, I make bold to say, by sentimental associations than by deep and rational convictions, and where it is not easy for most men to find time and ability to struggle through the stumbling blocks theologians have placed between them and simple religious truth, it would be a slur on eternal justice that men should be judged, in relation to their moral state or their future destiny, by their intellectual apprehension of the things they hold to be religious. I have said elsewhere in this series, and I make no apology for repeating the declaration, that I know no infidelity but treachery to conscience, and no Orthodoxy but loyalty to conscience. I have felt honored and privileged at home and abroad by the intimate friendship of men of all the principal sects of Europe and America, and of men standing very sincerely aloof from all, and the impression has been forced upon me by my study of character generally that in few cases is the ordinary moral conduct of men influenced by their theological theories and church practices; that while it is the tendency of exciting religious dogmas and ceremonies to spoil the class who yield themselves up absorbedly to them, the mass of well-meaning people happily let creeds and churches sit very lightly on them, and depend most for guidance on those principles of common sense and human morality which imbue well-governed minds in all countries.

You wish that I "may soon pass out of darkness." If my own consciousness may be allowed to attest the nature of my changed theological perceptions (unless you suspect "the natural man"—that much abused Pauline phrase—now rules within me!), I can assure you that the very opposite of darkness would more fitly describe my condition. I have indeed realized, most fully, in my experience, that description in the epistle in a sense not intended by the author: I have "passed from darkness to marvellous light," and the light shines brighter and brighter every day. "Life in Christ"? What is it? Where shall I find it? How shall I be sure that in accepting it according to Evangelicals, I ought not rather to have sought it among High Churchmen, or Broad Churchmen, or Unitarians? All these sections of Christians invite us "unbelievers" to share this life in Christ, and at the same time involve us in a maze of bitter controversy as to which party has the genuine thing to offer. You tell me to accept the Christ of the New Testament. But is it to be the Christ of the gospels, the miracle-worker, or the Christ of the epistles, the atoning sacrifice for human sin? Am I to follow the Christology of the synoptic gospels or that of the fourth gospel? The Christology of Paul or of Peter? Perhaps you reply that I am mainly to follow the teachings of Christ. But it cannot be proved that the words ascribed to Jesus were ever used by him, and even if they were, some of his precepts are for our age utterly impracticable. What Christian citizen in our day pretends to follow carefully the mode of life laid down by Christ? Who "takes no thought for the morrow"? It is only by taking thought that the progress of the world can be advanced. Who, among even the most ardent of Christian enthusiasts, are willing now "to make themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake"? Perhaps you intend by "life in Christ" moral likeness to Christ. But the question arises, In what are we to be like Christ? Are we to be like Christ in all that he did, or only in those things we ourselves think good and excellent? Does the Christianity of Christlikeness include cursing fig-trees for not having fruit on them out of their season? Does it include whipping those we think impious with a whip of small cords? Does it include denouncing the inconsistent as "whited sepulchres," "hypocrites," and a "generation of vipers"? Does it include saying to one's mother, when she has failed to appreciate him, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come"? Does it mean that we are to tell women of other districts, when they ask for our benevolence, "It is not meet to take the meat of the children and cast it to the dogs"? Does it include that we are to exercise our powers to destroy two hundred swine belonging to an unoffending man? Or does it mean that we are to be so little the friends of temperance as to produce two hundred gallons of good wine for our guests "after they have already well drunk"?* Whatever view, therefore, we take of "life in Christ," we shall meet with grave difficulties in forming a clear and definite idea of what it means; and that consideration, if there were no other, is sufficient to show that a religion so extensively the subject of dispute, and open to such conflicting interpretations, was never intended to be as an organized and a stereotyped system the supreme, final, and exhaustive revelation of moral and religious truth to mankind. Let it not be understood that I undervalue the elevated tone of spirituality and consecration attributed to Jesus in the gospels. He, at all events, seems, above most, to have lived up to his lights. Human life is incalculably enriched by many of the sayings and doings ascribed to him in the New Testament. But as far as these sayings are wise and good, they contain nothing original; and as far as the doings are noble and historically true, they are not without parallel. There is something even broader and more in harmony with the devout and cultured aspirations of humanity, as a whole, than "life in Christ." I accept Jesus only as one of many prophets and teachers necessary to the full discipline and development of my intellect, conscience, heart, and will; but while profoundly grateful for the instructions of all great and good men, I bind myself to accept implicitly and without qualification the teaching of none. Under the guidance of the best judgment and sense I can command, I strive to discriminate and arrive at a just conviction. The higher lights of the nineteenth century enable me to see defects in the utterances and conduct of the greatest sages of antiquity which their standard of things—necessarily vague—preclude them from detecting. I believe in the gradual evolution of knowledge, and the gradual uplifting of the race in every department, through human agency and in harmony with fixed law. Owing to the natural limitation of men's faculties, right views in one direction will be mixed up with wrong views in another direction, in the most valuable contributions to human enlightenment and progress. But assertion, hypothesis, and theory in the advancement of knowledge are sifted and improved upon by successive great minds from age to age, and thus the revelation of law, in its manifold applications, goes on; man's recognition of the vital importance of law is quickened and deepened, and the general improvement of mankind is the result. Life, according to the most philosophical understanding and practice of law in its varied relations and bearings, is a far more healthful, rational, and useful kind of life than the "life" which is limited by what was thought, said, or done by "Christ," or by any other single man, be he ever so great or good.

Yours, &c., M. M.

[For THE INDEX.]

ANOTHER OF PRESIDENT ELIOT'S MISTAKES.

"We are living at a time which will hereafter be known as a remarkable period of many and great endowments. . . . These endowments are doing good work for the present generation, and are likely to do nothing but good to many generations to come. Yet there is in the public mind a jealousy of endowments, as if they did harm, or threatened to become harmful. We have not waited to be hurt, but have cried out with apprehensions of hurt."
—(See President Eliot's Address, quoted in THE INDEX of June 11, p. 281.)

The last remark may be true of this country. Being a foreigner, comparatively unacquainted with its history and institutions, we do not pretend to dispute it. But, if it is true, we have no hesitation in pronouncing that it is because the country is still so young as to afford no instance of the workings of an endowment "many generations" after its establishment. Had President Eliot, when in England he felt pricked with shame for the doings of his countrymen, taken the trouble to inquire how endowments are regarded by a people who have experienced their harmful effects after the lapse of a few centuries, we hardly think he would now entertain such sentiments as are quoted above. Had he even conferred on this subject with his eminent co-religionist, who was recently the means of the English Unitarian Church declining a gift of £20,000 (towards which £12,000 had already been obtained) on the very ground that "the permanent endowment of any form of theological doctrine injuriously interferes with the natural changes of religious thought and life," Mr. James Martineau would doubtless have laid such proof before his eyes as would have compelled assent. He might have visited a place of worship in the heart of London, where, owing to the wise beneficence of a pious founder, a venerable old fogy discourses Sunday after Sunday on some exploded nonsense to three old women and a few of their grandchildren, who attend in consideration of a weekly dole of sixpence, or a loaf of bread. He might have witnessed in one of the parish churches of the same city, on certain days of the year, the edifying spectacle of a parcel of rheumatic, aged hags scrambling for pennies on the gravestone of another of those sagacious individuals whose benefactions "do nothing but good to generations to come;" and had he followed the recipients of this charity home, he must have been edified by their curses, deep and dire, on "the folly of the old sinner" through whose whim they were compelled to scrape their knees on the cold stones for the few coppers they could grab. He cannot have failed to see the Blue-coat School boys, with their bare heads and fantastic costumes; and as he gazed upon the wondrous sight, how his breast must have heaved with indignation against the impudent individuals who "sneer and fling at the benefactors of the public" who ensure to admiring foreigners such a gratuitous raree-show as this! A few years ago, at some of the universities, he would have found scholarships which were bestowed on students who bore a certain surname, or belonged to a certain town. We ourselves had the luck to enjoy one of these from the simple fact that there was no other student of our name in the class. But, alas! a parliamentary commission, not "endowed" with President Eliot's discriminating admiration of endowments, has changed all this, and our sons will find that their name weighs nothing against another's merit.

* The Impossibility of Knowing what is Christianity, p. 12.

One of the most exciting topics of discussion in the last General Assembly of the Church of Scotland was the gift to the church by Mr. James Baird of £500,000 (said to be the most munificent donation ever presented by an individual to the Christian Church in the whole course of her history), for the augmentation of the stipends of those of her ministers who are found to excel in preaching sound doctrine according to the Westminster Confession. It will be seen that this endowment is destined, if not designed (which, considering who the donor is, we are inclined to think it was), to act as a formidable barrier against the spread of liberalism among the Scottish clergy. The liberals among them, taking warning by the exclusion of their party in the Church of England from the honors and emoluments of the Bampton Lectureship and other such foundations, sought to pledge the Assembly to induce Mr. Baird to modify the terms of his bequest. But "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." The Assembly declined to entertain the proposal, probably because it felt that Mr. Baird's retort would be, Take the bequest as it is, or leave it. And while the liberals, doubtless, would far rather have seen the bequest revoked than what liberty the Church possesses fettered, the great body of the clergy (of the present clergy,—no one can tell what may be the case in future, and just here lies the hardship and the harm) have no desire to see liberalism spread, and no intention, small blame to them, of letting the proffered augmentation slip. We will confidently leave it to President Eliot to decide whether the Scotch Church, in accepting, or the English Unitarians, in rejecting endowment, acted (we will not say more nobly, but) more sagaciously in the interests of the "generations to come."

In fact, so convinced have the English people become of the harmfulness of endowments that, despite their extreme veneration for the sacredness of property, they no longer hesitate, when they deem fit, to set aside the intentions of testators, and divert their endowments from the objects contemplated to others seen to be more worthy, or more in accord with the spirit of the age. In the future they will hesitate still less than they do now. For proof that in this opinion we are not alone, we may refer to the many, now-a-days, who, having wealth and the desire to secure the benefit of that wealth to some particular project in which they are interested, no longer defer their gift until the administration of it is beyond their control; but in their lifetime divest themselves of their superfluous possessions, that they may make sure that these are expended on the purposes contemplated, and not on others of which they had never dreamed, and would, perhaps, not have approved.

Are the thinking portion of the English people quite in the wrong in this matter, or has President Eliot not fully considered all the bearings of the case? AN ENGLISHMAN.

EXTRACTS FROM A SPEECH BY REV. M. J. SAVAGE,

AT THE UNITARIAN FESTIVAL, BOSTON, MAY 27.

I was not waiting for the applause; I was waiting to see how many of you would do just as I should if I were down there; that is, get up and go. I hope those who have spoken to-night will not think I mean them if I do say that I get fearfully tired of hearing people talk; the great wonder with me, as a minister, is, that any body comes to church to hear me, any time. I never scolded people for not coming to church in my life—I never could. It seems to me cruelty to animals to keep you any longer here in this hall; but if you will pity me for having to talk to you, I will pity you for having to listen, and so we shall be fellow-sympathizers in affliction, and I will try to make my talk just as brief as I can.

I want to leave you to-night just where we began, and so bind these speeches of the evening into a crown, if I may, that shall be the conclusion and glory of the week. I will be contented to be simply the thing to tie the two ends together, and I will make the ends of the string just as short as possible. I want to leave off, I say, where the first speaker began, with an idea or two concerning the drift, the progress, of our time. I believe that none of us are aware how much it means, or how deep it is, or what a mighty tide it is, or how it is sweeping on the world. Why, the whole history of the past is but a history of snapping cables and dragging anchors; and, as one has remarked here to-night, the world has tried, over and over again, to build itself some stable foundation that would stand, and God, who ever has in store for his children something better than they have yet dreamed or conceived, has overthrown their foundation, and set them adrift once more.

You will pardon me to-night if I speak of a personal matter, because it is the most forcible illustration of this idea that I can think of. I do not know that any of you have heard of it; it is a secret to a large part of the world, judging by the number of copies that have been sold,—but I published a little book about a year ago (I do not speak to-night in the interest of the publishers; I hope you will not take it as an advertisement), and the papers all over the country—such papers as the Independent, the Congregationalist of this city, the Advance of Chicago, the leading Methodist weeklies, and quarterlies, the Presbyterian papers,—all of them, until I became a Unitarian, thought the book was good Orthodoxy; they endorsed it all over and clear through. I was a member of the Orthodox Church at the time the book was printed; but THE INDEX, here in Boston, came out and reviewed it, and as I read that review, it fairly took my breath away. It made the statement, to me very startling, that the essential idea of Christianity which I had there set forth was precisely identical with the idea of Christianity which was held and taught thirty years ago in this city by Theodore Parker.

I was Orthodox, and was teaching Parkerism, and didn't know it. That is what THE INDEX said. I had never read Theodore Parker. I had preached about him, and preached against him a great deal. (Laughter.) I went on the principle of Sydney Smith. You will remember that old story, how a friend came in one day, and found him writing a review of a book; and he asked him if he had read it. He said, No, he had never read a book he was going to review; he always found it prejudiced him so. (Laughter.) I had never read Theodore Parker; and, I may as well confess it, my training had been such that I hardly dared to read him, because even if what I read had seemed reasonable to me, and I had drifted out into the current of his ideas, I should have deemed it to be a delusion from beneath, and not an inspiration from above. I used to preach against him, and preach hard. I have a sermon at home now with very severe denunciations of him in it. I am going to burn it after I get home.

The point that I wish to make with this idea is this. I have read Frothingham's Life of Parker recently, and gone over the controversy of 1841, I believe it was,—the year that Theodore Parker broke with the Unitarian denomination in Boston; and I found the truth of that statement of THE INDEX, that what the Orthodox papers of the country thought was good Orthodoxy in 1873–4 was thought bad heresy enough to be kicked out of Unitarianism thirty years ago. It seems to me this indicates something marvellous in the way of the drift of the world, and I have become acquainted with facts in Chicago and the West, within the last two or three years, that prove to me that this is not an indication isolated and by itself, but that it is only one point in a thousand. I had a conversation the other day in St. Louis with a minister who has occupied a prominent place in an Orthodox pulpit for some fifteen or eighteen years, and I never heard in my life such bitter words in setting forth the essential doctrines of the Orthodox system as fell from his lips.

Let me give you one sentence (I hope you will not consider it blasphemy) uttered by him in the conversation, just to illustrate the extent to which this feeling has gone. He said: "I don't wonder the Orthodox churches cling with tenacity to the doctrine of the deity of Jesus, for he is the only decent God they have got." Those words from a man who stood in an Orthodox pulpit six months ago! I had a conversation not long since with a gentleman occupying one of the most prominent Orthodox pulpits of the country to-day, still occupying it, and still proposing to occupy it, as far as I am aware. Of course, I am not at liberty to mention his name; but he told me that he distinctly rejected the doctrine of the Trinity, in its historic sense; he did not believe in everlasting punishment; he had utterly thrown away the infallibility of the Bible,—and yet he is an accepted and popular minister of one of the largest Orthodox churches in the country. I am acquainted not only with these but with ten or twenty more; and this gentleman to whom I just referred, who made such a statement in regard to the deity of Jesus, told me that there were a hundred ministers over the country to-day in the Orthodox pulpits that stood by his side. (Applause.) He said the only reason they did not have a convention and declare themselves was because they shrank from creating a new sect in the country; for they looked forward to the time when not only they, but men like Theodore Parker, men like Rabbi Sonneschien of St. Louis, the liberal Jew, men like Robert Collyer, men who believe in a loving Father in heaven, and a common brotherhood of man, could stand side by side in the church of humanity, and work and live together. And it is the faith that something like this is before us that animates, cheers, and strengthens me.

THE Church Herald takes a glowing view of our condition. It thinks that the cause of Christianity does not advance; that the material progress upon which we pride ourselves is tending daily more and more to keep God out of our sight, until he is all but clean forgotten in the world. Never since England was Christian was he so entirely ignored as now. Infidelity increases, and brings in its train a levelling democracy, which threatens to engulf our remaining institutions. The Herald thinks that the only way to stem this tide of evil is to reassert the principles of Catholicism and Toryism; and though it believes itself to be alone amongst English newspapers, it is determined to continue in the good work.—London Graphic.

THERE IS A GOOD story of a little boy who, going into a bookstore with his mother, crept up to the juvenile of the establishment with the sly query, "Say, have you got any books for boys that ain't got any religion in 'em?"

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THINGS HARD TO BEAR.

BY MRS. D. H. CLARK.

The changing into dust of the old faces
(Haply a baby's, sweet to look upon)—
The sounds of singing in their empty places,
While the gay laughter of the world goes on,
And heeds not they are gone!

Dashes of winter rain in torrents cruel,
Out in the dark night, on a little grave,
The close-sealed casket of our unpriced jewel,
Which we with moaning to the chill earth gave,
And bade our hearts be brave!

The faded violet of a bygone summer,
Whose pale leaves, starting into sudden view,
Recall the rifled sweets—the careless comer,
Who prized it only for its chaliced dew;
Then left the flower—and you!

Hoping 'gainst hope, for dead Love's resurrection,
Slain by the pride whose mourning comes too late;
The bitter yearning for the lost affection,
Which flows not back—although we weep and wait,—
Beating against our fate!

The gulf impassable we may not lessen
By one truth-telling glance,—one faintest word
Or sigh! The schooled pulse, the dumb repression
Of the soul's music, which must not be heard,
Though all its deeps be stirred,—

Though all its chords be swept in smothered wailing!
Saddest of all, the lapsing to dull clay
Of that which formed our idols! Unavailing
The wild regret for what has passed away—
The gold that shifts to gray!

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 20.

C. S. Thompson, $1; J. Jackson, $3; M. E. Martin, 50 cts.; M. L. Cummings, $3; A. Miller, $3.50; H. W. Beach, $3; Chauncy Morse, $1.50; Dyer D. Lum, $3; Chas. Fritz, $3; E. B. McKenzie, $1.50; Theodore Weble, $4; Caroline B. Kingman, $3; H. B. Bostwick, $3; F. H. Cooper, $6; L. Kingma, $3; Rufus Tucker, $3; James Ruddle, $3.20; H. Molineaux, $1; Calvin Griswold, $3; L. F. C. Garvin, $3; W. C. Kelley, $3; M. A. Patrick, $1; John Lamden, 75 cts.; Henry N. Webb, 50 cts.; Laura M. Fleming, $1.50; Jacob Beede, $1; J. F. Johnston, 50 cts.; Marcus T. Janes, $3; Jabez Elverson, $1.50; Wm. Hazelwood, $1; Andrew Ashton, $3; John Whitaker, $3; S. F. Shaw, $1.25; Chas. E. Pratt, $3; E. S. Elder, 50 cts.; O. S. Barr, 10 cts.; Geo. M. Wood, 50 cts.; W. Wickesham, 20 cts.; W. B. Gray, 50 cts.; L. W. Billingsley, 50 cts.; R. P. Hallowell, $1.12; Robt. Morrison, 50 cts.; Alex. Risk, 50 cts.; A. K. Loring, 96 cts.; G. H. Foster, $1.51; Cash, $1.36; P. L. Sherman, $1; E. C. Towers, $1.50; B. F. Underwood, $2; J. T. Dickens, $9.75; J. Merritt, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

EUTHANASIA. By S. D. Williams, Jun. Fourth Edition, with Preface and Thesis by Rose Mary Crawshay. London: Williams & Norgate. 1873.

A SUMMARY of Mr. Herbert Spencer's First Principles. For the use of the Higher Classes in Schools, etc. By William A Leonard. London: F. Pitman.

"AND NOW ABIDETH FAITH, HOPE, AND CHARITY." A Lay Sermon by Professor F. W. Newman, preached at St. George's Hall, London, on May 3, 1874.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London, May 10: "What Theism Teaches on the Forgiveness of Sins." May 17: "Legislation on Ritualism." May 24: "Whit-Sunday." May 31: "Trinity Sunday."

A PLEA FOR THE HUMAN ELEMENT IN RELIGION. Address before the Ministerial Union, Boston. By George Batchelor. Boston: 1874.

PIETY AND MORALITY. By W. T. Clarke. New York: 1874.

ANNUAL REPORT of the Trustees of the Astor Library, New York City. Albany: 1874.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 20. Metropolitan Sermons, Second Series.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY, July, 1874. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co.

OLD AND NEW. July, 1874. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will ecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

N.B.—Any person whose name is now on our mail-list will receive a second copy of The Index, mailed to the same address, for a year, on pre-payment of One Dollar. This offer is made to accommodate those of our subscribers who wish to increase our circulation by sending extra copies as samples to their friends.

GLIMPSES.

Methodism might be shortly defined as "hysterical Christianity."

"In New York City there are more than sixty thousand children of the school age who never enter a schoolhouse of any kind." So says the Liberal Christian. It is greatly to be hoped that the new "Compulsory Education Act" will prove to be something better than a dead-letter law.

When a minister prayed the Lord, at a prayer-meeting, to keep him "humble and poor," his deacon responded in the next prayer as follows: "O Lord, if thou wilt keep him humble, we'll keep him poor!" The human intellect fares no better in the hands of the Church, which in fact has no way of keeping it humble except by keeping it poor.

Mr. Morris Einstein, in a very pleasant letter, says he has "overhauled his numbers of The Index from January 1 to this last nnmber" without discovering a single passage favoring the "praying crusade;" and he makes a very handsome acknowledgment of his mistake in supposing that we favored it. When a misunderstanding is so frankly and honorably corrected, it is almost a pleasure to be misunderstood!

Mr. Dexter A. Hawkins, author of the admirable Report on Compulsory Education which was republished in The Index several weeks ago, drafted the bill on that subject which has recently become a law in New York State. His Report caused floods of petitions for compulsory education to be poured into the Assembly at Albany, which drowned out the objections of the conservatives. Mr. Hawkins is a public benefactor of a high order.

A correspondent of the Boston Investigator of June 3 complains of Mr. Connor for making no mention of "Infidels and Atheists," in enumerating at the Free Religious Convention the supporters of the Florence society. The answer of Mr. Seaver, the editor, is a model of good sense and good feeling, and evinces a freedom from captiousness and small carping which several of his contributors would do well to imitate. Mr. Seaver says: "We have to say to our friend, what he probably knew before, that Infidels and Atheists are always in favor of meetings that are free and liberal. This is the case in all places, and Cosmian Hall is no exception. One of its chief officers and as good a man as it can boast of, and there is no better man in the town, is an open and avowed Atheist; while our other subscribers there, who are probably similar in sentiment with himself, are also supporters of the Free Religious Hall. Why Mr. Connor did not allude to the fact, or mention them as well as others, we do not know. Perhaps he forgot it, or there was not sufficient time at the meeting. We can hardly impute the omission to any other causes."

THE FUTURE OF THEISM.

Those of our readers who have taken any pains to follow our thought regarding the deeper religious questions of the time will not need to be reminded that we see no likelihood of the permanence of theism, as a universal belief of the future, unless the scientific method of thinking, applied with the strictness and exactitude which mark all its applications to the problems of physical science, shall be found to lead naturally to that conclusion. On this point we entertain no doubt whatever. Since authority in all its forms, whether as exemplified by the Christian reliance on an external revelation or by the intuitional reliance on an internal revelation, has wholly ceased to retain the allegiance of the strongest and clearest intellects of the age, nothing remains in the nature of things but the appeal to free reason, dealing directly with all the authenticated facts of existence as the only legitimate grounds of religious opinion. In other words, the method of the Church has failed; the method of intuitional or transcendental philosophy has failed; and their failure must sooner or later be the failure of theism, unless the method of science shall prove to be more successful than these collapsed methods of the past. It is high time for theists, if they hold their theism as an infinitely precious possession of mind and heart, to discern the signs of the age, and address themselves in live earnest, with all their intellectual energy, to the task of grappling with the real difficulties of their situation. Among those who are agreed, the restless and disquieting endeavor to pry into the grounds of belief may be waived by common consent, or even repressed in its outward manifestations; but the great thinking world is not agreed, and there never was a time when this endeavor was more determined or irrepressible. Such a battle over the fundamental ideas of religious faith as the history of thought cannot parallel is now imminent,—nay, is already upon us; and, for one, instead of shrinking from it (as many do) with dismay and alarm, we hail it with joy as the inevitable precursor of a new, stable, and general theistic conviction. As we wrote eight years ago, in the now discontinued Christian Examiner: "Theism and atheism are in the scales, and science holds the balance." The experience of these later years has only confirmed this interpretation of the times. We deprecate the sluggishness or timidity of those who profess to be deeply convinced of the truth of theism, yet compel a doubt of their own professions by not lifting a finger in its defence, and by keeping up the old cry of "hands off!" when those who see its danger grasp it boldly to prevent its fall. This fetichistic tenderness for an idea which, like every other, is a natural product of the human mind, will bring upon it the fate of all other fetiches in a thinking age, unless theists come out of their shells and plead their case openly before the bar of science. It is easy to say that "God needs no proof," and so shirk the duty of meeting respectfully the rapidly growing doubt of his existence. Of course, no human discussions can affect objective being. But man's belief in God does need proof, as any one knows who ventures to commune sincerely with the active minds of this day. The next generation will have precious little faith in God, unless the present generation discharges its duty to truth better than it is now discharging it. We affirm unequivocally that the future of theism depends on the strength of its argument; and the "heart" will prove itself a sad blunderer, if it now obstructs or embarrasses the "head."

Our confessed belief that the truth of theism is an "open question" for the present generation of religious thinkers has seemed to some to imply that we are a disguised atheist without the "courage of his opinion;" while to others it has seemed to imply that we are a theist who theoretically advocates the scientific method, but inconsistently practises the method of intuitionalism. Both are mistaken. On the contrary, we doubt if any radical of the period can be found who holds to theism more firmly than we do; or who does it with a firmer adhesion to the scientific method, as he understands it. As to the "disguise" question, we have little to say: our readers have by this time had ample opportunity to judge for themselves whether we are one of the reformers that dissemble their real convictions. Nothing that we could now say would change the opinion of any one who ranks us in that estimable class; and we are far too indifferent to his opinion to make the attempt. But, although it is of the smallest possible consequence to the public what any particular individual thinks on this, that, or the other question, it is of great consequence to know whether it is a fact that one can consistently and in good faith accept the scientific method without thereby abandoning the belief in theism. If the two are really incompatible, we say explicitly that we should hold to the former at the expense of the latter; for we are more sure of the absolute necessity of the scientific method than we are of the correctness of our own application of it. We mean to be understood: whether science shall lead to theism or to atheism, we go with science unhesitatingly, preferring deliberately the most unwelcome truth to the most charming and consolatory delusion. This deliberate preference, which has now become a fixed principle, gives us confidence that we have not surrendered the rein to sentiment when we purposed to follow reason, and that our theism has really its root in a scientific rather than in an intuitional philosophy of religion.

To all who perceive that the intellectual beliefs of the future must be what the increasing light of knowledge (science) shall necessitate, the main question whether the scientific method really leads to theism is of surpassing interest. What reasons are there for holding the opinion that it does?

To go into an analysis of the religious bearings of scientific discoveries or ideas is beyond the scope of this article; a condensed treatment of that subject is already before the public in the Index Tract entitled "The God of Science." But in a brief general way we desire to point out a few considerations which have weight in our own mind, as indicating that larger and deeper drift of thought which escapes the notice of superficial observers of the age.

1. The great power of theism (as we conceive it), regarded merely as a philosophy of the universe, consists in the fact that it makes the universe a unit, a whole, a cosmos pervaded by one law, one end, one cause. But this is also the unmistakable tendency of science itself. The two seem to lead to undistinguishable conclusions. It is chiefly this common tendency to unite all phenomena in thought, and to find their unity in substantially the same ideas, that satisfies our own mind of the non-existence of a real antagonism between theism and science. Physical science teaches unity of law and of force; and universal science, studying these two in the light of the evolution theory, seems to teach the unity of both in mind. That is, the scientific method, when applied to all facts whatever, leads to conclusions which are essentially theistic.

2. It was inevitable that science should first occupy itself with the visible, the ponderable, the mensurable; that is, with matter. But it was also inevitable that the physical sciences should conduct to the social, psychological, and other still more complex sciences, to which the determinations of weight and measure are inapplicable. The method employed, however, is really the same, consisting in the authentication and classification of observed facts, and the discovery of their largest relations by combined induction and deduction. Hence astronomy, chemistry, geology, etc., have been supplemented with sociology, psychology, ethics, the sciences of language, of religion, etc. This necessary progress of investigation from the physical to the mental constitutes one of the "tendencies of modern science" which has not yet received the attention it is entitled to, as an indication of the drift of human thought. These higher sciences must be far more advanced than at present before the bearings of the scientific method on the mental (theistic) interpretation of Nature can be definitely settled; yet we have little doubt, judging from the past, that the disproportionate development of the purely physical sciences, which gives a materialistic coloring to the very word science to-day, will be rectified by the growth of the higher mental sciences; and this must have a great effect in counterbalancing the present materialistic influence of science on thought. While prepared, therefore, to concede that the current of scientific speculation is to-day away from theism, we see a reason for it which appears to have mostly eluded attention; and we consider that the current will inevitably set in the opposite direction, when science itself has become more mature. In other words, we look for a gradual change in the influence of science upon religious thinking, and anticipate that it will become more and more favorable to theistic conclusions.

3. There is another fact which strengthens these anticipations in no small degree. There is a striking coincidence between this tendency of science to advance from the physical to the mental, and the general tendency of civilization at large to lay a more marked emphasis on the higher interests of mankind. The development of material resources now absorbs a chief share of the thought of the civilized world, and will continue for a long time to do so; but humanitarian ideas, nevertheless, are acquiring a greater controlling power in the evolution of society. The spiritual part of man is asserting itself as never before; his rights and his duties, the needs of his higher nature, the cultivation of his finer faculties, are making themselves respected and appreciated far more than formerly. Education, literature, art, science, religion, never made such claims as they make to-day, or were so widely recognized to be paramount in importance to the more obtrusive interests of the race. Here, then, is a general tendency towards the emphasis of humanitarianism in its highest sense which closely tallies with the tendency to theism above noted on the part of science, and which thus helps to corroborate it. Whatever tends to bring out the immense spiritual value of man tends also to confirm the spiritual interpretation of Nature; for, man and Nature being no longer regarded as separable, the interests of humanitarianism and of theism are identical. In fact, theism is the humanitarian philosophy of the universe. Whoever reverences human nature most profoundly is most likely to favor the humanitarian or theistic interpretation of Nature as a whole; and vice versa. For it is really one and the same insight which appreciates the spiritual in Nature and in man. Thus one indication of the theistic tendency of science is to be found in the fact that the tendencies of civilization in general are so strongly in the direction of that very humanitarianism of which theism is the natural product.

Such reflections as these might be indefinitely extended, but our space gives out. They will appear vague and unsatisfactory to those who are not accustomed to take bird's-eye views of large movements in thought and in history. But we trust they may prove suggestive to those that incline to study our relation to the great wholes of which we are all a part. If they shall attract the attention of any to the real issues on which the future of theism must depend, the purpose of this article will have been accomplished.

ABSTINENCE VERSUS MODERATION.

WESTON SUPER MARE, May 25, 1874.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

My dear Sir,—I have noticed in THE INDEX on many occasions remarks unfavorable to teetotalism and to other engagements of total abstinence; but no one has come forward on the opposite side. As I believe a threefold abstinence — from intoxicating drinks, from tobacco and similar narcotics, and from flesh-meat—to be of extreme importance to the welfare of all the great communities of Christendom; since also I should account it as of evil augury, if the members of the Free Religious Society collectively oppose such abstinence,—I hope you will allow me to write at moderate length in favor both of abstinence and of societies professing it.

The only topic on the side of what is called "moderation" which I remember in THE INDEX is the general assertion that education ought to teach us to avoid excess, and that this is a higher state than that of abstinence. Such an assertion appears to me totally to mistake the point at issue, and the main facts of society. To fix ideas, take first my own case as one side. From childhood I perceived that neither I nor my brothers and sisters liked any strong drink for its strength, i.e., for its alcohol. I certainly liked sweetened negus or liqueurs with a delicate flavor in spite of the alcohol; but beer, ale, and porter I disliked as bitter and nauseous, and wine as burning. Hence, regarding these drinks as unnatural, I grew up an abstainer, long before temperate societies were heard of, though both my parents drank as other people; but I never in my life at a solitary meal partook of these drinks, except once or twice in village inns, by way of experiment, to see whether ale or beer would quench thirst, in long summer walks. I came to the conclusion that on the contrary it excites thirst. It was long the fashion to drink healths in company, and I was used to make a sham, by largely diluting the wine, and just sipping it; for I had no conscientious scruple as to tasting. I was several times ordered by physicians to take porter or wine; but never found any good from either, and before long left off. When the temperance and teetotal movements began, I insisted that I was not a teetotaler, and that, for anything I knew, I might take to wine hereafter; for I then believed the silly aphorism current in the medical faculty, that "wine is the milk of old age." Even after I had been for seven or eight years a member of our political society, the U. K. Alliance, which aims to overthrow the existing licensed traffic in intoxicating drink, I refused the title teetotaler until the year 1861. Then first I learned the experiments made at Paris by an eminent chemist in company with two physiologists (all wine-drinkers), and their unanimous, decisive conclusion, that alcohol in the stomach disintegrates the gastric juice, arrests digestion, hardens the food, and makes after-digestion by new gastric juice more difficult; therefore it ought never to be taken with a meal, and ought to be strictly used only as a medicine in the few cases where a wise physician will order it. (In every museum we see how animal fibre is hardened by immersion in spirits.) After this I made sure that I should never need wine in old age as an addition to food, and thought it high time to call myself on principle a teetotaler. Surely this was not in me a moral fall; I am not brought on to a lower plane by it.

Next, on the opposite side, is the case of those who unhappily have acquired habits of excess, and are enslaved to intoxicating drink. Immense experience shows that for such persons there is no safety but in total abstinence. The partial indulgence, gratuitously called "moderation," so kindles their desire, and so steals away their resolution, that they are apt not to know how much they are taking. Great numbers of our working classes are necessarily often in contact with drink-shops, and either for "the good of the house" or from the habits of companions are tempted to drink, when no drink is wanted. The uniform and positive testimony of philanthropists who have spent the whole leisure of their lives to convert drunkards is that no convert can be safe, if he even sip the fatal liquor. Even our lexicographer, Dr. Samuel Johnson, whom no one called a drunkard, is reported to have said to a lady: "Madam, I can be abstinent, but I cannot be moderate." I grant to you that this is a lower state than to be capable of drinking one glass without being enticed to more; that is the penalty on having once contracted an unnatural and pernicious taste,—love of the burning liquor. But the individual is elevated in the only way to him practicable; or, if exceptional individuals may be recovered into a normal state, yet certainly the class of drinkers are elevated in the only way safe and sure to themselves as a class. And not only so, but what is more decisive still, total abstinence is the only way by which a corrupt community can recover that natural childish distaste for the liquors which is our best security, and the state of normal man. Universally, it is the highest virtue to be not even tempted by evil, but to disdain it. At present, the bad habits of society transmit the destructive vice by engendering the dangerous taste. After two generations of total abstainers,—after the drink has been put down as sternly in Christendom as in Islâm,— a third generation will grow up, wholly free from all evil hankerings; meanwhile public opinion, enforced by law, will crush out the trade which enriches itself by pandering to and intensifying the national vice.

But after this happy consummation, ought the nation to go back to what our opponents complacently call "moderation," and "use," as opposed to abuse,—assuming by such phrases the very point to be proved? Just as much as, and no more than, a nation of opium-eaters, when cured by a suppression of the drug for two generations, ought to go back to "moderate" opium-eating, and talk grandly of "moderation" being the higher state, and a regulated use better than disuse. Unnatural substances, which damage nutrition and tamper with the stomach and the blood, ought not to be taken into the system at all. Let the wine-loving doctors refute the physiologists, if they can; but they have no right to ignore them, and go on (as they do) inculcating the opposite, by talk about "moderation," and entitling wine "generous" and "supporting." No medical man at present stands higher in London than Sir Henry Thompson, who last year addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, declaring that what is called "moderation" deteriorates both the body and the intellect; the fact being that "moderation" means each man's fancy. It has no other definition. I knew a gentleman who believed himself exemplary in moderation, and certainly never showed any sign of excess; yet when he died—and that prematurely,—the physician called his disease "drunkard's-liver"! Sir Henry Thompson has recently experimented on total abstinence himself, and announces that he finds it to be just the right thing. Of course, it must be, if the tendency of alcohol is to mar the gastric juice, and corrupt the nature of the blood, as the physiologists decisively pronounce.

Nor only so; but it is abundantly attested that if an operation of great delicacy is to be performed, even a single glass of wine may lessen the accuracy of a surgeon's hand. It is further notorious that wine which is not sufficient to produce any visible excitement lessens grave men's modesty, so that they tell tales and make remarks of which they would be wholly ashamed except after the wine. The ancients, who were keen observers, declare that after moderate drinking men betray secrets; and what is worst of all, our judges testify that the worst crime is committed, not by men who are drunk, but by men who have been drinking; that is, by men who fancy themselves "moderate," and cannot be pronounced otherwise. Moderate drink, so-called, is thought to comfort a man; in fact, short of visible excess, it changes his state of sentiment; it makes some more lavish in giving (hence the use of charity dinners!); it makes some vain and loquacious, and more fluent in speech, but not wiser; it makes some irritable and easily offended, leading them to hasty words and angry deeds; in many it stimulates lust, and many it drives into crime. With some danger from it to the mind, and pure mischief to the body, where is the good sense of drinking it at all? Opponents speak of teetotalers as wishing to impose their taste on others! Nay, but teetotalers believe in experience and science, and wish mankind to abide in the normal taste, which alone is safe and natural.

Philanthropists have long since discovered that the weak will of the drunkard needs support by sympathy, and that nothing so aids him as the promise of another person to abstain, if he will abstain. Numbers of good men and women have taken a pledge of abstinence solely from this motive,—to aid the vicious; and, as they attest, with immense result. Surely it is entirely away from the facts to remark upon this: "They ought not to take a vow of abstinence; for to be moderate without a vow is the higher state." They were moderate (or abstinent) previously without a pledge; only for the benefit of a weaker brother, they consented to limit their own freedom: does this act of charity bring them on to a "lower plane"? All such censures proceed on misconception.

Our business is not solely with ourselves. "Non nobis solum nati sumus." We see a national curse widely spread over all Christendom, fostered by wealthy traders and (alas!) by governments whom it enriches,—short-sighted as they are to touch gains made from vice. If happily we have personally retained a freedom from this vile temptation, it is not enough that we maintain our own virtue; we are bound to break down, if we can, the evil customs and laws which flood the land with misery. We are helpless as individuals against social usages; only by combining into societies can we hope to affect them; that is our sufficient justification of association against the drink.

All the talk about "education" as the cure is misplaced, and implies ignorance of fact, or inattention. If by education is meant intellectual knowledge and information, it is quite inadequate to contend with a depraved taste. The senators of England in the last century, and your members of Congress now, are more highly educated (in this sense) than the millions of Christendom can be for another century; yet our senators were very apt to be drunk, and you cannot trust yours with wine in the halls of Congress. Scotland is better educated than England can become for fifty years; yet Scotland complains more bitterly than England of the drink traffic, and according to our opponents is very drunken. We have in every class of life calamitous drunkenness; as far as possible, it is hushed up among the richer classes, who can more easily conceal it; but it exists, and it increases with increasing facilities for getting the liquor, in spite of education. In fine, these habits are themselves the greatest impediment to intellectual culture; to cure them by it is like catching sparrows by putting salt on their tails. But if education is to include training to good habits (which alone is to the purpose), the beginning of better habits is to lay aside the drink which captivates.

Many of the same topics apply to the use of tobacco, opium, and other narcotics, but of course less vehemently, because they do not lead to violent crime, but only in extreme cases to destitution, neglect of duty, and virtual insanity or bodily ruin. Among our physicians there are some who actually extol tobacco-smoking for adults; yet even these with astonishing unanimity condemn it in young persons. Dr. Augustus Murray, a great chanter of the virtues of tobacco, says that no one under twenty-five shall smoke, and it is better if not before thirty-five. Of course, in the present state of society youths will smoke, if they see mature men smoking; so that it is impossible to solve the problem by separating ages.

But even if "moderate" indulgence in alcoholic drinks and in tobacco did no other harm to a nation, it does this grievous harm,—it absorbs in needless sensual and selfish pleasure those means which the heads of families ought to devote to their wives and children. Thus it indefinitely retards mental cultivation and refinement, and causes a population to live on the edge of starvation, who might be in abundance. I add here this last argument (as applicable in England) against the use of flesh-meat. Space does not permit any further notice of the great vegetarian question. When an English artisan, of no peculiar talent, has strength of mind to practise the triple abstinence, with his wife to back him up,—even in bad times they rear a family and thrive well; they can afford refinements and can bestow charity on other artisans who earn higher wages; nor do our peasants ever show less muscle and less endurance from the small quantity of flesh-meat which they get. Grant that you, with your vast lands, may easily afford yourselves flesh-meat. We are past that stage; therefore our poorer orders need to be taught not to covet that form of food.

FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

Communications.

BLOOD OF JESUS VS. INWARD LIGHT.

BY CHARLES E. PRATT.

The Quakers are a small but not insignificant sect. Beyond Luther and the Reformers, beyond Calvin and the Dissenters, beyond any religious body of people of the seventeenth century, went they in asserting individual freedom of conscience and religious liberty. Freedom of speech, freedom of conduct, freedom of thought, freedom from superstitions,—these they taught not only in formulas but in lives of suffering. They thrust at the heart of priestly and corrupt religions. They were the Radicals of their time, so far as they could be Radicals and keep the name and the character of Christians.

"Get the writings of John Woolman by heart, and learn to love the early Quakers," said Charles Lamb. Read the Apology of Robert Barclay, and learn to respect them, say I. For its solid logic, its close reasoning, its scholarly exposition, and its trenchant treatment of theological errors, it will repay reading by the thoughtfulest reader of THE INDEX; and its chapter on the "Universal Saving Light" would almost pass muster as a Free Religious tract. Were Barclay living now, he would doubtless write differently. He would see some of his premises slip away from him; and the society of which he has been the acknowledged exponent for nearly two hundred years might be justified in laying his book aside with their "plain" coats and bonnets, and ask their apologist to mount the syllogisms of two centuries of progress, and make a statement of principles en rapport with the honest, intelligent convictions of his party to-day. Those for whom he wrote numbered ten thousand in the city of London alone. They refused to be called by any sectarian name, but called themselves Friends; they denied "authority" in Pope or Church; they counted the Bible no more "sacred" or "inspired" than other writings might be, or than the words of a godly minister, and refrained from speaking of it as the "Word of God;" they denied the Orthodox doctrine of the Sunday (Sabbath), and said all days were alike holy; they rejected the necessity of belief in any "creed," and taught that obedience to the light within him would be sufficient on his part for the salvation of any man, whether he ever heard of Jesus or not.

I think George Fox would have subscribed to all the "Demands of Liberalism," except perhaps the eighth.

The successors of this peculiar people are divided into two branches, rather inaccurately called the Orthodox and the Unitarian; and there are several minor divisions.

In the Orthodox branch quite a controversy has lately arisen, the objective cause being a lecture delivered in Boston last winter, and since published as an essay; and curiously enough the point of the controversy centres in their doctrine of the Inward Light.

This controversy was noticed editorially in THE INDEX of May 28, in a very candid and appreciative manner;* and if the editor of the tentative Occasional Observer thinks "THE INDEX misunderstands both the essay and its friends," the essayist and some of his friends do not share that opinion.

Perhaps the Observer says it for a purpose, knowing that many of its readers would be suspicious of truth itself, seen in "a radical paper."

The essay in question is, as THE INDEX ingenuously says, "a calm and winning presentation of the doctrine of the Inward Light of Christ, universal in all men, and saving all who are obedient to it." George Fox and his confrères held this light to be supernatural, a spark of divine kindling, within and above all natural faculties and endowments, leading, if obeyed, to truth and happiness. They also held it to be special in its influence to particular deeds and thoughts, and not general. In these two particulars Socrates and Plato, Jesus and Paul, and Fox and Barclay are not far apart.

This view is suited to minds prone to a mystical philosophy, like that of Boehmen; and also to simple, pure-minded, enthusiastic converts to religion. Not the early Friends alone, but the early Methodists, and smaller sects that dot these eighteen centuries, are examples of this. The father teaches his child that God made him and sends him those favors and welcome experiences which he calls blessings; and the crudely informed boy believes it. So the humble convert sees special Providence in every striking occurrence, and the ardent exhorter or minister looks or waits for some sign of divine direction as to what and when. It is doubtless the best recognition of this inward light that it infuses itself into every mental state and action. And the supernatural view might have to give way to the natural in the last analysis. But to recognize and assert the supernatural view as a cardinal principle in religious matters was a long, brave step, and still requires courage.

The tendency of the churches is to hang the key to salvation upon some peg of observance of ordinances, or penance, or belief in some dogmatic statement or historic fact.

The tragedy of Calvary affords so much that is dramatic and pathetic, and is so ingeniously wrought up with the mysterious, that it furnishes the "revivalist" and the "evangelist" with the best of themes for stirring the emotions of people; and I think it is matter of observation that a tendency to this emotional phase of religion, this special use of the Calvary sacrifice to the end of causing sudden conversion and ecstatic faith, which has acquired with many the name of "Methodistic religion," is seen wherever any sect has spread very rapidly of late years. It seems to flourish most in the West, and in rural communities. The large increase in numbers and in activity of the Society of Friends in the West and South within the last ten years has either been due to, or has developed exceedingly, this emotional and "Methodistic" tendency. It is in reality a part of the great swerving toward ritualism of one part, whilst the other part is drawn toward rationalism.

Thus there have been among the Quakers two modes of belief, two parties, the one holding still to the belief in a light in every man leading and inspiring him to a gradual conversion, and into a life of purity and happiness; the other believing that knowledge of and faith in the outward sacrifice of Christ is necessary to being saved from perdition, and that sudden conversion and redemption by the blood of Jesus is the only door to heaven.

There is a little pamphlet entitled The Blood of Jesus, published by the American Tract Society, which sets forth the views held by this latter class, and which may be found in almost all their houses.

These differences have housed together in the same branch of the Church, until an able man has directed a current of thought directly to the question, and at once they arrange themselves at opposite poles.

It is easy for an unprejudiced observer to see which party is historically and philosophically on the right basis as Friends, but not so easy to see in what the matter will result. As Mr. Abbot says: "The staid Friends are getting profoundly stirred up about it;" and the movement is not without considerable interest to the friends of freedom, justice, and reason.

BOSTON, June 19, 1874.

A FORECAST INTO THE MORALS OF THE FUTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—It is to be presumed that the readers of THE INDEX are conversant with the fact that the morality of the present day (theoretic, I mean, not practical), although doubtless vastly superior to that of any preceding age, is yet very far from approaching perfection. Up to the present time, morals have been only, or at least chiefly, just what the derivation of the word imports—manners, customs, resting on public opinion as their basis,—that being right which the majority of people in a given place and time agree to consider right; whence has sprung the puzzling anomaly of one and the same action, or course of action, being regarded in one place or at one time as right, and in another place or at another time as wrong; whereas all who can see below the surface of things and opinions clearly perceive that true morality must rest on the sure and stable rock of fact, not on the shifting quicksand of opinion, and that, therefore, under the same conditions, only one course of action can at any time be right. What that rock of fact is, on which true or scientific morality rests, is not for a moment doubtful. It is, as I should say, utilitarianism; or as you, I believe, prefer to express it, the sum of the necessary relations subsisting between the individual and his surroundings; which seems to me only another way of stating the same thing, compliance with necessary conditions being, I take it, necessarily utilitarian. That, in very many cases, we have not attained to the knowledge of the course of action which utilitarianism, or the necessary relations of the individual, determines as the only proper course, all gifted with the deeper insight spoken of will readily admit. The mere fact, then, of one's criticising the present system, or proposing some alteration in the present practice, of morality is no proof, no presumption even, of a desire to impugn morality, although all the adherents of traditional morality will assert so; as they did, to mention but one memorable instance, in the case of Socrates.

Although my present purpose is not to do either of the two things above referred to, yet in what follows I may seem to some to be unnecessarily disturbing the received conceptions of morality. After the very just and reasonable rebuke, however, which Mr. Morse lately administered to Mr. Voysey though your columns, I am not without hope that, if your readers should peruse these lines, they will bear in mind throughout that, our present notions of morality being tentative and provisional, it is only by questioning and discussion of them that we can improve them, if faulty, or satisfy ourselves of their unimprovability, should they be established as resting on the true and sure foundation.

The reflections recorded here were suggested by a passage in that admirable discourse on "The Suppression of Vice" which you printed in your issue of a week or two ago, together with an announcement which appeared in the daily papers about the same time. The passage is that in which Mr. Frothingham exposes the misjudged, short-sighted nature of the policy referred to, by instancing the fearfully injurious consequences that would result to society from the effective suppression of houses of evil resort. Whilst denouncing this form of evil and its victims in the severest terms, Mr. Frothingham recognizes it as the floodgate or safety-valve, whose closure would be followed by a rush or explosion of pent-up passion, threatening the total destruction of social morality; and suggests, in the form of a query, that "the wretched and abhorred women whom it is loathing even to name" may be "the unconscious and unwilling saviors of society;" a suggestion which has been put forth before by another in the shape of a bold assertion of these poor creatures' claim to be regarded as "priestesses sacrificing themselves on the altars of humanity to preserve intact the purity of the remainder of their sex." But if, as is implied in the above quotations, and as is widely believed, these houses and their inmates be, under the present condition of society, a necessary evil, and cannot, therefore, at least with safety to the community, be entirely and immediately suppressed, it yet seems possible so to place them under sanitary and police inspection as to prevent their degenerating into the dens of crime and disease which, when left to themselves, they invariably become. Great, then, was our astonishment to read in the daily papers that the authorities of St. Louis, where this policy had been in operation, had concluded to discontinue it, and allow these sores upon the social body to fester and putrefy, in the course of their normal development, without let or hindrance from those whose duty it is to guard the life and property of the inhabitants and visitors of their city. No reasons were alleged for the new course which the authorities had decided to pursue; but, in view of the triumphant success which has attended the operation of this policy on the continent of Europe, and in those towns and cities in England where it has been enforced, the only conclusion it seems possible to arrive at is that ignorant superstition and prejudice have succeeded once more in driving enlightened philanthropy from the field.

But this is merely incidental and introductory. My purpose is not to discuss what is the best mode of dealing with this form of evil under present conditions, but to inquire what are likely to be the received views of sexual morality in that future when, as we all surely trust, this vice shall have disappeared.

"The change that is in the air," of which we hear so much now-a-days, in regard to all man's intellectual convictions respecting the universe, and his own place and destiny in it, is affecting no less surely, although not yet so conspicuously, his moral convictions also, and especially in regard to the mutual relations of the sexes. We think no observant man can have failed to notice this, although as yet it is not matter of notoriety or wide-spread discussion.* Nor is this any subject of wonder. For a reconstruction of man's moral ideas must necessarily be preceded by a change in his intellectual views, as these afford the foundation on which, and impose the conditions under which, his morality is constructed. And as the foundation must be settled before the superstructure can be erected, the whole energy of the mind must be given first to consolidating and arranging the new knowledge it has come into possession of, before it can turn to the consideration of what remodelling in the moral conclusions is necessitated by the alterations effected in the intellectual premises. But when, out of the chaos of doubt which supervenes on any radical change in man's general conceptions of the universe, in which we have all been wallowing for a quarter of a century, a new cosmos of positive convictions has been evolved, as may now surely be said to be the case with every mature mind, the day is at hand, if not already here, when the process of re-investigating and adapting our moral conceptions to the requirements of our new truth must be undertaken, and cannot be evaded.

The change of opinion as to woman's comparative status in the ranks of humanity is very marked, and is not more important in itself than in the moral consequences which must inevitably follow from it. Our whole existing system of morality is built upon the doctrine of female inferiority. And, as might be expected from what has been advanced above, there are still many who regard women, married women at least, as the property of men. (We speak, of course, only of the tolerably civilized and educated. On the ignorant or barbarous mind no other conception has ever dawned.) There are still more who, not daring to assert this explicitly, yet cling to it as a prejudice of feeling. But can any one doubt that the doctrine of woman's equality with man is destined utterly to eradicate first the opinion, and finally the prejudice? And what then? We do not undertake to prophesy; we content ourselves with results already obtained. Mark the ever increasing number of divorces, and the rapidly growing opinion, both consequence and cause of increasing divorces, that man and wife who cannot live happily together, even though no immorality of any kind can be attributed to either, are fully entitled to separate, and retain their fair reputation unblemished, even in the event of their contracting another alliance. The sanctity of the marriage institution is thus taking its way towards that limbo where the divine right of kings, and other holy superstitions of man's past, rest in peaceful forgottenness. Nor do we feel frightened by the alarmist cry of impending license, and universal prostitution, and the disruption of society. We know that our marriage system has not been from everlasting, even as we see that it is not likely to be unto everlasting. The same commotion must have been raised by the adherents of the preëxisting system, when our system began to take its place. And if we have not, we at least ought to have, outgrown the childish apprehension of "after us the deluge." And what if, to our current notions, the state of society which the present growth of opinion seems destined to bring about look like that primeval state before marriage was? Have we not already learned that the motion of humanity, even when it seems to return on its path, is not the recurrent swing of the pendulum, but the lark's ever-uprising, spiral coil, which although continually retracing the same circle on the earth's surface is yet at every circuit soaring nearer unto heaven? We may rest assured that the future theory and practice of sexual relations will be no more like those of the past than Huxley's agnosticism is like the savage's unsuspected ignorance of any extramundane power.

*The trifling inaccuracies may be corrected as follows: The Friend's Review refused to publish an advertising notice, not "the lecture"; Thomas Kimber, not "Kimball;" and John G. Whittier cordially and entirely approves the essay, not "partly," as do most of the best thinkers of the Society.

*In the last INDEX, just received, we notice that Dr. Bartol mentions it as one of the "signs of the times" in the essay he read before the Free Religious Association. Not having been able to attend that session, the passing mention in THE INDEX gives all the information we are possessed of, as to the doctor's views or what he said upon this subject.

Yet one point more. Modern philosophers, moralists, and even preachers are growing more and more unanimous in the opinion, and more and more emphatic in the assertion, that the perfect man—we suppose they use man generically, to include both male and female—will be, among other things, a being of strong passions, subject, of course, to the control of a strong will. And they imply—or, whether they imply it or not, the implication is there—that strong passions justify an equivalent indulgence. "Subject to the control of a strong will" means, of course, indulgence in conformity with the requirements of morality. But, again, it must be remembered that the "strong passions" have to be taken into account as essential factors in working out the equation of the morality of the future. Already the old idea of the intrinsic virtue of virginity, in and for itself, as contrasted with the imperfect purity of the married state, is completely dead; and, doubtless, the whole body of the Christian world would consider it monstrous to require any man to make of himself, literally, "an eunuch for the kingdom of heaven's sake," blind to the fact that it compels thousands to make themselves, metaphorically, eunuchs for its defective morality's sake. It is matter of common remark that, for many and various reasons, some good, some bad, men are every day becoming less inclined to contract the matrimonial relations now in vogue. And if it be said that no pity need be wasted on the fact of their celibacy, as they have the remedy at any time within their reach (which is not, however, the whole truth), at least this reply cannot be urged against the objection that the present code of morality deprives thousands of women of the enjoyment of what seems to us undoubtedly a natural right.* There may be some women who will feel it a point of honor to aver (we have seen some such statement somewhere) that, in an experience of upwards of half a century of voluntary celibacy, they have never suffered from any sense of deprivation. Without making any invidious insinuations regarding the present or past generations, seeing that we are treating solely of the future, our sufficient reply is that, when the perfect man is come, no such abnormal organism will be possible. If, then, we are correct in our interpretation of the tendency of moral speculation, the future will look upon our present notions of morality on this point as being not perceptibly different from what we regard the unreasonable depreciation by antiquity of the honorableness of lawful wedlock.

A variety of considerations might be adduced to illustrate and corroborate the conclusion here shadowed forth. Others may be glad to contribute towards this end, or to rebut the views here advanced. To any well-considered communication your columns, doubtless, would be open. We must limit ourselves to stating in definite form the conclusion to which the foregoing considerations lead us, which is: That, according to our reading of the indications which present currents of thought and feeling afford regarding the sexual morality of the future, much greater freedom than is now tolerated will be regarded as just and proper—freedom, however, which shall in no single instance degenerate into license, but in every case preserve a reverent loyalty to the laws of a higher, shall we say a perfect, morality.

Finally, the writer desires to state that the change in moral sentiment and practice which in his opinion present symptoms indicate as likely to occur in the future, he does not regard with any enthusiasm, nor, on the other hand, does he spend over it any fruitless regrets. His creed is not the "What will be, will be' of the fatalist, although some may be unable to distinguish it from this, but the growth and development (necessary and inevitable, indeed, in the sense of the necessary sequence of cause and effect) of already existent principles—the blossom of every to-morrow being but the unfolded bud of each to-day. Although he believes that each new evolution of morals is an advance on the former, and that, therefore, the state of society he discerns, if he discern aright and that state come to pass, will help on the welfare and progress of humanity; for himself, should it come to pass in his day, he has no desire, nor does he anticipate he ever will have a desire, to avail himself of the larger liberty it will allow. And believing, as he does, that a premature birth is closely allied to an abortion, assuredly he does not seek to advocate the adoption of this change now. He merely calls attention to what he regards as an impending event; and, in doing so, he trusts every candid reader will see that he is neither more nor less moral, although certainly less reliable, than the astronomer in predicting an eclipse of the sun. ZERO.

*A paper has just come to hand in which I find the statement that, in England alone, there are, in round numbers, three millions and a half of unmarried women. In proportion to the population, the case is known to be somewhat similar in New England.

[That the marriage institution may be greatly modified hereafter, is to be admitted without much debate; but that it will ever be "evolved" out of existence, we for one do not believe.—ED.]

REFLECTIONS AT LARGE.

When we listen to the speeches or read the reports of political, religious, or medical meetings, we find that a great deal of time is wasted. Politicians tell us what they are going to do for the welfare of the greatest number, and think of "number one;" they depreciate and vilify other parties, when they would occupy their time better by explaining their own principles.

Theologians quibble about another world, or a heaven and hell, and neglect the reality—this life. The members of that sect which has the most diluted form of Christian dogmatism have their Christianity so much attenuated that they needed a long discussion and a multitude of resolutions to settle the question whether a man who honestly avows that he is not a Christian belongs to their Association, or not. Every one of them tries to manufacture his own form of Christianity. If we should receive a really honest avowal of thought from all Christian ministers, as to whether they believe in the "divine Christ" or in the "Lord and Master Jesus," we think there would be only a small number who could consistently profess that faith. How many would accept and agree with Jesus, if he should be the editor of a religious paper, or come to the Anniversary meetings? Some would try to "maintain liberal Christianity," others Orthodoxy, etc., etc., etc.

In medical meetings we find often that those who assume the most are considered the prominent members. They relate great cures, and cannot cure themselves. Just as we have a great many religious discussions among theologians without religion, we have among medical men discussions concerning systems, yet without system. Can any one of those physicians who relate their great cure-stories state upon honor that he either ever cured, or never cured, a single patient?

Schiller must have been impressed by observing royalty, aristocracy, the honorables, D.D.'s, LL.D.'s, and M.D.'s, when he wrote:—

> "It is dangerous to awake the lion;
> Destructive is the tiger's tooth;
> But the most horrid of all horrors—
> That is a man in his conceit!"

The most prominent among the lawyers are those who can turn and twist the law to the best advantage of their own selfish ends. The so-called great men among theologians are those who mystify religion, or dilute it the most. Shining lights in the medical profession tell us, post festum or post mortem, how the cure would have been made, if they had been called; or how they performed the cure, when the patient happens to recover. But if they have the same disease and cannot cure themselves, their disease is then as extraordinary, complicated, and uncurable as their own speculations!

Suppose we could reanimate the good and true men who are gone, and they should become editors of Christian or of radical papers, is it not likely that the first opposition to their earnest and honest endeavors would come from those who now worship or eulogize them? Allow me to point out one living example: that is the earnest and honest INDEX. With due credit to both editors and to the various contributors, we challenge any man or woman to name a journal so free and candid as THE INDEX. But we cannot help expressing our surprise that the force of such logical reasonings as those of Mr. Abbot should be so little felt.

Mr. Higginson, whom we consider an able and true friend and a faithful laborer in the radical cause, is reported to have said: "He thought the dispute between the Christian and anti-Christian was concerning the cradle in which both were born. What to do with the cradle? Mr. Calthrop wanted to stay in the cradle. Mr. Abbot wanted to smash it. Anyone who has really outgrown Christianity is incorrectly termed an anti-Christian."

Neither Mr. Abbot nor any one who comprehends his situation outside of Christianity has a desire to smash the cradle; we all acknowledge the good which historical religions have done; but we are Protestants, and our reason compels us to protest against everything, whether it comes from THE INDEX, Bethlehem, or Rome, which interferes with the development of universal liberty. We respect all who sincerely believe in one or the other form of religion; but many of those who claim to be religious teachers do not seem to care so much for the cradle as they do for the pap! Even many excellent scholars and free men, governors, presidents, and professors of colleges, who should crave more manly food, are not entirely weaned.

Dr. C. A. Bartol makes by the side of splendid remarks the following: "I cannot flatter the radical literature with any great accomplishment. The new theology has not arisen yet out of the 'Fifty Affirmations,' 'Impeachments,' 'Liberal Leagues,' or excluding God and Christ from the Constitution." When Jesus preached his Sermon on the Mount, and when Luther's theses were nailed on the church-door at Wittenberg, new and better theologies began to be developed. If all those able gentlemen should work together at creating it, the hints given in Abbot's "Fifty Affirmations" and in the "Impeachment of Christianity" will help a great deal to develop a theology in harmony with science and liberty, and (most beautiful of all beautiful things) a firm and reasoned belief in an unselfish Deity. Let us promote, in accordance with the will of a Father of love, the best welfare of all his children, humanity. That is the "breadth" of the opinions represented in THE INDEX, and all the faith and "beauty" we need "beyond the bald, bare prose of logic and life." It is futile to say or suppose that we would or could "exclude God and Christ from the Constitution:" that beautiful compact is the will of our Creator expressed by his best creation, the human mind, and the good teachings of Jesus had their influence in it. But the vilest and silliest attempt is to put the names into the Constitution. Are the priests of this country and their helpers so deluded as to think that God and Jesus need advertising? Are they believers in an omnipresent, impartial God? You may speculate within the realms of speculation; but refrain, for your own sake, from speculating with the highest, the best, which the human soul can approach by faith only!

Can we call it a real land of liberty, as long as we tax women without representation, and suffer church influences to be represented without taxation? Was it the purpose of the tea-party to spill or to drink the tea? CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N.H., June 15, 1874.

DISTRIBUTING TRACTS.

I had been to a conference; had heard various ministers and professional persons relate their experience connected with the distribution of tracts; had listened with a beating heart to incidents of conversion resulting from a tract given to the right person,—dropped by the wayside, picked up by drunken men, or read by lost and erring street-boys; had listened to various missionary reports of heathen paddling their own canoes up forty miles of rapids to obtain one tract; had read for myself the statistics showing how millions of pages had been circulated on the coast of Africa, in the interior of Mexico, and from hut to hut of the Esquimaux; read incidents of a timely tract getting into some gambler's pocket and converting him; of tracts thrown carelessly into a billiard-hall or hotel, read and pondered by the proprietors of said establishments, resulting at length in the burning of bar and billiards, and the erection of a chapel.

My heart burned within me, and I decided to buy a large package of tracts monthly, and spend every spare moment in distributing them. Accordingly, I obtained a few choice ones before reaching Boston, that I might be all ready for business when in the city. With a beating heart and many a philanthropic emotion I walked to North End, determined to make my first mark in the tract line where it should be felt, all the way feeling very benevolent and looking for an opportunity. At length one presented itself—a small, ragged, mean-looking little boy standing on the crossing. I reached out my hand to him, saying, "My good little fellow, would not you like a tract?" With (as I thought) a timid, manly step, he walked up and took it. Presently half a dozen more ragged, mean little fellows came up to me, saying, "Please give us a tract, marm?" O, how this appreciation fully paid me for all my expense and long walk! I gave them all I had, smiling sweetly on them, and wishing I had possessed another bunch for the next group I should meet.

I passed on. O how the tears stood in my eyes as there came to me visions of a future, when, in some foreign port, there would step up to me a tall, noble-looking young man, and ask, falling on his knees before me, "Are not you the lady who twenty years ago gave a tract to a poor little street-boy in Boston?" "Yes, sir." "Well, marm, I have been searching for you ever since, that I might tell you how that little tract was the means of my enlightenment." Or perhaps I should read over a list of missionaries about to sail for parts unknown, venturing all, and leaving friends and native land, who, when boys, wandering in the foul streets of an Eastern city, homeless and destitute, were noticed by a lady who had in her hand some tracts which she distributed among them, and how they had been the means of their conversion, every one of them, and now these men were about to depart on the next steamer with boxes and bales of said tracts to distribute among—"Halloo, Miss! halloo, Miss! look here! look here!" This interrupted my musings, and, turning quietly around to see if I had dropped something, what was my horror to behold all those filthy, saucy rascals tearing my tracts all to bits, and sending the fragments in every direction, thus distributing them without mercy, dancing and shouting at the top of their voices, and enjoying the fun at my sad expense.

Never shall I forget my feelings when, beating a hasty retreat around the first corner, I left behind me those horrid boys and my first attempt at distributing tracts. How my dreams of future fame faded in thin air, and the tall, handsome young men turned back into nothing but those fearful Irish boys. I suppose the American Tract Society will number those tracts among the thousands distributed yearly, and benevolent people will continue to recount instances of thrilling moments; but I have settled down to quiet life. And whenever I see a tract, there come to me visions of those torn leaves fluttering in the air and buried in the mud that memorable day in early spring. And when I hear men or women boasting of the number of tracts they have disposed of, I recall those red-faced Irish boys and my own private experience. I, too, have distributed tracts.—Boston Transcript.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c	per	line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.
Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per vol	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
J. SEDGEBEER, Painesville, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HAVE WE

TWO BRAINS?
Dr. C. E. Brown-Séquard.
IS ALCOHOL A POISON?
Dr. Wm. A. Hammond.
THE POET LONGFELLOW.
James T. Fields.
U. S. SURVEY OF THE WEST.
(With Map.) Under Lieut. G. M. Wheeler.
THE HORSE IN AMERICA.
(Illust'd.) Discoveries by Prof. O. C. Marsh.
SAFETY AT SEA.
(Illust'd.) IRON STEAMERS THAT WILL NOT SINK.

These interesting Lectures and Letters, with a careful report of the important papers read at the April meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and at the May meeting of the American Oriental Society at Boston, are published in full in THE TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 19. Price, in sheet form, 10 cents; in pamphlet, 20 cents; or seven for $1.

Circulars, giving full details of the contents of all THE TRIBUNE EXTRAS, free by mail.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE,
THE FARMER'S FAVORITE PAPER,
until January 1, 1875, for $1.

Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1873.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1873 (Volume 4) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

POPULAR COLLECTIONS OF
ORGAN MUSIC!
FOR PIPE ORGANS.

Organ Gems.	Davenport.	$2.50
Batiste's Organ Voluntaries.		2.50
50 Pieces for Organ.	Batiste.	2.50
Clarke's Short Voluntaries.		1.50
Organist's Portfolio.	Rimbault. 2 Vols., each	3.00
Hile's Short Voluntaries.	9 Nos., each	.50
Zeuner's Voluntaries.	Complete.	3.00
250 Easy Voluntaries.	Zundel.	2.00

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK NEARLY READY.

FOR REED ORGANS.

Organ at Home.	2.50
Recreations for Cabinet (Reed) Organs.	1.50
Clarke's Short Voluntaries.	1.50
Clarke's Reed Organ Companion.	2.00

Fine collections of Pieces, Songs, and Tunes may also be found in Emerson's New Method, Clarke's New Method, and in Root's School for Cabinet Organs.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK.—IN AUGUST.

Either of the above books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1874. WHOLE NO. 236.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

"CHRISTIANITY is Christlikeness." This is a definition contributed by the Christian Union.

THE ENGLISH Punch assumes for itself a classical character in the funny literature of the times. In the issue of June 6, it speaks of itself as—

> "Punch, England's Socrates, so grave and gay,
> Teaches the world wise laughter,
> Whose happy echoes will be heard hereafter."

THERE is an old lady in Boston, in her one hundredth year, who lives on Chambers Street in a house which she has inhabited and owned for seventy years. Another tenement, adjoining hers, and which she also owns, she has rented to the same occupants for seventy years in succession.

MR. S. H. MORSE has finished his large bust of Theodore Parker, and is holding it (in plaster cast) on exhibition at his rooms, 25 Bromfield Street, during this week. The success which attended the artist in his moulding of the smaller bust of Mr. Parker, in greater degree has crowned his efforts with this larger one.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH has a column in his National Reformer headed, "To Correspondents." In this column, in the issue of May 17, we find the following sententious paragraph: "One anonymous Christian threatens us with personal violence. We advise him, for his own sake, not to try,—unless, indeed, he is taller and stronger than we are."

C. P. CRANCH has a fine poem in the Independent of June 25, on "The Old South Meeting-House," the last few lines of which are as follows:—

> "Ah, let us hope some generous hands may save
> The proud old building from its grave;
> Some nobler faith beat back the encroaching creed
> Whose central law is Self, whose god is Greed!"

WE HAVE received copies of two sermons—one entitled A Plea for the Human Element in Religion, by Rev. George Batchelor of Salem, Mass.; and the other, Piety and Morality, by Rev. W. T. Clarke of New York,—for which we return our thanks to the authors. Both discourses are very interesting, full of vigorous thought and fresh ideas.

THE SPECTATOR is the name of a little folio paper which comes to us from Worcester, Mass. It "is published occasionally" by John Francis Smith. Among its editorial spice it says that "there is no place in popular esteem for a man who has a conscience." We hope that it will be proven both that Mr. Smith has a conscience, and that his little Spectator will secure a place in the popular esteem.

MR. SPURGEON thinks that "God must change before he will let a sinner perish, who trusts in Christ." But how will it be with one who trusts in Buddha, or Mahomet, or Confucius? To our benighted mind a sinner is a sinner, and a saint a saint, no matter whom he trusts in. Is it possible that God thinks any more of a Christian sinner than he does of a Buddhist, a Mohammedan, or a Chinese? If he does, then we should say he needs to "change."

A CORRESPONDENT writing to us says: "As for religion, I have none, and don't want any; but I have faith in the goodness and justice of God." Well, for the want of any better, we should say that this faith in God might pass very well for a religion for our friend. It is a pretty good faith to have, on the whole, if one can hold on to it in reason. Without some such confidence in God, or Nature, or the integrity of the universe itself, the bottom would seem to fall out of things pretty generally.

THE POPE has long been called Pius, but it appears now that he is also benevolent. During his late severe illness, "when he was too ill to rise," says the Catholic Review, "he remembered the afflictions of the lunatics in the Roman asylum, and sent them a large present of oranges, lemons, and other fruits, from the gardens of the Vatican, as well as a quantity of bright flowers." Kind old man! It is "by their fruits ye shall know them;" and, among his others, let us remember these oranges and lemons of the venerable Pio Nono.

THE GROVE-MEETING, or Picnic, of the Second Radical Club, at Waltham, last Sunday, was a very successful and enjoyable affair. The weather was propitious, the Charles River never more gentle and beautiful, the Picnic grounds were delightful, and the members of the Club very jolly and happy. No accident occurred to teach us that it was wicked to have a Picnic on Sunday, and every one seemed to be on good terms with the universe. General Banks, from Waltham, dropped quietly in on the scene; and, when speaking-time came, he said enough to show that he had a cordial and friendly feeling towards the occasion and its participants.

THE Brooklyn Argus (which, by the way, is a most spicy and readable daily) says that "Charles Sumner never relished a joke." The Argus is mistaken. A friend of ours, who is an inveterate and irresistible joker, once related to us how, in Mr. Sumner's own house in Washington, he "tried a joke" on the Senator, who received it with the most hearty and sympathetic laughter; and, moreover, replied to it in the same vein. We are glad to be able, of our own knowledge, to correct the Argus in this statement; as, otherwise, we confess, our admiration for Mr. Sumner would be modified somewhat. We are afraid and distrustful of that man who has no sense of humor in him; in other words, who "never relishes a joke."

THE Christian Union is the most rational and sensible Orthodox paper that we know anything about. It is as liberal as any Christian might desire, and often comes very near to being as free-religious as any one could wish. In its issue of June 24, the editorial leader is on "A Great Heresy." It says: "There is one form of error so fatal, so persistent, so wide-spread, that it fairly may be called the great heresy. Its essence is this: Men regard religion as in some way a substitute for right living, instead of the highest form of right living." And after enlarging upon what it calls true religion, it says: "True religion, in a word, brings transcendent motives, and appeals to the noblest capacities and highest energies of human nature, all centering in this: that men are set upon the most earnest effort towards goodness."

THE RECENT death of Rev. Charles Lowe, of Somerville, has filled the hearts of his friends—and they were many—with very deep sorrow. It was our privilege to have known Mr. Lowe, with some degree of intimacy, for several years. While he was serving his long term as Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, we were a member of its Board of Directors for two years, and had frequent occasions of meeting him and testing the gentleness, courtesy, and nobility of his nature. Though of decidedly conservative convictions, he was most broad, generous, and liberal in his spirit—always, as an officer of the Association, in practical matters, disposed to go far in toleration of the radicals of his denomination. His demeanor towards us, in this respect, we shall always remember with the most appreciative consideration. We ever found him an eminently true and sincere man, and as open and frank as the day. In spirit and character, as well as in faithful and valuable service, he was one of the brightest ornaments and most useful members of the Unitarian denomination in America.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

Why go to Church?

A SERMON IN LYRIC HALL, NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 8, 1874.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

I propose to discuss the claims of our Sunday services on intelligent people who are outside of the sects. That the discussion may have interest and point, let us begin it by putting and meeting the plain question: Why should such people attend them? Why go to church? To technical Christians such a question would have no meaning, would be pertinent to nothing. Why go to church! the Catholic would say. Because the Church is the ordained means of salvation; a divine institution, planted and inspired in order that human beings may be rescued from the "Prince of the World" and brought into the household of God. Going to church is entering the gate to heaven. Who would not go? Who but reckless, abandoned people refuse or neglect to go? The altar of sacrifice, the blessed sacraments, the rites and ordinances filled with healing virtue, the priests endowed with reconciling powers, are altogether a gracious arrangement devised by Heaven for the benefit of fallen man, which none but fools will turn away from. Why go to church! exclaims the Protestant. Because it is the place where the gospel is preached to sinful, dying men; the gospel of redemption—the only gospel by which we are saved. "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. But how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" So it is written. To support the preaching of the gospel is a duty laid down in the Bible, which we dare not neglect if we would. It is not for us to pass judgment on the gospel, but to welcome it. The message is for our benefit; the terms of acceptance are simple. It better becomes beneficiaries such as we are to take gratefully what is offered them, than to turn sulkily away because the boon might have been presented in a shape more attractive to their carnal reason.

To those who reason thus I have nothing here to say.

But the people whom I have in mind reason differently. If they go to church it is because it is the custom, or because it is social, or because they see their friends there, or because the preacher is eloquent, or because they find a commercial interest in it; or, perhaps, because they have nothing better to do. It is easier for them to tell why they do not go. They do not go because the Church is to them a human institution like any other, which is good to them that find it useful; because the preaching of the gospel is not, in their view, necessary to salvation; because they discredit the gospel itself; because the question of salvation in another world, from flames of hell, does not interest them; because they do not believe in future perdition, perhaps do not believe in any future after death; because what is called religion has dropped out of their list of practical concerns. The ceremonies seem to them idle; the sermons dull; the devotional exercises unmeaning. The priest has but the ghost of a function; the preacher but the shadow of an authority; the pastor but the tradition of an office. With sacraments and a creed, the Church, they say, stands for something to those who revere the sacrament and accept the creed; but to those who do neither it is a simulacrum, a spectre, a ghost of things departed, the reminiscence of a tradition.

This is the state of mind I would address; not with remonstrance, certainly, or rebuke, or pleading, or appeal, but with a quiet statement of reasons in justification of the religious service we continue.

The aim of our religious service, let me say in a word, is to stimulate the mind and move the feelings in the direction of ideal—that is, of intellectual as distinguished from sensible—things. It is a means of culture; its function is that of art; it belongs to those agencies by which men and women are refined in sentiment and desire. For this purpose it employs means which immemorial usage has adopted, and universal experience has decided to be best adapted to the object in view.

The first is music. Religion in every age of mankind, among all races of mankind, has employed music as a means of expressing and arousing emotion; and for very good reasons. Music is the full voice of the human cry in its every mood and modulation; the cry of penitence, sadness, bitterness, complaint; the cry of longing, aspiration, petition; the cry of thanksgiving, praise, joy; the cry for pardon, the cry for rest. It voices them all, and voices them perfectly; for it commands all instruments; it touches all keys; it has control of all styles of composition. Music, moreover, not being concerned with relations between local, accidental, or visible objects, not being associated with living forms, but being incorporeal, as it were, is completely adapted to express floating sentiments, bodiless, dreamy emotions, unlimited desires, hopes and aspirations that reach out into boundless spheres,—the airy, nameless feelings which we call spiritual. It is this peculiarity that makes music a universal voice, of no tribe or sect; simply human. Hence religion, which also is universal and human, has adopted it, and has done more for its development as an art than everything else has done. Religion has called into existence the noblest of instruments, the organ; and has created the grandest of compositions—the mass, the oratorio, the symphony. There have been times when religion almost monopolized music, and there have been epochs of history when music was more effectual than any other means in rousing the religious sense. The Romish Church is as eminent for its musical as for its architectural creations. Its masters in composition are famous over the world for their expressive harmonies. The Protestant faith, through its immortal artists, beginning with Bach and Handel, has laid the modern mind under a spell of music more powerful than its strange spell of doctrine. Luther's songs were as potent as his sermons. In fact, it is difficult to think of religion without music, as it is difficult to think of music wholly apart from some phase of religion. For this reason we also cultivate music: the music of the organ and the trained choir; not begrudging its cost, but wishing we could afford to make it nobler than it is,—more rich, various, and pure; more worthy of its beautiful office of expressing and stimulating the finest human feeling. In the religious services of the future music will hold the same place it has held in the past; its expression will change as the new faith becomes clear and articulate; it will utter new emotions; it will touch new chords; it will catch the glow of a new spirit; but its office will be no less prominent, and its influence no less mighty on the heart.

Another means of performing our task is the reading of Scriptures, which contain the antique wisdom of the race; not the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures only, but the Scriptures of old Asia, India, Egypt, China; of Persian sages and Greek bards, whose voices utter the solemn convictions of their ages and peoples. Time has sanctified these deep words; centuries have polished and set them; they are round and smooth as stones which the eternal ocean has wrought into perfect shapes on the sandy beaches. Sentences as wise and weighty might be collected from modern writers: from Shakspeare, Bacon, Goethe, Emerson. But the best of these are chaste and venerable; all associations with personal weakness, with infirmities of character and accidents of fortune have been rubbed out; they bear no private mark of individual, of age, or of nation, but are interchangeable all over the world. To read them calls up the thinking, feeling, hoping, suffering, aspiring generations, gives a strong background to our trembling thought, fortifies with the attestation of departed centuries the attempts we make to steady our minds amid the currents of speculation and emotion.

A third agency we employ is prayer. This also is universal and of universal significance. There is no religion without prayer. Religion without prayer is inconceivable. To prayer we restore its original meaning; for prayer is the heart's desire for unattained, and by ordinary means unattainable, good; it is hunger and thirst for divine things. Of course no one is to suppose that we employ it as religious people in general do—as a means of propitiating higher powers, of obtaining favors from a divine being, of establishing private relations with a patron deity—no such thought enters our mind. We offer no petition; we supplicate for no boon, not even a spiritual one; we address ourselves to no person who dwells in another sphere, and we expect nothing in return for our act—not so much as an ethereal influence shed upon our minds. The desire is its own satisfaction, the petition its own answer.

Prayer, with us, is the breathing forth of an emotion of longing for heavenly gifts. It is a conscious entertainment of such longing; a declaration of it when it exists; an uttered wish for it when it does not exist. It is a deliberate effort to call up and hold in view, for an instant, as supremely desirable and beautiful, qualities of goodness, nobility, purity, loveliness, which are remote from our daily experience; which we do not possess—doubt, perhaps, whether we ever shall possess—despair, possibly, of ever possessing; can only dream of, admire, long for; but which, nevertheless, seem to us sweetly and gloriously human—the mere occasional thought whereof gladdens, elevates, and consoles.

Certainly there is nothing approaching superstition in this. The act may be genuine and sincere—as much so as the admiration of ideal characters, as the study of perfect forms in art. There is nothing fanciful in it, nothing empty or idle. It has a use, and a real one—may I not say an important one? For, surely it is important that people should keep before them, as objects of supreme and even passionate desire, the best they know, feel, or can think of; and should, by conscious preparation and endeavor, lift themselves up to its presence.

The object of our public prayer is to do for a number of people what each one should do for himself, but which few, probably, are in the habit of doing. It was wittily said of a divine of the last generation, who had remarkable gifts in this exercise, that his prayers were the most eloquent that were ever addressed to a Boston congregation. This was meant in satire, but it might have been accepted as praise. For the prayer, as a spoken address, is in very simple truth designed to take effect on the congregation, and has no reference to any person outside of it. Its intention is to lift as many as possible, as many as may be susceptible, into a region of pure, holy, serene thought; to detain them there for a few moments; to make the vision of divine things so vivid and fascinating that they will long to possess them; will receive on their hearts a fresh impression of their beauty; will peradventure be induced to cultivate and make them their own. That this is often successfully done, that it is ever perfectly done, that it is ever done for more than a small portion of any congregation, may be doubted. But that is not a good reason why it should not be attempted; why the few who can enter into it fully should not have the opportunity; why the opportunity should not be given to others, who may feel the power of it if they never have yet. I know that some, perhaps many, would miss it were it omitted. I believe that the omission of it would be generally felt to be of a kind that let down the whole exercise of the Sunday; took the glory, the poetic beauty and glow from it, and left only prosaic elements. With it the spiritual—by which I mean the finest intellectual feature of it—would depart. The exercise may be very inadequately performed; but even so, it is better than if it were not performed at all.

To come now to the sermon. The general aim of this is precisely the same as of the other parts; that is to say, it is the transport of minds to higher regions of thought. But here the agency is directly intellectual. The sermon is addressed, not to the emotions or sentiments, but to the understanding. Your preacher does not claim to be a scientific instructor, or a master in speculative philosophy. He does not, like the Romish priest or the Protestant divine, arrogate a special inspiration by virtue of ordination or consecration through the imposition of hands. He is the apostle of no revelation, he announces no gospel of redemption, he brings no message of deliverance. He asserts for himself no divine commission, he asks for his word no authority, he affects to possess no peculiar knowledge or wisdom above other men, he puts on no airs of superiority by virtue of his position. He concedes to the editor, the lecturer, the platform speaker, the scientific professor his utmost of due. The only office he claims to discharge is that of stimulator of the highest intellect. He is the priest of ideas, the minister of intelligence, the mouth-piece of immaterial mind. The sole title to respect or consideration is his fidelity in discharging this fine function—the right to discharge which is forfeited by theological dogmatism, as well as by an undue interest in other matters that are out of his sphere.

To him it seems that there are subjects which people cannot afford to forget; which they need to hold in earnest remembrance, and require to have presented to them statedly, for the reason that their ordinary daily life tends to keep them out of mind. Modern existence has to be to such an extent devoted to business, politics, society, that the aspects which are not palpably visible are concealed, and the very worth of them is doubted. Material uses make such demand on the intellect that no other uses are thought of. The intellect comes to be regarded as an instrument of material uses, and its ideal faculties of reflection, contemplation, meditation, insight into truth, fall into neglect and are discredited.

The subjects I allude to are not theological, not technically Christian, not professional in the usual sense. I have not in mind Trinity, deity of Christ, atonement, man fallen and redeemed, the misery of the present or the felicity of the future state. I am not thinking of the articles of faith in their attenuated form; not of the sanctity of the Scriptures, the character of Jesus, the excellences of Christianity, the importance of minding the soul's concerns, the mystery and awfulness of the life immortal. My thought is fixed on themes of more universal interest, that should be engaging to people who have detached themselves from personal associations with all organized and instituted faith. The purely human relations which men sustain to each other by virtue of their human nature, the qualities implied in these relations, the duties comprised in them, the social changes they involve, the ties they weave, the responsibilities they impose, are matters with which it is his province to deal. The capacities and possibilities of man, the reach of his hopes, the range of his desires, the worth of his attributes, the weight of his will, the conditions of his expansion and elevation, come within the scope of his treatment. The significance of the ancient words God, Immortality, Life, Death, it is for him to measure and announce. All that is conveyed in the terms worship, adoration, reverence, piety—terms as old as humanity, and as new as the last-coined phrase,—he makes it his duty to estimate. Man's effort to perfect himself, the longing of the finite mind to communicate with the Infinite mind, with the hundred matters of interest that follow from it—this concerns him primarily, as it concerns also every reflecting person. Topics like these do not fall within the consideration of other teachers. The man of science has nothing to do with them; the philosopher deals with them abstractly. The man of letters avoids them as unsuited to his ends; the journalist is occupied with problems of less permanent interest. It is the preacher's office to bring them directly before the people as questions of vital concernment; to illustrate their import, and apply their lessons to the needs and occupations of the hour.

Does any one say that such questions as these have had their day? that their significance has left them? that they are merely relics of by-gone, obsolete speculation, curious enough to the antiquarians of opinion, but mere time and brain wasters for the people of to-day? To such it must be replied that, in point of fact, they still exercise a vast sway over human kind; occupy thoughts to a wonderful extent; and are to most people the most fascinating and absorbing questions presented to them. The misfortune is, that they dwell most on them who are the least able to grapple with them. Ignorance and credulity make them the covert of their superstitions; while intelligence, disgusted, avoids them and turns away to matters of more pressing material moment. But it is here, precisely, that the power of intelligence needs to be felt. It is nothing less than a shame that subjects which are really of most deep import to the bright and active-minded should be given over to the irrational. Can we afford to live thoughtless of the capacities and relations which remove us furthest from the lower orders of creatures, and alone dignify and exalt our humanity? If what is called science had gone so far as to refute all beliefs respecting a spiritual nature in man, there would still remain considerations touching his higher personal and social culture that cannot be overlooked. Sweep the theological conception of man away—you still have left the rational conception, which is exceedingly noble, and may well employ the noblest minds in its contemplation. Drop, as vain and unprofitable speculation, the notion of personal relation between a man and the infinite God. The notion of a personal relation between a man and the other members of his kind, above him and below him, is neither vain nor unprofitable. It is most intensely real, and cannot be lost from view without great harm to the whole mental and moral being.

And while the preacher has themes that may be regarded as peculiarly his own—seeing that their discussion devolves on him as on no others—he also has a method of approaching truth which, though by no means exclusively his own, is characteristic of him as a teacher; and this method consists in approaching subjects from within and above—say, rather, from the centre—in distinction from those who approach them from the circumference. Let me try to explain clearly what I mean. Ours is called a scientific age, an age of fact, as opposed to a speculative age—an age of fancy. Give us facts, is the cry—things as they are. But what are facts by themselves—separate, disjoined, unrelated, unarranged by thought? Make the most generous collection of them, taken from all departments of matter and mind—facts visible and invisible, material and immaterial, facts of sense and facts of feeling, facts of chemistry and facts of consciousness, facts of physics and facts of metaphysics—there they are, an uninstructive, unsuggestive heap until thought touches them. But what thought is it that touches them most finely, interprets them most wisely, marshals them most symmetrically?

There are two ways of setting facts so as to make a mosaic of them that shall tell a story. The first is to range them side by side, without definite plan to start with, feeling the way along, as it were, to their natural combinations, and trusting that in time, when enough of them have been collected, an intelligible and harmonious piece of work will appear. The other is to begin with a plan, or at least with an idea, which is but another word for a plan, and set or arrange the facts according to it. The first is the slow, literal, mechanical way of science; the second is the swift, intellectual way of poetry. Science assumes nothing to begin with, but observes facts as they appear, one by one, grouping them as it goes along, and making statements about them that cover the groups. Poetry assumes to begin with certain ideas of order, beauty, harmony, certain principles as they are called, certain laws as they are called again; and, with these in mind, comes down on the facts with an explanation, and makes them dance to its music. This latter method prevailed for many hundreds of years, to the exclusion of the other, and the effect of it was very strange indeed. For these ideas, as they were termed, were often baseless, fanciful, chimerical, the product of dreamy or crochetty minds, and the wild sport they made of facts is a very curious thing to contemplate; they were shuffled and transfigured in a remarkable manner, and were made to represent figures which were the astonishment of observers. At present the other method is popular. There is a grave distrust of theories, as they are contemptuously called, a severe dislike of assumptions of every kind. The mere word "insight" is dreaded; and people who talk about laws and principles are shunned by the devotees of knowledge.

Yet nothing is truer than that neither of these methods is sufficient without the other. In the attempt to arrive at truth, deduction is as important as induction; the interpretation of facts by the light of principles is as useful as the observation of facts by careful scrutiny. Some of the most remarkable discoveries in experimental science, astronomy, chemistry, botany, have been due to this method purely, as everybody knows who has read the story of Newton's superb generalization respecting the law of attraction, or Hauy's exquisite discovery of the law of crystals, or Goethe's marvellous glance into the transformation of plants; and if space permitted me here to tell one of these beautiful stories, or any one of the many stories of a similar kind which are found in the records of science, I could persuade you that this power of insight, this power to draw swift inferences, to dart lightning glances into the secrets of things, to leap, as it were, with steps light as gossamer, along the unseen paths of the creative mind, to detect clues by the sympathetic appreciation of the forefeeling reason, had played no mean part in the history of discovery. And I think you would be persuaded that this faculty had no mean part yet to play. Exclude ideas, sentiments, intuitions, prophecies of the imagination, the previsions of faith, from the domain of truth, and you leave the domain desolate indeed. The effect would be the same as if you were to exclude poetry from literature, or were to reduce art to the function of map-drawing and chart-making. You would simply take the glory, yes the inspiration, out of the world; and with the glory and inspiration the impulse and the joy of movement, the charm of progress, the spring of hope, the winged bound of enthusiasm.

Now this method of the poet, which accomplishes such beautiful results, which achieves such wonderful triumphs of discovery, which illumines so finely the obscure regions where knowledge has neither eyes to see nor feet to tread,—this method of intuition, of insight, is also that of the preacher and teacher of religion. He follows the poetic laws; he is in his way a poet, not in the sense of being a maker of verses, but in the sense of being a seer, an interpreter, a discerner of subtle analogies, a "reader between the lines" of the divine manuscript of being. He starts with a few primary assumptions or first principles; faith in order, law, harmony, beauty, faith in causes, in the persistency and purpose and final intentions of things, faith in the eternal wisdom and goodness, faith in creative, ruling, and presiding love; and these leading assumptions he brings to bear and applies on all occasions and to all subjects whatsoever; doing his best to justify his faith to himself and others, and to show how, in accordance with it, the facts of existence become intelligible.

That he does this successfully, in all cases or any case, is not the question; that he does it with any distinguished ability or skill, is not the question. All preachers and teachers of religion are not great, brilliant, or successful; very few are. All poets are not successful, great, or brilliant; very few are. But all preachers and teachers of religion have this office, and try to discharge it, in most cases, with such talent and conscience as are given them. They are usually men who, by the constitution of their minds, are predestined to this calling. Their special studies prepare them for it; the companionship of books, the familiarity with great minds, the commerce with high thoughts, the intercourse with natures of genius like their own, the admiring love of the noblest examples of humanity, all conspire to aid them. They lead quiet, secluded lives, free from the struggles and ambitions of men; in an ideal world, breathing the serene atmosphere of thought. Ungifted, as artists and poets commonly are, as men of business unskilled in the detail of practical affairs, worthless, if you please, for material uses, out of place in the counting-room or the political arena, they are all the better qualified for the discharge of their office as earnest contemplators of the silent principles which preside over human affairs; the laws of justice, the sanctions of truth, the obligations of duty, the demands of love, which even the money-market is bound at last to obey. The success of these men, not their apparent success, perhaps, but their real success, depends on the faithfulness with which they perform this delicate function. If they are not faithful to it, or perform it so badly that their fidelity can in no wise make up for their incapacity, they have no right to a hearing from their fellow-men; it is to the credit of their fellow-men that no hearing is given them, as it is a credit to people not to buy bad pictures or to read poor poems. Their oracles ought to be deserted.

But if they perform their function creditably as well as faithfully, they surely have a claim on the sympathetic attention of thoughtful people. Their office is a legitimate one. Were it abandoned, the community would suffer in its most sensitive part; a check would be given to the higher culture of humanity which it would be impossible, perhaps, to recover from.

I have dwelt so long on this peculiarity of the preacher's function that I have allowed hardly space enough to mention one other feature of his office that should recommend it to people having at heart the nobler welfare of society. As idealists, as believers in unrelated laws and principles, such as I have described them; as worshippers of pure truth, beauty, and goodness,—they cherish splendid visions of future society, and cause them to float constantly before the imaginations of men, kindling their desire, exciting their enthusiasm, and leading them on by hope and aspiration to better and better states. They thus become instigators to noble reforms as well as foreshadowers of them, showing to the toiling pilgrims the New Jerusalem sparkling at a distance across the hot sands, and at the same time beguiling them of the terrible weariness of the way.

This service the Hebrew prophets rendered to their nation, holding up before them, in days of disaster, the image of the coming Messiah; picturing the felicity that would be theirs when they should obey the pure law that had been given to them; should forsake idolatry; should do justly, and love mercy, and walk humbly; should respect one another; should care for the poor and needy, and comfort the afflicted souls, and set their slaves at liberty, and deal honestly with their neighbors, and study peace with all men, and practise the precepts of brotherly kindness which the Lord had made. By doing this the prophets acquired an immense power over their generations—kept them up in the hardest periods of their history, carried them through the worst passages of their experience, increased their independence, steadied their conscience, refined their feelings, softened their hearts, widened their sympathies, educated them in social wisdom and duty, successfully counteracted the influence of kingly and priestly institutions, and kept the national mind active, fluent, and progressive. Their Messiah was a dream, but it was a splendid one. Their New Jerusalem always stayed in the clouds, never came down; their regenerated earth never appeared; their happy human state kept receding before them. But the vision answered its purpose; the heavenly city had foundations in faith; in hope the regenerated earth did exist; and the deathless principles of human kindness still predicted that the perfect human condition would be obtained.

Jesus made vivid and beautiful to his contemporaries the vision of the kingdom of heaven, and laid down the ethics of the Millennium in the Sermon on the Mount; so splendidly he did both, that the vision, even yet, at the distance of nearly two thousand years, inspires and gladdens multitudes of sad-hearted, despairing people; the ethics of the Millennium are read reveringly, in faith, by millions who never think of living up to them, could not live up to them to save their lives, but who, in their heart of hearts, believe that they express profoundest truths.

It is often objected to the Sunday preachers that they are dreamers—that they hope too much, believe too passionately, trust too absolutely, have a wild, fantastical faith in human nature, are flighty enthusiasts for abstract principles, are good architects of castles in the air, not of human dwellings. It is probably true, and is it not to their credit that it should be true? Have not visions their place? Has not dreaming its uses? If the prophecy comes from nobleness, generosity, kindness, love; if it is the anticipation of the single heart, guileless, unselfish, true to its best intuition, is it not good to listen to it and take it home? Though in our time, and in time long subsequent to ours, it may not be fulfilled, may not faith in it hasten the time when it shall be fulfilled? May not the entertainment of it enable honest, plain people to promote the coming of such a time? Will they not be most likely to work for the Kingdom who believe in a Kingdom to be worked for? Will any toil less patiently at laying the long courses of stone, for having the architect's magnificent plan before them? There is abundant testimony to prove that the best practical work is done by those who cherish the highest aspirations.

Thus, in entire frankness, I state my view of the scope and object of our Sunday service. Not my estimate of what it is, but my conception of what it ought to be. That it is something very different from this, and very far short of it; so different and so far short that my conception is never illustrated completely, and often, in the majority of cases, possibly, cannot be recognized at all, is honestly though sorrowfully admitted. And I am more than willing to allow, I am anxious to think, that the prevalent indifference, may I not say the frequent contempt, of thoughtful, earnest people, is due to the failure of the Sunday service to be what it should be. Certainly no institution is spoken of with such familiar disrespect as the pulpit. The minister of religion is perpetually made to feel that he is an official held in very poor esteem; he hears his calling derided; he is himself often insulted to the face by coarse-minded people, who assume that he knows himself the pretender they believe him to be. The Sunday service, as a whole, and in detail, is subjected to a supercilious criticism, the cardinal presumption whereof is that it is only a relic of ancient usage, which lingers on in an age that has no need or use for it, and must, before many years, disappear entirely.

If I should undertake to decide by whose fault things have come to such a pass, I should have to open a long series of considerations which had better, for the present, be left untouched. My purpose in this discourse has been to show that such a state of things has come about through the fault of somebody, that it is an unfortunate and unnatural state of things that ought not to continue, and will not continue when the true state of things is understood: when they who have charge of the Sunday ministry of religion comply with the conditions of their office, and they who sustain them by their presence and sympathy entertain no false expectations, and make no unfair demands. But if the former allow themselves to be narrow and prejudiced and worldly, mistaking dogmatism for inspiration, and sectarian zeal for faith; and if the latter want an opera-singer in the choir, a rhapsodist at the altar, and a low comedian in the pulpit, it is very certain that the Sunday services will fall into contempt, though it may be doubted whether they will fall into such deep contempt as they will deserve. That an institution so fine, of such noble compass and such grand possibility, should lose its significance and sink beyond recovery into the abyss of forgotten things, would be deplorable indeed. For one, I cannot believe that it will. For one, I have faith that a better day is coming, when higher ministries will be required and furnished; when the people shall cry for more than they get now, and ministers shall draw on living fountains for their supply.

RITUALISM.—The annual meeting of the Church Association has just been held. The report states that the Ritualistic movement, which at the outset seemed confined to a mere question of rites and rubrics, has developed into an overt attempt to build up the alien Church of Rome upon the ruins of the Church of England. One by one, nearly every doctrine and ceremony of Popery has been adopted, until it has become almost impossible to distinguish the churches and books under the direction of the Jesuits from those under the control of the Ritualists.—London Graphic.

IN ONE of his political rages, Victor Hugo alludes to a class of Frenchmen whose piety usually takes the form of a prayer to the Virgin to inflict bankruptcy upon the shop over the way.

AUSTIN HOLYOAKE.

BY GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

When my brother Austin Holyoake was born I was a boy ten years old, wondering very much at arriving at that age. I had been for some time acquainted with a soldier who had served in India. A traveller is always fascinating to a youth, and I persuaded my father to take him into his employ, that I might see more of him. His name was Austin Graves. I thought Austin a pretty name. It was associated with stories Graves told me, and I persuaded my mother to give his Christian name to my new brother. The family choice lay in a différent direction. My father was named after King George, and I was named after him, and one of my sisters was named after Queen Caroline. One of my Australian brothers, as we call them, bore the name of Horatio, after Nelson. Royalty and patriotism, as well as piety, had adherents among us. Another brother was named Rowland, after the first politician I came to read of and admire—Rowland Detrosier. At that time news came of his premature death, and the first public subscription I ever joined in was that for Detrosier's family. I believe I pleaded for both names to be given to that brother, and I got my eldest sister to help me, who in her kindness was always ready to side with me; but my mother, whose will prevailed as to names, would not listen to one so outlandish as Detrosier. She was a dear, insular, English soul. My father left names to her, and her decision was final. My brother now dead came to be named Austin after the manner I have stated. It is curious how death brings old things to mind. During the forty-seven years of Austin's life, I never remember telling him this, nor am I aware whether he knew it.

My business connection with my brother—a happy portion of my life with him—extended from 1845, less or more, until 1862. For me to give any adequate idea of what manner of man he was, and with what devotion he promoted public ends, I must say a word about that period, for the only praise that men do not forget is that of facts; certainly acts are the most lasting eulogies of the true.

After the Bristol and Gloucester imprisonments of two of the editors of the Oracle of Reason, we had to carry our printing operations to London; and I invited Austin, then a very young man, to come to London, and subsequently made him a partner with me on the express condition that we never incurred any debt without the knowledge and consent of each other. In those days all our bill-heads bore the name of "Holyoake Brothers," and it was my desire and intention that we should ultimately publish together under that pleasant name. But I took care not to involve my brother in the unknown responsibilities of the Fleet Street House, which I subsequently opened, where all I possessed, or received, or earned, alike was consumed. My brother well knew this, for the £250 given me after the Cowper Street debate, and all subsequent sums, were all paid away, through his hands, in maintaining the Freethought organization there. It seems fair to mention these facts, because they prove the gallant and untiring coöperation he rendered in those unrequiting days. The errors of the affair in Fleet Street were my own. I attempted too much; I promised too much; I trusted too much. Things, however, which we did serviceably together were often as much his suggestion as mine, and the willingness and resource with which he executed whatever belonged to his departments, and the labor he volunteered for public objects, won for him the personal regard of all who sought or accepted the service of that House. When, on one happy morning towards the end of our occupancy, £250 were given me by an unexpected friend, for my personal use, I remember with what honest pride he concurred in its being paid away to such creditors as remained; regardless that it would not leave me anything to divide with him, as would have been his right, had anything remained in my hands. Looking through the window as we spoke, and seeing the largest creditor we had on the opposite side of the street, I gave him £60, and told him to go out and give it to him, which was done in the street, and thus ended that obligation. Often, in after years, my thoughts have recurred to his honest speech of that morning; and when I looked, a few days ago, on his cold and silent face, as he lay in his coffin, the memory of that speech came back afresh, as I thought how many, who believed more than he, had less of his honesty of spirit, which must be the best recommendation to man or to God.

The same course I took with pecuniary I took as respects political responsibility. When we issued Felix Pyat's letters on "Parliament and the People," information was given to the Government that it was my act, and applications for summonses were made against me. The Exchequer writ for publishing unstamped newspapers was issued also against me. It bears my name alone. Rudio took with him to America my cloak, which my brother Austin kept under the counter at hand for six weeks, for me to put on in case of my apprehension, as I had had experience of the discomfort of spending a night insufficiently clad, in the Cheltenham Station House. But though I took care that no one was left liable for my acts, my brother was quite as ready as myself to share any risk of this kind, had it been necessary, and deserves as much credit as though it had fallen to him. Though I deemed it base to do anything for which another might have to answer, my brother never cared for a moment if by any accident of law or rancor he was involved. His courage was undoubted. I always regarded him as capable of anything that ought to be done. His position at the head of the printing department, and representative of me in the publishing, was entirely independent. Whenever I spoke in public about our connection, I always said so, and any honor showed to him was a new pleasure given to me. Long after we were separated, I sent him for publication my high estimate of him, and whenever I wrote of him in public it has been to his honor. I say this to show that it is not his death alone, but his life, that inspires the words of respect and regret I write now. A great merit of his was, that he would do whatever he could to cause Freethought to command influence. He cared for its future credit more than its immediate success. He would work day or night to do, within needful time or with greater taste, something or other we thought useful to issue. I should never have attempted what I did at Fleet Street, had I not been sure of his coöperation; and all I take most pride in of what was done there could never have been accomplished without his aid. It never occurred to him to evade work, nor to ask himself how little he might do of that which outside publicists asked him to help them in; his first thought was how much more could he do, and how much better, if possible, than it was being done. Military or social enterprises were alike to him, if promise of help appeared in them for those who struggled for independence; whether patriots, or women, or slaves. My brother entered into everything within his range, and gave time to everybody. His value and his misfortune was, that he thought more of what he could do than of himself, and so wore himself out by generous exertions before his time; and whatever may be given now in the way proposed since his death, for the benefit of his family, has been over and over again earned by him, in a way that may fairly be recognized rather as an act of justice than of charity.

Parts of his "Sick Room Thoughts," the last thing he wrote, are proof that he had increasing and original power, and, had he reserved to himself more leisure, he had the capacity of doing greater service than he had already rendered. The last time I saw him I told him that opinions we had long ago maintained together were now meeting with admission in quarters where neither he nor I expected to live to see their truth recognized; and I repeated to him that the Bishop of Manchester had recently said that "he did not himself believe that mistakes which did not arise from perversity of the will, but from incapacity of understanding, or it might possibly be from the truth never having been put before the mind very wisely or philosophically—he did not believe that mistakes of a speculative kind, mistakes in doctrine or in dogma, even if they were upon what were sometimes considered vital points, would shut a man out of the Kingdom of God. . . . It was his distinct belief that heaven would be forfeited by no man on account of his theological opinions, unless those opinions had had a mischievous influence upon his conduct, and he had allowed the speculations of his brain to blind and distort the directions of his conscience." My brother had a conscience as pure as any priest's, and needed no external assurance to satisfy him that following conscience was security for self-respect and peace of mind; but I knew he would be glad to hear that prelates took courage, and followed their consciences too, and that the differences between honest men were diminishing day by day. My brother fulfilled the observation of Spinoza, that "a free man thinks of nothing so little as death, and his wisdom is to think of life and not of death." To my mind my brother did not think enough of life. The base care of yourself which leads to refusing stout help to others who need it is certainly to be despised; but some regard to the conditions of a man's own life is reasonable, and even commendable, if he is good for anything. After Death had looked in upon my brother, and given him fair notice of calling again if pretext arose, I could hear of him being two hours in close, hot lecture-rooms at night, and afterwards setting out miles over country in an open vehicle; and later he would be in the chair at an enervating, crowded meeting when he ought to have been in bed. But this was his way. His thoughts were to the end with this world.

The last book I sent to him was Prince Florestan, which I had mentioned to him, and it was the last read to him. His "Sick Room Thoughts" showed that he thought more of theology than I do. In my opinion the time has come when we should give our main strength to superseding error, since it is never destroyed until it is replaced by new truth. But we all know that ignorant Christians think that the truth of opinions is best seen by what a man thinks of them in the face of death. As Miss Cobbe has said, in a generous notice of my brother's death in the Examiner, many Christians imagine that the soundness of their case will be most favorably seen when disease has weakened a man's power of examining it.* My brother did as conspicuous a dying service as man ever rendered, in correcting the impression that Christian error could not be seen to be error in death as plainly as in life. Clear, calm, patient, knowing well that death was waiting near at hand, he shot a bolt, as it were, from the other side the grave, at superstition's strongest popular pretension. He was free of all ostentation; but when a thing had to be done which ought to be done, he had the dash in him which did it. He fulfilled Professor Blackie's prescription of conduct:—

> "Wear your heart not on your sleeve,
> But on just occasion
> Let men know what you believe
> With breezy ventilation."

And he did this with his last breath, when few men think of doing anything.

He will be long and honorably remembered as one of the forces on the side of Freethought progress among the people. I sometimes think that Death, presiding at the great portal through which dead nations have passed, is wearied at times at the monotony of admitting the commonplace crowds, whom ignorance and vice, ambition and baseness, silliness and sin so copiously deliver there—and himself delights to allure noble travellers to his dominions by holding out to them the high temptations of truth, or freedom, or art, or genius, or duty, or service; and thus he makes his kingdom richer as he makes us poorer here.—London National Reformer, May 10, 1874.

*I am told that Dr. Maurice Davies has also written in the London Sun a very fairly-stated account of my brother's burial, and references to his principles.

PAINE HALL AND INVESTIGATOR HOME!

We now have the pleasure to announce to our readers, and to all others interested, that a lot of land has been secured and the first payment on it made, for the much-talked-of Paine Hall and Home for the Investigator. The lot is on Appleton Street, near the junction of Tremont Street, in the immediate vicinity of Parker Memorial Hall, Odd Fellows' Hall, and Berkeley Street Church, and is considered by parties who have been on the premises, and who are our friends, to be a very good location, and the purchase well made.

We shall at once proceed to erect a building of brick, with stone trimmings, of the most durable and solid structure, which will be a standing memorial in coming years to the merits and services of Thomas Paine, the author-hero of the American Revolution, and political and religious reformer; and also be a permanent home for the Boston Investigator, which has so long, earnestly, and devotedly labored to show to the world that the patriot Paine is worthy to be gratefully remembered with other American revolutionary patriots, and that the slanders told of him and repeated with so much zest every year are base fabrications of religious bigots and ignorant fanatics.

We intend to have this Paine Memorial Hall completed by January 29, 1875, and as our funds are not enough at present to pay all the expense of building, we earnestly call on all friends of the cause to come forward with their means to help on the movement. Those who have sent us their names with pledges for stated sums are reminded that we now want the money, and we ask them to send all they have promised at as early a day as possible.

Let us for once take as an example the zeal displayed by our religious opponents in doing business, and every one contribute to the extent of his or her means.

In behalf of the Trustees,

J. P. MENDUM,
HORACE SEAVER,
T. L. SAVAGE,
} Building Committee.

BOSTON, May 30, 1874.

—Boston Investigator.

INTELLECTUAL HONESTY.

By general consent the hypocrite is set down in the same category with the cheat, if not at the bottom of the list. The man who pretends to be what he is not is universally regarded as a fraud, and capable of overreaching in a bargain if not of tapping a till and picking a pocket. To profess what one does not believe is a species of lying for which there was a show of excuse in ages when the penalty of holding heretical opinions was burning at the stake, but has no excuse in our tolerant days. And the man who is not intellectually honest enough to confess his real convictions, but shuffles and potters and hides behind phrases which mean one thing to one mind and another thing to another, commits a grave offence against the integrity of his own mind and the sanctity of the truth.

But this offence seems to be a very popular one just now, especially in religious matters. There has been within twenty-five years a gradual but vast change of opinion on important religious questions. The science, the culture, the criticism, the discoveries, the philosophy, the spirit of our times have had a marked effect on the religious convictions and feelings of thousands of our people. The churches remain; the standards of faith are not altered; the liturgies and symbols are continued in use. The minister may be an evolutionist, but the creed he professes and is pledged to preach teaches that the world was created in six days. He holds to the Copernican astronomy, but is expected to preach that the earth is the centre of the universe, and the sun, moon, and stars are its attendants. He believes in law supreme and universal, but is bound to teach a system at variance with it. He has patched the old garment and added to it, altering its pattern, taking out in one place and putting in in another, till nobody would ever recognize the original fabric which he is supposed to wear and bound to advocate. And the more intelligent if not the larger portion of his congregation is in the same predicament. A pretence is kept up by a sort of tacit understanding. It is a sort of masquerade, but everybody understands it is all a farce.

Now this sort of thing is bad in every way. It grows partly out of a desire to avoid controversy. People are weary of contention, and have tried to keep the peace by silence. Then, too, the changes have come so gradually that the process has been unconscious. People do not fully realize the difference between their own altered views and that of their creeds and confessions of faith. This appears conspicuously in the recent Swing case in Chicago. Between the theology of Dr. Patton and the gospel of Professor Swing there lies a quarter of a century of intense intellectual activity and unconscious mental growth. The one clings tenaciously to the old symbols and interprets them literally; the other has yielded to a current that has carried him imperceptibly away from the old anchorage, and though he looks reverently back to the venerable associations all the while, it is as the rower whose strong arms carry the boat farther and farther from the point he watches. Hundreds of ministers and thousands of laymen are in the same predicament. They do not believe what the creeds they profess were written to teach. The people at large regard them with suspicion if they do not openly accuse them of cowardice and hypocrisy. They are in a false position, which goes far to neutralize their influence for good. It would be vastly better if they could come to terms with themselves and with each other, stop playing hide-and-go-seek with doctrines they explain by explaining away, and readjust their statements to their altered convictions. A good square talk on the subject in the denominational conventions would be vastly better than endlessly beating about the bush. For there is nothing that people so much respect, and that wears so well in the long run, as upright and downright honesty in opinions as well as in acts.—New York Graphic.

EARL RUSSELL ON THE PAPACY.

The fire of liberal principles still burns under the frosts of age in the case of Earl Russell. In a letter stating his inability to attend a meeting to express the sympathy of the English people for Germany in its resistance to Ultramontanism, he makes the following vigorous remarks:—

"Let us now consider what is the object of the meeting. Archbishop Manning states his doctrine very clearly and very boldly thus: 'The Church is separate and supreme. Let us, then, ascertain somewhat further what is the meaning of supreme. Any power which is independent, and can alone fix the limit of its own jurisdiction, and can thereby fix the limits of all other jurisdictions, is, ipso facto, supreme. But the Church of Jesus Christ, within the sphere of revelation of faith and morals, is all this, or is nothing, or worse than nothing, an imposture and a usurpation—that is, it is Christ or Antichrist.'

"Archbishop Manning goes on to say: 'If it be Antichrist, every Cæsar, from Nero to this day, is justified.' So we may say, on the other side, if the Church of Rome be Christ, every pope, from Rodrigo Borgia to this day, is justified, and must be accounted Christ. For my own part, many years of my career in Parliament were devoted to the promotion of religious liberty. From 1813 to 1829 I constantly voted for the admission of Roman Catholics to Parliament and to office. In 1828 I took the foremost part in relieving Protestant dissenters from the disabilities of the Corporation and Test Acts. For many years afterward I labored for the liberation of the Jews. But neither for Roman Catholics, for Protestant Dissenters, nor for Jews did I ask for more than equal privileges and equal laws.

"Archbishop Manning says of the Church: 'If it be Christ, it is the supreme power among men; that is to say: (1) it holds its commission and authority from God; (2) it holds in custody the faith and the law of Jesus Christ; (3) it is the sole interpretation of that faith, and the sole expositor of that law; it has within the sphere of that commission a power to legislate with authority—to bind the consciences of all men born again in the baptism of Jesus Christ.' This is not liberty, civil or religious. It is to bow the knee to a despotic and fallible priesthood. The very same principles which bound me to ask for equal freedom for the Roman Catholic, the Protestant Dissenter, and the Jew, bind me to protest against a conspiracy which aims at confining the German Empire in chains never, it is hoped, to be shaken off. I hasten to declare, with all friends of freedom, and, I trust, with the great majority of the English nation, that I could no longer call myself a lover of civil and religious liberty were I not to proclaim my sympathy with the Emperor of Germany in the noble struggle in which he is engaged. We have nothing to do with the details of the German laws; thay may be just, they may be harsh; we can only leave it to the German people to decide for themselves as we have decided for ourselves. At all events, we are able to see that the cause of the German Emperor is the cause of liberty, and the cause of the Pope is the cause of slavery."

PROHIBITION DISCUSSION.

The town hall at Hyde Park, Mass., was filled to overflowing last week to hear the discussion between Dio Lewis and Rev. Dr. Miner on prohibition. The following sketch of the debate is from the Advertiser:—

Dr. Lewis gave an account of a debate with Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, on prohibition, in which he replied to a statement of the judge that liquor-selling is worse than horse-stealing by the remark that if the person injured by drink was compos mentis—if he has a free mind, with a right to think, speak, choose, and act for himself like other men, and he goes to the rum-seller and asks for drink, knowing just what he will get, and the liquor-dealer, under such circumstances, sells him drink,—then if you say that the liquor-dealer has committed a crime at all in the sense that stealing a horse is a crime, I do not agree with you; and if you do not make a distinction between vices and crimes, the former of which are to be cured by moral suasion, and the latter to be treated with legal suasion, then you cannot understand why it is that in Boston, the most law-abiding of all large cities, we cannot enforce the prohibitory law. Boston is powerless.

Dr. Miner's opinion of the law was that it was a piece of heaven put into the hands of man to use, and to use rightly; and if men who formed legislatures had half the desire for carrying out the grand principles contained in the laws, especially in the prohibitory law now under discussion, that they had for votes, Boston would not to-day be called powerless. The chief of police needed but the word from those in authority, and his six hundred men would soon show whether Boston was strong or weak. It was not the law that was at fault. The law was grand. It was the men to whom was confided the applying of the laws. They were the weakness in the bones of the Commonwealth.

Upon rising the second time Dr. Lewis said the precious jewel of life is personal liberty. A man had a perfect right so far as his fellow-men were concerned, to drink, eat, chew, smoke, or indulge in any score of vices, at his pleasure. Until he became insane or interfered with his neighbor, no man had any right to interfere with him. Trench upon this sacred right, and you entered the path that leads to all tyranny. It was to be free from tyranny that our fathers fought. Dr. Miner defined the war of the Revolution to have been one in which "our fathers fought for the right to build up a noble, Christian government." Ring went the bell, and ring went the opposition on the debate. "They fought for nothing of the kind. They fought for freedom and for nothing else." Between the two speakers the audience learned, to their delight, that corsets were doing a vast mischief, tobacco was a bane, twenty other vices were sapping the life from the community, breaking down strong constitutions and destroying lives, and the laws did not, could not, cure them. No man of common sense proposed law. Law could not reach them. They must be left now and ever to reason and persuasion. Dr. Miner wanted to know if his opponent would not have a law against the sale of tainted meats and adulterated foods. Dr. Lewis replied that if dealers cheated, it was within the province of law to punish; but if the buyer wanted to buy adulterated food, and knew just what he was buying, there was no government on the planet that had the right to interfere.

As the minutes began to approach the hour when the return train to the city was due, the excitement began to wax warm. Both gentlemen were standing side by side at the front, when Dr. Lewis asked the following question: "Do you think you have a right to say to the hundreds of men and women in this hall to-night, that they should not drink what they please?" Dr. Miner quickly answered, "If it can be shown that the habit of drink leads to enormous crimes and destruction of all the best interests of society, the Legislature has a right to prohibit the sale of all intoxicating drink." Dr. Lewis warmly replied, "Don't you see that you have entered a path that logically leads to the control of even a man's religious views?" "I accept it," cried Dr. Miner, "I accept it. If any views are entertained in society which in the judgment of the Legislature tend to produce as much harm as rum does, it would be the bounden duty of that Legislature to prohibit such views." Intense excitement pervaded the audience. Dr. Lewis sprang forward with, "Dr. Miner, I challenge you to put that statement on record. I never heard an opinion which so astonished me. Here are the reporters. Put that on record." Dr. Miner cried out with the same warmth, "I welcome the reporters. Let them put it on record." Dr. Lewis (amid cries of "go on," "go on"),—"It will amaze everybody, though I believe it to be the logical outcome of the prohibitory law."

MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

Yesterday, in company with the doctor, we visited the deaf and dumb man who is dying in the doorless, windowless hut we described once before. Thanks to Mr. Isham Cooper, we were enabled to take over a good supply of provisions for the poor people. The dumb man was in bed. The old woman says "he has to stay there to keep warm."

We asked her the following questions, which we give with her answers:—

"How old are you?"

"I'm nigh on to seventy-five. I can't say positive. I left my age in South Carolina, whar I was riz."

"How did you live before we came to see you?"

"The Lor' only knows; but some of the neighbors is very kind, and though they're right poor, they helps me."

"Do you belong to any church?"

"Yes, bless the Lor', I'm a Methodist. Sometimes ladies used to come here and talk on a slate with my son about the state of his soul, and they think he'll be saved."

We could not help thinking how considerate and Christian-like it was in these ladies (?) to volunteer such a generous opinion.

"Did they give you any clothing or food?"

"Oh! no, sir. They just come to talk about John's soul; and, bless the Lor', I think he'll be saved."

"Who is your minister?"

"Mr. S., of the church up the hill. I uster go thar; but I'm very old, an' I ain't had no warm clothes this winter."

"Did Mr. S. ever help you?"

"Yes, sir; he uster come and talk religion."

"Did he ever bring you food or clothing?"

"No, sir; but he thinks John's soul's right."

The reader must pardon us; but at this point it required an effort to suppress a tendency to swear, which we imagined we left off at the close of the war.

"Have you no clothing but these?" we asked, pointing to the thin cotton garments that clung like damp rags to her shrunken limbs.

"No, sir; but I've put the flannel things you sent me on John. I can git along; we ain't got long to live, no how, friend; an' when the boy was able he tried to keer for me."

"You must be saving of what we bring you, old lady; and while God gives us a little, we will try to keep you warm and fed."

Poor thing! she thanked us in her rough way, and we left, promising to keep up the work which a few generous hearts have helped us in.—Columbus, O., Inquirer.

How many apples did our first parents eat in the Garden of Eden? Eve 8 and Adam 2.

Poetry.

[For The Index.]

THE PILGRIM OF LIFE.

"Pilgrim, with thy staff and pack,
Resting by the ruined wall,
Art thou tempted to turn back,
Ere the night begins to fall?

"Cold the mountain heights appear,
And the paths that upward lead
Well may make thee ask with fear,
'Have I strength for such a deed?'

"Yonder steep and narrow path,
Winding upward, dost thou see?
Only room enough it hath
Singly to be climbed by thee;

"Fame, ambition, pleasure, pride,
Thou canst not with these ascend;
They must all be cast aside;
Make thy staff thy only friend.

"Pilgrim, turn thy radiant eye
Back upon these fields of green,
On the stream that murmurs by
Through this fair and peaceful scene.

"Wilt thou leave these pleasant ways,
For the mountain's distant height,—
Spend thy young and hopeful days
Toiling upward out of sight?"

But he heedeth me no more;
From his shoulders, broad and straight,
Slips the heavy pack he bore,
As he turns unto his fate.

Like a spirit's shines his face—
Like a star his blue eye gleams,
As he walks with steady pace
Toward the object of his dreams.

And I watch him upward stride,
'Till the mist, so dark and cold,
Creeping up the mountain side,
Wraps the Pilgrim in its fold.

Farewell, brave and blameless knight!
Though the mists that round thee close
Hide thee from the world's dim sight,
"On each height there dwells repose."

Jennie Perrine.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 27.

H. Heyerman, $4; Lewis Boutelle, $3; E. Heidenrich, 25 cts.; Wm. Becker, $3; Wm. Smith, $4.50; A. Pritchard, $3; Bernard Shipp, $6; Anna T. Wood, $3; E. & L. Marshall, $3; Rob. Bailey, $3; Wm. L. Garrison, Jr., $3; Wm. W. Baker, $3; John Logan, $5; Benj. Breed, $1.50; Geo. B. Wheeler, $3; David Matson, $3; C. T. Garland, 25 cts.; M. D. Kimball, $6; J. Goldmark, $3; S. Barnard, 50 cts; S. W. Norris, $3.35; R. C. Bassett, $1.75; Emanuel Rider, $3; E. Bateman, $3; Philena Carkin, $3; N. P. Ames, $3; Fanny Brewer, $3; W. H. Crowell, $3; John Hendril, $3; Wm. Tasker, $1.50; A. H. Jewett, $1; Nathan Tabor, $3; J. W. Elliff, $1.50; H. S. Mason, $1; Olive N. Preston, $3; G. H. Foster, 92 cts.; John Verity, $1.50; E. G. Van Dalsen, 25 cts.; L. W. Billingsly, 60 cts.; Nelson Thwing, 50 cts.; John Livesey, 20 cts.; A. K. Loring, 40 cts.; C. E. Martin, $1; Margaret Auston, $1; Bessie Smith, $5.50; Oliver Ditson, $20; Sheffield & Stone, 96 cts.; W. H. Spencer, $40; D. I. Bastian, $1; Fred Beck, $20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of The Index which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on The Index is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your Index mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JULY 2, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will ecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

N.B.—Any person whose name is now on our mail-list will receive a second copy of THE INDEX, mailed to the same address, for a year, on pre-payment of One Dollar. This offer is made to accommodate those of our subscribers who wish to increase our circulation by sending extra copies as samples to their friends.

GLIMPSES.

AN ARTICLE from the Boston Investigator on another page, which escaped our notice until very recently, shows that the Paine Hall project is on the high tide of success. We are heartily glad of it, and congratulate our esteemed neighbors on the pleasant prospect before them.

THE CLOSING of the academic year at Harvard was signalized this season by the dedication of the new and magnificent Memorial Hall. The grandeur of the structure and the lofty purpose that built it atoned for the dry and tame oration of Charles Francis Adams. Gen. Bartlett was the real orator of the week. What splendid inspirations of patriotism and high resolve, what proud traditions of heroism and consecration to liberty, will haunt that Hall and stimulate young hearts to noble deeds!

THE FOLLOWING DESPATCH shows that the Bible-in-schools question is irrepressible. Some bold spirit has struck the right chord in Toledo:—

TOLEDO, June 18. Indications are that the question of reading the Bible in the public schools is to be agitated here. In the Board of Education last night the following resolution was offered:—

That the reading from any version of the book, commonly known as the Bible, the singing of hymns, commonly known as religious hymns, and the religious action, commonly known as prayer, shall not hereafter be any part of the exercises in any of the public schools under the control of the Board, and the same are hereby prohibited.

No action was taken on the resolution.

THE FOLLOWING NOTICE is sent us for publication by the Woman's Journal, and we commend it to the special attention of all its friends: "Woman Suffrage, on Fourth of July, in Harmony Grove, South Framingham, will attract a large attendance. Mary A. Livermore will deliver an Oration. Poems, by Julia Ward Howe, and Henry B. Blackwell. Brief Addresses, by William Lloyd Garrison, Lucy Stone, James Freeman Clarke, Charles W. Slack, Samuel B. Noyes, and others. An Original Woman Suffrage Song, written by Kate True. Music by Hall's Boston Brass Band. A special excursion train from Boston, and reduced fares on all railroads."

JOSEPH MAZZINI has this thoughtful and elevated passage in an article on "Renan and France," published in the Fortnightly Review for last February: "Every existence has an aim. Life, human life, has achieved the consciousness of this fact; life is, then, for a mission—the mission of reaching the aim; it consists in incessant activity upon the path towards it, and a perennial battle against the obstacles it encounters upon that path. The Ideal is not within, but beyond us and supreme over us; it is not the creation, but the gradual discovery of the human intellect. The law which directs the discovery is named Progress; the method by which progress is achieved is Association—the association of all the human faculties and forces. The ultimate discovery of the aim of life is assured by Providential design, but time and space are given to achieve it, and are therefore the field of liberty and responsibility to each and all of us. One choice lies between evil, which is egotism, and good, which is love and sacrifice for the sake of our fellow-men. The faculty of choice, of discerning the path of progress, having been bestowed upon us, social institutions are the means by which we incarnate our thought in action, and advance towards the realization of the providential design."

BISHOP BORGESS, of Detroit, not long since issued a circular which shows the utter hostility of the Catholic Church to our public school system. We quote from the Detroit Post of Nov. 26, 1873:—

"A Catholic school must be established in every parish or mission at the earliest practicable moment, if the strict economy of the revenues and other resources of the congregation can possibly justify it. It is a question, and admitting of no apology or excuse, with which the consciences of the pastor and people are charged, and both must answer to God for the guilt, if they have neglected their duty toward the immortal souls of the children intrusted to their charge.

"If a Catholic school is attached to the congregation, the pastor or missionary shall not admit a child to prepare for its first Holy Communion which does not attend the parish school, nor in any case admit a child until it is in its twelfth year of age. This rule shall take effect in January of the year 1874, and be observed thereafter.

"The pastor or missionary shall have the entire control of the school, and the teachers, and engage or discharge them according to the dictates of his conscience, subject only to the judgment of the Bishop.

"The pastor shall only introduce, or allow to be used, the 'text-books,' accepted and approved for the use of parochial schools in this diocese. In the uniformity of text-book in all schools the interests of both the children and parents are served."

A coup d'état has taken place in the office of THE INDEX. The editor is driven into exile for the month of July by a band of determined conspirators, and not only forbidden to write a line for these columns, but also to speak, whisper, or even think the word INDEX. As a consequence of this atrocious outrage on the freedom of the press, he is condemned for four mortal weeks to roam over the face of the earth like the Wandering Jew; and the readers of THE INDEX will please imagine him in Terra del Fuego, or Thibet, or Greenland, or anywhere but in this "Hub of the Universe." Whatever heresies may creep into this eminently conservative sheet in his absence, they will acquit him of all responsibility for them; and no rash or wild utterances in its columns must be permitted to tarnish that reputation for unblemished Orthodoxy on which he so complacently prides himself. In short (not to put too fine a point upon it), he owes a month's vacation to the unexpected and resolute kindness of two friends, who will not even allow him the small satisfaction of naming them. They think he needs a little rest after many years of almost unintermitted labor; and during this month, therefore, THE INDEX will be under the editorial charge of Mr. Stevens, with their efficient assistance.

IT IS TIME TO speak. The letter of Mr. Tilton to Dr. Bacon, in the Golden Age of June 27, is known to all, at least as to its substance; and we are constrained to say, with the utmost deliberation, that, although we have steadfastly considered Henry Ward Beecher innocent until he should be proved guilty, we must now consider him guilty until he shall be proved innocent; and that, while it may be possible to explain away some of the points made in this letter, we see no possibility of acquitting him at the very least of cruel wrongs against Theodore Tilton. Nor is this all. It is as clear as noonday that Plymouth Church, through its chief officers, has conspired to crush an innocent man, and to ride roughshod over his ruined reputation in order to save the reputation of a man who, in words of pathetic despair, has confessed himself not to be innocent. Against this every generous nature must indignantly protest. Justice first, and pity afterwards. Mr. Tilton's letter has impressed us as deeply by its moral dignity and noble self-restraint as by its serried demonstrations. We grieve for Mr. Beecher, for whose good name we have been jealous, but who now appears to have been driven by his misery and want of courage into inexcusable treachery towards one against whom he has confessedly committed some unnamed outrage. We grieve still more for Mr. Tilton, whom a great Christian congregation, backed by a great Christian council, has tried to grind into the dust; and now, if anything we have ever said in these columns has added a feather's weight to this great load of injustice, we ask his pardon for our unmeant complicity with his oppressors.

"STIRPICULTURE" VS. "SOCIAL FREEDOM."

An article by Dr. Clarkson among our "Communications" this week, written in a wholly unexceptionable manner on the free-love question, gives a fitting occasion for making some remarks on this subject which we have long had in mind. Like those of every other institution, the fundamental ideas of marriage are to-day undergoing a searching scrutiny, which in the end must result in establishing more firmly whatever is good in that institution, and in reforming whatever in it is bad. We have not the faintest belief that free discussion on this topic can do any harm; and it is in the highest sense expedient that it should be conducted in such a manner as shall be in harmony with the most genuine purity of thought and expression. To confine it to disreputable publications would be a suicidal policy; and we are more than willing that THE INDEX, which, in advocating Free Religion, advocates whatever shall prove really beneficial to mankind, should occasionally devote part of its space to this exceedingly important question. Without designing specially to reply to Mr. Clarkson's article, we wish now to offer some general considerations suggested by it, postponing to some future occasion the presentation of various other thoughts which cannot be compressed into the limits of the present article.

A great deal has been said in some quarters about the "new science of stirpiculture;" by which is meant the application to mankind of laws which are well known to be successfully followed by breeders of cattle, horses, dogs, fowls, pigeons, etc., in developing improved races of the animals inferior to man. By mating such individuals of any species as possess peculiar or exceptionally fine qualities, these qualities can be intensified in the offspring produced, until new varieties are established which are characterized by them in an extraordinary degree. The inference is drawn, and doubtless correctly, that the human species is susceptible of similar modification by judicious "selection;" and the hope is entertained that society may be induced to submit to some system by which in this way the human species shall be greatly improved. This hope, as is well known, is at least as old as Plato.

Now the fulfilment of this hope hinges on the possibility of persuading mankind to accept and put into operation some such system; and we confess that this possibility appears to us exceedingly slight. There is a vast difference between independent human beings and dependent animals, the latter being subjected to an arbitrary control to which the former would never submit. Only the sternest despotism could accomplish such a result as the famous Potsdam regiment of gigantic grenadiers. The only possible way of carrying out the theory of the stirpiculturists would be to entrust some special Commission or official Board with the power of deciding who should or should not form sexual unions, and with what parties; and such a Commission would be as unsuccessful as it would certainly be intolerable, unless it should embody an amount of scientific knowledge which at present does not exist.

What is very surprising is that the same persons should be found to advocate "stirpiculture" and "social freedom;" for the success of the one would depend on the destruction of the other. The more highly intellectual and moral should be the individual members of society, the less willing would they be for any reason to delegate to others, least of all to an official authority, the choice of their partners. Such choice is now made freely, under the marriage system so much objected to by the advocates of free-love; whereas, under the system of stirpiculture which they also advocate, no results could possibly be attained in the direction sought, unless the individual should surrender to a scientific State Commission one of the most precious of all human rights. This is sufficiently clear—that, whether "stirpiculture" or "social freedom" is the more desirable, they cannot both be had together. You cannot have your cake, and eat it too.

It is not, of course, to be denied that the main idea of stirpiculture contains a great deal of truth, and very important truth too. The laws of heredity, of temperamental adaptation, and so forth, necessarily exert a vast influence in determining the character of offspring; and they ought to be scrupulously heeded, so far as they are intelligible or can be intelligently applied. It can scarcely be doubted, for instance, that seriously diseased persons ought not to marry. But to form a sexual union originally in order to carry out the stirpicultural notion, and to pay no heed to the deep and pure love which is Nature's best practical guide to a fitting union, would be essentially immoral, and would defeat the very object sought.

If it be said that love is itself to be the true stirpicultural test, then we reply that all talk about the "science" of stirpiculture is arrant humbug. True marriage has always been based on love, and by this test stirpiculture would be reduced to the merest iteration of what everybody has known from time immemorial. Unless this alleged "science" can formulate laws in general terms, and regulate its own experiments by general principles, it is no science at all, and can add nothing to the wisdom needed for the practical conduct of life. It is certainly untrue that love is an unerring indication of complete fitness for union between two parties; many a love-made match has ended in unhappiness, and produced very unfortunate offspring; and no one is so quick to assert these things as the advocate of the free-love theory, which rectifies by separation the mistakes that love so frequently commits. If "stirpiculture" simply sets up love as on the whole the best practical determinant of fitness for union, it teaches no more than mankind have long since found out under the existing marriage system; and it has no claim whatever to be considered a science,—least of all a new one. But if it admits other determinants of this fitness than love, then it directly overthrows the entire free-love or social freedom theory, by causing other considerations than love to be regarded as entitled to decide the propriety of union. In the only sense really worthy of attention, stirpiculture is the science of the laws of reproduction, so far as known and applicable to the improvement of the human species; but it brings many other factors than mere love into the question, and strikes the deadliest blow at the whole free-love doctrine. It should discover and regulate all the conditions affecting the conception, the birth, the development, and the character of offspring; but any attempt to secure a general improvement of the race by enforcing arbitrarily all these conditions would involve a degree of control over the individual which would not only annihilate the "social freedom" now contended for, but rouse instantaneous resistance from all free citizens who believe in marriage. Men are not machines; they are not puppets; they will not submit to be experimented with for the general good; and the only way to render stirpiculture anything better than a dream or a despotism is to discover and disseminate truth on this subject for the guidance of such as desire to be guided by truth. What we now wish specially to point out is the utter inconsistency between the free-love theory and the true stirpicultural theory that an improved race must be reared by studying and obeying laws involving many complex conditions besides the mere fact of love. Free-love surrenders the rein to sentiment or desire; while stirpiculture, if it is ever to be a real science, must become such by making reason supreme.

THE DANGER OF DEAD-LETTER LAWS.

On the evening of Oct. 6, 1872, Michael Connelly was crossing South Boston bridge, on his way to meet a man from whom he desired to obtain employment. The draw of the bridge was off for repairs, and the city had neglected to provide lights or other safeguards to prevent accidents to travellers. When at the draw, Connelly perceived no danger, and walked off into the water, sustaining serious injuries by the fall and narrowly escaping drowning. On recovering from these injuries, he sued the city; and the case has just been decided in the Superior Court against the plaintiff. The counsel for the city requested the court to rule that the action could not be maintained, as it appeared that the evening in question was Sunday, and that the travelling was not "for charity" or a "work of necessity;" which is the only travelling legally permitted by the enlightened State of Massachusetts on that particular day. The court ruled that the action could not be maintained, and gave a verdict for the city. Thus the poor fellow was cheated of the redress which he ought to have received for injuries occasioned by gross neglect on the part of the city; and another count is added to the long indictment which humanity has drawn up against superstition.

There is no pretence at this day of enforcing the prohibition against travelling on Sunday for other than charitable or necessary purposes; the people come and go as they please, paying no heed whatever to this obsolete restriction. But it now appears that they have been doing so at their own peril. If Connelly had tumbled off the bridge on Saturday, he would have recovered handsome damages from the city; but because another twenty-four hours had rolled over his head, the city shirked all responsibility for its neglect by raking up this disregarded statute, and holding that the poor man's impiety cancelled all his claims to the protection of this super-religious community. Here, in Boston, the self-styled Athens of America, the great intellectual and moral centre of the Western hemisphere, the blind bigotry of the Puritans (which too complaisant liberalism still suffers to disfigure the statute book with its insensate jargon) reaches its long arm down to the year of grace 1874, and robs a poor laborer of the money which is his due by reason of unpardonable remissness on the part of city officials, and the pain, confinement, and loss of wages entailed upon him by it. Nobody pretends that the difference between Saturday and Sunday is any just ground for withholding damages; nobody now-a-days supposes that it is worse to travel on one day than on another, provided the errand be innocent. Even church-members, deacons, and ministers take their Sunday walks for refreshment or recreation, and feel no qualms of conscience as if guilty of desecrating a holy day. But the gloomy asceticism of the Puritans still survives in laws that very few really respect but everybody is afraid or reluctant to wipe out. The result of suffering such dead-letter laws to remain unrepealed is the occasional commission of some disgraceful act of public injustice, and the constant exposure of us all to the danger of becoming ourselves the victims. Church-people would battle stoutly for the retention of all such laws, not because they really want them enforced, but because Christianity thus receives at least verbal recognition in a public way and derives a certain authority or influence accordingly; while liberals are indisposed for many reasons (not always creditable) to enter into or awaken controversies on this class of subjects. Hence dangerous weapons remain sheathed in the law-books of all the States, ready to be drawn for the assassination of justice and freedom whenever the Church shall stretch out her hand to grasp them. Worse wrongs than Connelly's may easily be perpetrated by their means, and the only wise course is to agitate for a thorough purification of constitutions and statutes in the light of secular principles. To do this work well will require arduous labor and organizations specially fitted to perform it; and in this fact is found a reason for the formation of Liberal Leagues which time will show by-and-by in its real strength.

MR. BEECHER'S CREED.

It has been objected that in my account of Theodore Parker as a preacher I did injustice to the power and influence of Mr. Beecher. That I did not will be seen from the subjoined account of a christening which took place in his church in Brooklyn a few weeks ago. It is taken from the New York Sun of May 4:—

One hundred and two persons were made members of Plymouth Church yesterday. The pulpit and choir gallery were nearly covered with flowers and green leaves, and the rush of attendants was far greater than usual. Thus the plain old interior was made to show at a glance that the occasion was inordinate. The candidates, seated in the front pews, were first briefly addressed by Mr. Beecher.

"You have separated yourselves from this congregation, dear friends," he said, "to perform one of the most momentous yet joyful acts of your life. You will never cease to feel the effect of the dedication you now make. Should you cling affectionately to that Redeemer whom you are about to openly avouch, you will ever rejoice that you were brought to this hour; but if your soul shall draw back, and you shall put Christ to an open shame, this deed shall be an everlasting witness against you. Yet we do not cast down. Though we have thought meet to admonish you, it is with a cheerful hope that He who in love has called you will never forsake you until you shall stand in Zion and before God."

The articles of faith were then read. They are peculiar to Plymouth Church, Mr. Beecher being their author, and are as follows:—

We believe in the existence of one ever-living and true God, sovereign and unchangeable, infinite in power, wisdom, and goodness. We believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be inspired of God, to contain a revelation of his will, and to be the authoritative rule of faith and practice.

We believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are revealed in the Scriptures as existing, in respect to attributes, character, and office, as three persons, equally divine; while in other respects they are united, and are, in a proper sense, one God.

We believe that our first parents were created upright; that they fell from their original state by disobedience, and that all their posterity are not only prone to sin, but do become sinful and guilty before God.

We believe that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for it; that Christ appeared in the flesh; that he set forth a perfect example of obedience; that he purely taught the truths needful for our salvation; that he suffered in our stead, the just for the unjust; that he died to atone for our sins, and to purify us therefrom; and that he rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us.

We believe that God offers full forgiveness and everlasting life to all who will heartily repent and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; while those who do not believe, but persevere in sin, shall finally perish.

We believe in the resurrection of all the dead; in a final and general judgment, upon the awards of which the wicked shall go into everlasting punishment and the righteous into life eternal.

"Do you thus believe?" asked Mr. Beecher, after he had finished reading, and the candidates bowed. Then he asked them to rise, and continued:—

Do you now avouch the Lord Jehovah to be your God; Jesus Christ to be your Savior; the Holy Spirit to be your Sanctifier? Renouncing the dominion of this world over you, do you consecrate your whole soul and body to the service of God? Do you receive his word as the rule of your life, and, by his grace assisting you, will you persevere in this consecration unto the end?

The candidates bowed assent, and sat down. Thirty of them were then baptized, the pastor touching their foreheads with wetted fingers, and repeating the customary words. The ceremony concluded with the rising of all the members of the church, and an implied assent to the following covenant:—

We, then, the members of this church, do joyfully and cordially receive you into our number. We promise to bear with you, to love, to edify, and by all means in our power to advance you in the divine life. Amen.

Mr. Beecher's sermon was a presentment of the possibility and propriety of happiness in Christian life in opposition to the generally accepted and sombre conceptions.

Two of those who united with the church were immersed by Mr. Beecher in the baptistry under his pulpit on Friday evening. Mr. Beecher's olive-wood pulpit furniture was removed, and in a long, priestly robe he descended the steps and dipped the candidates just under the surface of the tepid water. The congregation sang "Shall Jesus bear the cross alone?" and when the second person—a lady—had been immersed, Mr. Beecher lifted his hands, the water streaming from his flowing sleeves, and with a benediction dismissed those who had gathered.

This account is particularly interesting in connection with a remarkable sermon recently preached, in which Mr. Beecher treated the second article of the above creed, that respecting the Old and New Testaments, as freely as any rationalist might do. I said in my criticism that while Mr. Parker instructed the community Mr. Beecher entertained it. The entertainment is not what Mr. Barnum would call "perfectly moral," but surely such performances as that of the christening cannot be classed under the head of instructive, while the broad discourse above referred to must in this view be classed with amusements.

O. B. F.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE IN CALAMITIES.

I heard of a clergyman the other day speaking of the Mill River calamity as an awful warning, which had been specially sent by the Almighty, to show the uncertainty of all earthly affairs and the need of accepting the plan of redemption offered by Jesus, in order to escape a worse perdition hereafter. And there are probably thousands and tens of thousands of people in America who read this as the chief lesson of that dreadful casualty, though it is interesting and encouraging to note that the secular, and the abler class of religious, newspapers have been pointing out in emphatic language that the whole disaster is due to the natural cause of a defective dam. That in the primitive stages of society mankind should have been prone to look for a manifestation of Divine Power in exceptional and terrible events, rather than in the ordinary processes of Nature and common life, may not be strange; but it does seem strange that this disposition should so persistently survive in this enlightened and scientific age. There are thousands of people to-day who see God in a terrific storm, but not in the daily sunshine; who see him in a sudden tempest that hurls a ship to destruction beneath the sea, but not in the gentler winds that carry it safely across the waves to its destined haven; who see him in a Vesuvius eruption burying towns and their inhabitants in a general ruin, but not in the serene and steady forces that have been reclothing that desolation with fruitful vineyards and a happy population; who see him in death and a desolated home, but not in the joyous affections and daily service of a happy and healthful household; who see him in a Boston or Chicago fire, but not in the human bravery and skill that can master a conflagration, and in the human knowledge that can build so as to prevent one; who see him in a Louisiana inundation or in a catastrophe like that at Mill River, but do not see him in the human inventive art, the fruit of learning and skill, which, in the kingdom of Holland, has said to the sea, "Thus far, and no farther," and, not to be enticed by any impatience or avarice into careless workmanship, has bidden the population of a nation live in security below the surface of the tides. Even in this reading and thinking age, the clergyman to whom I alluded has many followers—people who never think of Divine Providence as capable of manifestation through the ordinary industry, and home life, and neighborly intercourse, and the activity of natural forces and natural human faculties displayed in a population like that of the Mill-River valley, but who, when a heart-rending calamity comes by which in a few hours two or three villages are swept away by a flood, peaceful homes, and families, and dumb creatures are whirled suddenly together in promiscuous destruction, a hundred and fifty human beings lose their lives, and a beautiful valley and its industry are blotted out together in one spring morning, are startled to cry out, "Behold the hand of God!"

Well, in a sense, and in a very momentous sense, not for a moment to be lost sight of, the Almighty Power was in this and every similar disaster; in it just as it was in the Chicago fire, or the last coal-mine explosion, or the last railroad or steamboat catastrophe. Some law of Nature had been violated, some force of Nature had been pushed ignorantly or heedlessly beyond its legitimate limit, or had been allowed by human negligence to slip beyond human control; and hence the calamity. It is the Natural consequence of the violated or neglected law—the natural retribution for the violation. And since it is the Almighty Power, which most people in Christendom call God, that works in these laws of Nature, it is true that this Power is manifest, and manifest for a special purpose, when these laws are broken. In the loss and suffering that ensue, the Infinite Power cries out against the fracture—cries out against the ignorance, or the carelessness, or the haste, or the avarice, or the inhumanity that has thus risked the lives of human beings, and the most precious happiness of hundreds of hearts, upon the possible chance that the limit of Nature's laws may be played with and the player not be thrown over the verge into the gulf of inevitable disaster. To this extent and in this way the hand of Divine Providence is in all such casualties as that at Williamsburg; and the enforced lesson is, "Learn Nature's laws and obey them." Let man put himself into harmony with Nature's forces, if he would have the benefit of her strength. Let him rightly use the natural resources and faculties that are already given to his keeping, if he would learn how divine power is to be manifested in human affairs. Let him build a ship by the best principles of mechanics and the most honest workmanship, and put it in charge of the wisest captaincy and the bravest seamanship, if he would attract the Providence that is to carry it across the ocean in safety. Will he learn how Omnipotence would display its power in a Williamsburg reservoir? Let him hold back the flood by a feat of engineering that shall master all the possibilities of an inundation. If he cannot find mathematicians, engineers, mechanics, who can solve that problem with perfect certainty, then let him permit Nature's water-courses to take their own way unobstructed, and not for greed of gain transform them into traps for the destruction of innocent human beings. When we come to look at these great calamities from some such point of view as this, then we shall begin to see indeed the ways of Providence in them.

And there is another way, and that also a perfectly natural way, by which divine power is manifest in connection with such catastrophes. According to the fine Old Testament legend of Elijah, Jehovah appeared to him not in the "whirlwind" nor "earthquake" nor "fire," but in the "still, small voice" that came after these terrific phenomena. So to-day the power of God is not so much in these desolating forces that bring the disasters themselves, terrible and mighty though these may seem, as it is in the gentle, hushed voice of human sympathy and charity, which, after the woe of flood or tempest or fire, sends to the sufferers greetings of fraternity and help. He is not so much in the cry of terror and anguish—for these are rather the tokens of some attempt to do without his power or to violate it—as in the "still, small voice" of brotherly love that speaks hope and healing into the terrified and stricken hearts. W. J. P.

SOME PRETENSIONS to Christianity remind us of the reply of Scott's De Bracy to the disguised monk, who asked if he was at last safe, and in Christian keeping: "Safe thou art, and for Christianity here is the stout Baron Reginald Front de Bœnf, whose utter abomination is a Jew, and the good knight-templar Brian de Bois-Guilbert, whose trade it is to slay Saracens. If these are not good marks of Christianity, I know no others which they bear about them."

Communications.

THE SECRET OF REPOSE.

BALTIMORE, June 6, 1874.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—

I have read with a wondering interest the "Last Thoughts" of Mr. Austin Holyoake; and, while the article is very clear upon the subject of what he did not believe, it fails to tell us what was the peculiar phase of faith which, for more than twenty years, had given to him "the perfect mental repose" he claims (and I see honestly) to have possessed. No one can be without some faith regarding the great future. Did his rest on annihilation? Or was it rather the great loving trust of a pure heart which, recognizing the creating Power, rests reverently upon it, biding the decree of Nature, and leaving all to her? Should the National Reformer furnish something more, I shall hail it gladly. Being a diligent reader of THE INDEX, I approve of much I see within its columns, and therefore wish it in all things to make its journey in the right direction.

Yours very truly, AN INQUIRER.

[Whatever directions may be wrong, that surely is right which leads to the conclusion that the secret of spiritual repose is utter fidelity to the voice of conscience. His is a clear, calm, and self-contained spirit who, despite all surface-rufflings and untoward circumstances, knows that he supremely loves and faithfully obeys the highest law he can comprehend. It matters not what he believes or disbelieves, if he prizes truth above profit and substance above show. We suppose that Austin Holyoake was "without some faith regarding the great future." If that future holds continuance of individual being, as we sturdily hope in the absence of all disproof, he is still wiser now than when he was wise enough to know his own ignorance. But now, as before, he must still find his peace in brave simplicity and lofty love of truth and right. Read in another column what George Jacob Holyoake says of his brother, and judge whether such a man stood in need of any doctrine to give him courage and self-possession in the presence of Death.—ED.]

SLAVE-HOLDING CHRISTIANITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In conversation with a young Unitarian minister not long since, he expressed to me great astonishment when I spoke of our Christianity as the apologist and abettor of chattel-slavery. And when I told him that members of churches and ministers, and even parishes and churches, in corporate capacity, were absolute owners of slaves, and that the Northern Evangelical church generally countenanced them in the crime, and welcomed them to pulpit and communion table, he became excited, if not angry, and refused to hold farther talk with me. He was at his college during the four Rebellion years, a part of the time in Germany, and probably knew little of the "Thirty Years' War" of the Abolitionists with the slave system and with the Church on account of it, before that time, commencing in 1830 with Mr. Garrison and his Liberator.

I sometimes think that could you, in your conflict with the spiritual powers that be, in the name of a religion called Christianity, only disclose the history of that religion and its ministry as connected with American slavery, your work and warfare would be done.

For there is not on earth, there never was on earth, a more hateful, horrible system of religious faith, practice, worship, than that could be shown to be, judged wholly out of its own mouth! A system at sight of which all humanity must stand aghast, and before whose terrors all true men and noble women would retire!

Before me are two books of sermons and other religious literature, designed and used by Southern Evangelical clergymen for the use and instruction of masters, mistresses, and slaves. One, for which I am indebted to my friend Mr. Samuel Brooke, of Ohio (a native Virginian), is entitled: "Sermons addressed to Masters and Servants, by Rev. Thomas Bacon, Minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Maryland—with other Tracts and Dialogues; now republished, and recommended to all Masters and Mistresses, to be used in their Families, by the Rev. William Meade,"—since, as I am told, the eminent Bishop Meade, of Virginia. The book was published many years since, at Winchester, in that State, by John Heiskell.

The other volume, entitled: "Sermons Preached on Plantations to Congregations of Negroes, by Rev. Alexander Glennie, Rector of All Saints Parish, Waccamaw, S. C.," was published in Charleston, in the same State, in 1844, by A. E. Miller.

Christianity, as judged by you through its theories, doctrines, and general history, presents most frightful aspects. But I think its connection with American chattel-slavery, for more than a half century, stamps it with an audacity of wickedness in practice unparalleled in the annals of human depravity.

The two volumes I have named, together with the contemporaneous civil code regulating slavery in the slave States and District of Columbia (city of Washington with the rest of the "Ten Miles Square"!), and the laws and proceedings, acts and resolutions, of the Southern churches on the same subject, would form a work that should be in the hands of every young minister and candidate for the ministry in the nation. It would be indeed a testimony which should and would blast American Christianity with odium forever and ever.

And yet this chapter of our national history, to almost all the young—ministers, as well as others—is a chapter unread and unknown. Might not THE INDEX, as part of its argument against the tyranny of Christianity, point a little in that most remarkable direction? PARKER PILLSBURY.

[We should be greatly obliged to Mr. Pillsbury, if he would do this greatly needed work in our columns; for no one is better acquainted with the facts than he. A series of articles on this subject, with exact references and full proofs of the statements made, would be very valuable. Let the truth be told, calmly but with unsparing fidelity.—ED.]

TO THE RADICALS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Will the efforts now being made in this country in behalf of free thought, and all its concomitants, be of any permanent use to our people? Are you, Mr. Abbot, and your associates, not wasting your time and abilities in the up-hill work of emancipating the minds of your countrymen from the degrading bondage of error? Will not your children, when you are dead and gone, and when they sum up the results of your life, say that if their father had expended his energies in some money-making business, instead of fighting the entrenched superstitions of the Church, and offering the people a freedom they did not want, they would be better off in the world, and the world would be no worse off than it is now?

One hundred years ago there was as much free thought in this country, in proportion to its population, as there is now, and probably more. The character of the Constitution and government of the United States proves that the moulding influence, the controlling mind, of our fathers was what the Church in her ignorance now calls "infidel." The ecclesiastical power, for the first time in the history of States, was manifestly subordinate to the political, and the political was wielded by men who were nearly all free thinkers in religion—deists—theists—who believed in natural religion, but who did not believe in the divine authority of either the Bible or the Church. Is not this true without doubt?

Yet, with such a fair start—with such a vantage ground as no nation ever before had to permeate all the people with their radical opinions,—fifty years did not elapse before the leading men of that day ignominiously succumbed to the arrogant power of the Church, so that their sons acted as if they were either ashamed or afraid of their opinions. In an article published in THE INDEX a few years ago, I showed that this humiliating retrogression, so cowardly in its appearance, was caused mainly by two men—John Wesley and George Whitfield. The first was the founder and organizer of the Methodist Church, whose influence in the country is mighty, and everywhere. The second organized no church; but, by his amazing eloquence as an evangelist, he travelled all over the land preaching and giving tone and numbers to the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist, and Lutheran Churches, which were just beginning their existence, but which now, with the rest of the sects, form the grand army of the Persians that has encamped on the plains of Marathon, waiting to see if any heretical Miltiades will show a phalanx of opposition.

It is true that science now renders the cause of Radicalism a service which it never did before; but, after all, what are our labors but a mere doing over again what our fathers did a century ago? Indeed, all along through the past generations, from the beginning of the Christian Era, there were protestants against the Church and her religion, who fought battles and gained victories on the field of debate. But they never amounted to anything; so that each age had the same old battle to fight over and over again, just as we are now doing.

If I had a voice of thunder, I would peal it into the ears of the Radicals of the United States that this work of Sisyphus they are now doing—rolling the rock to the top of the hill at tremendous labor and expense, only to see it turn and roll back again to the bottom—is the punishment of heaven upon them for their folly in not organizing their success, and thus preserving and transmitting what they have gained. Folly is that which is done by a fool; and a fool is a person who does not adapt means to ends, but blunders along as if there were no relation between cause and effect. He puts money, earned with infinite pains, into one end of his purse, forgetful altogether that there is a hole in the other end; and so he is eternally poor, and has nothing. This is just what the Radicals have always been doing, and are now doing. The stupidest and wildest sect in Christendom is wise when compared to the Radicals; for when they make half a dozen converts, they organize them into a church to perpetuate and extend their influence. But the Radicals hatch out their chickens, and then leave them to be fed and cooped by any one who pleases. When the helpless little things are scattered in the grass, peeping mournfully for food and the cluck of their mother, a Sunday-school teacher hears them, gathers them into her apron, and takes them to the Church pen, where, being well nursed, they soon grow up, and learn to despise their parentage. A distinguished Radical some time ago died. I know not how many of his sons and daughters have joined the very church that treated him as a wild beast.

Now if the Radicals of this day and country wish to save and use the results of their hard and self-denying labors, and not have the work to be done all over again in the next generation, and at similar expense, they must throw away their folly, and ORGAN-

IZE—hold stated meetings for lectures and discussion. They must attack, instead of standing forever on the defensive. The late speech of Robert Ingersoll before a magnificent audience at Chicago, which cheered the most radical portions of it to the echo, shows that the people of the West, at least, are ready to hear and to coöperate in the work of opening the eyes of the blind millions who are still priest-ridden. His tone is not timorous and apologetic, thus inviting the Church either to spit on him in contempt or to put her foot on him to crush him. He attacks the Church and her creeds, tells her she is a harlot seducing the people from lives of integrity and of independent thought; and, as proof that this is the right policy, the Church listens, turns pale, and is afraid to strike. Ingersoll has the courage of his opinions.

If the Church did not organize round her creed, and set up a ministry to preach its dogmas, and establish boards of publication to print and circulate tracts in order to gain the people, how long do you suppose she could stand on the strength of her dogmas and ceremonies? Not a year. Protestant Germany would to-day be as radical and as churchless as the Free Religionists of this country, were it not that it is organized, and draws its support from the coffers of the State. In a battle the army that is organized, disciplined, and courageous, even if it be small, can put to flight the largest army of undisciplined men whose ranks are broken by an excessive and foolish individuality.

In the moral warfare now going on between Truth and Error, in waging which we repudiate the use of carnal weapons, we, Radicals, are not only in a minority, but we are unorganized, each man fighting when he pleases, as he pleases, or not at all (as is the case with most of us). We seem to think that the Malakoff of superstition can be battered down by the pop-guns of individuals; and, if not, that it may stand forever. The Church, our great opponent, is not only in the majority, but is as well organized as the Prussian army was in her late war with France, and has the prestige of centuries of victory.

It is firmly believed by many that with the aid of the Young Men's Christian Association, which is to Protestantism what Jesuitism is to the Catholic Church, she will make, in due time, when her plans are all completed and understood by her agents, a Herculean effort to incorporate the religious amendment into the Constitution of the United States. And when we see what amazing power an eloquent and zealous man, like Henry Ward Beecher, can exert on the masses of Church people, the thought is alarming that a dozen such, coöperating with each other, might revolutionize the religious public, and lead them, even through blood, to put God, and Christ, and the Bible into the Constitution, or to die in the attempt.

In view, then, of the fact that natural religionists in all ages have entirely lost the fruits of their labors because they did not organize; in view of the fact that the strength of the Church in all her sects now consists in her organization, and not in her creeds, which would fall to the ground in the presence of logic and the facts of science,—is it wise in us to remain unorganized, and consequently helpless? Is there no Miltiades in our ranks who will take our undisciplined men, and form them into an army, and scatter the best forces of our enemies on the plains of Marathon?

What must we think of those conceited and selfish men who fancy they see more danger in the Radicals, if organized, turning into creed-bound, persecuting churches than they do in the serried hosts of the Church, who flaunts her banners in our faces, and tells us that she means to put us down? Will we go on in our folly until the future historian, indignant at the results of it, shall say, in giving an account of us to our posterity, that we "were a set of consummate fools"? Are there not, especially in the East, many Radicals who are such only æsthetically, and because Radicalism is the highest type of cultivated intellect in this age? Have they ever shed a tear, or heaved a sigh, at the humiliating bondage of their fellow-men to the superstitions of the Church? and have they ever done a thing to bring them out into the glorious liberty of the sons of God which they themselves enjoy? The Radicals are open to the charge of coldness and selfishness. Would to God that in the holy cause of intellectual and spiritual freedom for all mankind they had a little of the zeal and missionary spirit which the Church displays in promoting her own ends! VINDEX.

[There is an immense force in the above view of the situation. Substantially, we agree to every one of these fiery words. That is why we have done our utmost to form Liberal Leagues for aggressive work; and that is why we pleaded the cause of Anti-Christianity at the late convention of the Free Religious Association. The weapons of this warfare are not muskets and mortars, but brains, tongues, pens, and votes. Let superstition be driven out of its strongholds, and compelled to face the soldiers of truth in the open field. Now for one plain word, none the less kind for being plain. Our correspondent by implication censures us for not doing more to "organize" the Radicals. We have done all that one mind and heart can do, without forgetting that no mind or heart is to ape the leadership which Radicalism must forever spew out of its mouth. We have put our name openly to public appeals for organization, and risked all consequences, whether of ridicule or wrath. Does our correspondent suppose that this battle can be won by incognitos and noms de plume? His words are excellent, and full of power. But their earnestness would be tenfold more powerful, if he did not shrink from writing his own name at their end. When a dozen well-known, resolute, able, strong men shall unitedly join in a standing appeal to "Organize!" the Radicals will be roused from their apathy. But we do not blame them for keeping cool and quiet, when masked trumpeters blow an anonymous bugle.—ED.]

"SOCIAL FREEDOM."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your evident desire to encourage a full, if impersonal, discussion of the free-love question will perhaps aid in the solution of the problem propounded by Pontius Pilate, "What is truth?" It will be remembered that the abrupt departure of Pilate, after submitting his proposition, deprived posterity of any illumination upon this point from the eminent authority with whom he was holding converse. Although differing from Prof. Newman in our understanding of the moral bearing of free-love theories, we hail with deep satisfaction the advent of an opponent who can sink personalities in the desire to get at the truth.

That there is much radically wrong in the old systems upon which society is at present organized, no one will deny. The only hope for its improvement will come through a frank and fearless treatment of the subject. Humanity is the only product of Nature that has not been pruned, grafted, cultivated, or bred in accordance with scientific knowledge; all else has shown the result of persevering and skilful manipulation. The whole human family may be said to be in the same category with Topsey: she "growed." They have been left to the natural process of evolution, not because these principles in their application to humanity were not understood, but simply because of indifference to, and lack of appreciation of, their importance. Plato makes Socrates criticise the wisdom which devoted so much skill and knowledge to the development of improved races of horses, birds, and dogs, while neglecting the more important work of perfecting the human race; and he remarks upon the extremely perfect government we should enjoy, if these rules should be applied to mankind.

We wish briefly to notice some of the points in Prof. Newman's letter.

Under the second head, he concludes that, as Mrs. Woodhull "must utterly disapprove of any marriage vow of faithfulness to one husband," she does aim, therefore, to "go backward into the state which preceded legal marriage," which he claims to be "savage freedom." Such may possibly be fairly deducible as an opinion, but we do not think it logical. It would hardly be admitted by radicals that they had, in declaring their freedom from mental bondage and creeds, relapsed into the condition of ante-Christian savagery, because they disclaimed any belief in the atoning power of Christ. Mental freedom is the natural outgrowth of liberal, advanced Christianity, which was in its order evolved from crude forms and systems of worship. Yet he whose present stage is evangelical Christianity sees only heathenism and infidelity in free thought. We regard free love as the natural outgrowth of the marriage system, looking upon it as progression and not retrogression. We think all the logic is on this side of the question—always distinguishing between free love and free lust, which is its antithesis; as we should between sincerity and hypocrisy in discussing the merits of Christianity.

Prof. Newman understands free-love theories to maintain that the right of judging "whether there is adequate cause for separation must be retained jealously by the individual, and never be delegated to a legal tribunal." Pray, why should it not be so? What is a legal tribunal? It is a man, or a body of men, whom society, the people (men only, women not being a portion of the people in making laws, yet still being bound to obey them), have chosen finally to determine such questions as shall be submitted to them. The opinion of this man, or body of men, is all we get, when we have the "decision of the legal tribunal." We will still further suppose it to be the opinion of the larger body of men who have made the laws; yet does it follow that we have reached the truth? or that justice has been done? The decisions upon the questions under discussion would in the greater portion of this country be in favor of the monogamic marriage; in some other countries in favor of polygamy. We desire to find absolutes, if any there be. Now if right is dependent upon the party which happens to be in the ascendency, its standard will be constantly changing. If there is an absolute standard of right and justice, the decision of a legal tribunal will make no difference. It will not do to claim that courts do enforce right, as law is liable to be changed to-morrow by the accession to power of the minority of to-day. Do we individually acknowledge the right of any tribunal to decide our domestic affairs? Every one considers himself competent to decide what his life shall be. Law and courts, like the Orthodox hell, are for everybody except ourselves and our immediate families.

The fourth and eighth divisions of Prof. Newman's letter treat of collateral issues, and depend upon the decision of the truth of the principles of social freedom. One thing is certain: truth does not exist by reason of our belief or disbelief, our knowledge or ignorance. Eternal laws operate just the same, whether we are cognizant of the fact or not. Nor will a knowledge of the truth by us change the operation of Nature's laws, which will continue to produce their results just the same after we comprehend them as before. It is none of our concern where truth shall lead us; we think some of the present conclusions of radicals would have shocked our sensibilities, if we could have seen them fully evolved, when we were first breaking away from mental slavery.

Prof. Newman gives a rather arbitrary definition of prostitution. "Presenting oneself for indiscriminate sale" is a special application of the word, and does not comprise its full signification. There is no such thing as sex in prostitution. Men and women may prostitute their bodies or faculties in various ways, and for other reasons than gain. Mrs. Woodhull claims that the woman who marries for a home, and thereby sells herself for life, is morally worse than she who only sells herself for a limited period. Is not this true, whether we define it to be prostitution in both cases or not? In the one case law enforces the sale; in the other it punishes, as a crime, a less demoralizing act. We do not care what term is used to designate the condition; we only want to show that whatever offence against good morals may be involved is fully as flagrant in one case as in the other.

We think Mrs. Woodhull shows a commendable spirit, in her "determination to raise woman to the level of the brute;" however much it may grieve us to acknowledge the fact, it is true that in all respects pertaining to the reproduction of the race humanity is below the standard that is maintained by and for the brute creation. This must be apparent to all who will consider the subject. No female brute is in such abject slavery as to have maternity forced upon her; nor do they prostitute their sexual functions to other than their legitimate uses, thereby making accidental progeny possible. "Brutes have no care for the moral and mental state of their offspring." Yet man, observing the laws of reproduction, and respecting brute sovereignty, breeds stock of which he modifies and changes the natural disposition, and produces desirable traits of character in the original stock. How much more ought to be expected from the human intellect, so much more plastic than that of the brute?

Prof. Newman's proposition "that all antiquity regarded marriage as the beginning of civilization," and that "to outgrow it is to go back to the state of the brutes," will not amount to evidence, unless it can be verified and proven by results. It would be just as fair for Christians to claim, as they do, that Christianity was the beginning of civilization, and the abandoning of that for something which we deem a higher and more comprehensive faith is to go back to heathenism. Christianity, marriage, and civilization were evolved from previous preparatory conditions, neither being the cause of the other, but all the outgrowth of the necessities of humanity. The difficulty comes from regarding them as ultimate conditions, rather than way-stations in human progress.

Mrs. Woodhull writes, says Prof. Newman, "as if it were a certain scientific fact that children were born murderers, drunkards, and other criminals;" to this he apparently takes exception. We think that scientific minds are all agreed upon this point: that all these traits of character are transmissible, and that the new life partakes largely of the idiosyncracies of the parents. One thing is self-evident; namely, that better children will result from the observation of the laws governing reproduction than from a total disregard of their application.

Advocates of social freedom claim that the laws governing marriage, and the present status of woman, make any progress in this direction next to impossible. Absolute freedom, individual sovereignty, is essential to the development of the highest possibilities of humanity. The transition must be natural and gradual; old systems cannot be abruptly thrown off; the cry of "free lust" at every mention of the words free love tells plainly what would be the conduct of people, if they lived under such dispensation. "We see as we are." This idea of social freedom goes hand in hand with mental freedom. The same general principles underlie both; they stand or fall together; there are no half-way places from which to dogmatize. If individual sovereignty means anything, it means all that is covered by the terms. It allows of no such thing as infringements on the rights of another; who can be injured by its presence? In seeking out truth, we cannot come under bonds to sustain and rejuvenate any of the old forms of worship or customs of society. If they stand in the way of truth, they must step one side. If there is any absolute truth, let us try to get at it, without regard to its consequences. The measures which shall best conduce to the results claimed as following the development of social freedom will be in order for discussion when the value of its fundamental principles shall have been determined.

Prof. Newman presents a sort of mongrel theory that cannot possibly be classed as a belief—"the right of having, besides one's wife or husband, a spiritual wife or husband." This is one part monogamy and one part social freedom, neither wholly one nor the other, consequently not belonging to either; and the advocate of this theory cannot be classed with monogamists or with believers in social freedom, because he is trying to live on different theories at the same time. He is no consistent disciple of social freedom, any more than one who while professing to follow Christ goes in an opposite direction six days of the week is a genuine Christian. Abuses will grow out of every system; but they furnish no evidence of its not being valuable.

These ideas will not be adopted any faster than humanity shall be fitted to benefit by them. Old forms, laws, and customs still have a work to do, a mission to perform, which will never be fully accomplished until humanity shall be so generated as not to need regeneration after they come to years of understanding. J. T. CLARKSON.

AMESBURY, Mass.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ....

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00

Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, " 'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 1.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols II. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HAVE WE

TWO BRAINS?
Dr. C. E. Brown-Séquard.
IS ALCOHOL A POISON?
Dr. Wm. A. Hammond.
THE POET LONGFELLOW.
James T. Fields.
U. S. SURVEY OF THE WEST.
(With Map.) Under Lieut. G. M. Wheeler.
THE HORSE IN AMERICA.
(Illust'd.) Discoveries by Prof. O. C. Marsh.
SAFETY AT SEA.
(Illust'd.) IRON STEAMERS THAT WILL NOT SINK.

These interesting Lectures and Letters, with a careful report of the important papers read at the April meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and at the May meeting of the American Oriental Society at Boston, are published in full in THE TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 19. Price, in sheet form, 10 cents; in pamphlet, 20 cents; or seven for $1.

Circulars, giving full details of the contents of all THE TRIBUNE EXTRAS, free by mail.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE,
THE FARMER'S FAVORITE PAPER,
until January 1, 1875, for $1.
Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

A FEW COPIES ONLY

Of an excellent Photograph (Cabinet Size) of Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, can be had at the office of THE INDEX. Price 50 cents.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK,
FOR 1874-1875.
THE LEADER!!
BY H. R. PALMER AND L. O. EMERSON.

The most successful Church Music Bookmakers of the day. Will be ready in August, and will contain the usual Singing School Course, and a large amount of new and choice music for Choirs, Conventions, and Singing Classes. Specimen pages now ready, and will be mailed, post-free, on application.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per Dozen.

THE EMERSON NEW METHOD
FOR REED ORGANS.
By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. B. MATTHEWS. $2.50. One of the newest and very best of the New Methods.

GUIDE IN THE ART OF SINGING.
By GEO. L. OSGOOD. $4.00.
New and very superior book for Voice Training.

RICHTER'S MANUAL OF HARMONY.
Translated from the EIGHTH German edition by J. C. D. PARKER. Price $2.00.
Prepared expressly for the Leipsic Conservatory, and is a complete and reliable Grammar of Composition.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1874. WHOLE NO. 237.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THE LAST USE of the chromo-premium business, of which we have heard, is that of a disgusted Milwaukee fisherman, who offers a chromo to every fish that will take the bait.

WE MORTALS are soon, without being translated, to have an opportunity of breathing celestial air; for the comet which is cavorting in the heavens threatens to enwrap the earth in its nebulous tail, while its head will still be proudly lifted among the stars. Our astronomers are getting their spectroscopes ready, and mean to capture a deal of knowledge from this unusual visitor.

JOHN STERLING once said (Carlyle's Life of John Sterling): "What we are going to is abundantly obscure; but what all men are going from is very plain." But all thoughtful and truth-loving minds are content with this condition; for of one thing they are certain, which is that their final goal is the truth,—since, though they wander long, they cannot wander from this, that like a great magnet draws us all slowly towards it.

LAROY SUNDERLAND, in the Commonwealth, says: "Health comes to those who WILL it; to those who seek for it more than for hidden treasure. It comes only to those who are in EARNEST, who make it their first business, their first duty, to be well. And, to those who thus WILL and DO the work which health commands, her reward is sweet and pure." Now, such as are sick will please take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

IN AN ADDRESS delivered at the Baptist Anniversaries, in England, Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown said that, although the belief in witchcraft, unlucky days, and other common superstitions had well nigh died out, there is to-day more superstition in England than there was one hundred years ago. He thought some of the prevalent religious doctrines were a strange medley of Paganism, Judaism, and Christianity. A very frank Christian is Mr. Brown, indeed!

ONE OF THE INDEX subscribers writes to us, and says: "I am far advanced in the ninth decade of my existence, and I cherish THE INDEX as no dubious light in my path for the short period before reaching the dark terminus." We are very glad if this paper is able in the least degree to enlighten the way which our aged friend is travelling. His own "inner light," we should judge, shines with no unstinted ray; and may that grow brighter and brighter until the darkness itself, which he anticipates, becomes (if possible) a perfect day!

THE NEW YORK Tribune is aggravating enough to state that, in many of the mountain counties in Virginia, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, where picturesque scenery and good country fare may be found, "board plentiful and good can be obtained for twelve dollars a month!" What an inscrutable fate it is that has made these counties so remote from Boston, where the stay-at-homers cannot reach them at night by horse and steam-car!

ALL INTELLIGENT and sensible people are determined that women shall have as good a chance as men to perfect themselves and to be useful; and therefore they will not long allow any Supreme Court, or City School Committee, to keep women out of those places to which they are eminently adapted and have been elected by an enlightened constituency. We are sorry that Boston, of all places, has not been foremost in placing on her School Committee the wise and noble women who are available to her need.

THE HIGHLY cultured and distinguished chief editress of the Woman's Journal has a sense of humor in her; she not only can write able essays and fine poems for the cause she has espoused, but is disposed to enliven the vigorous contest with her foes by well-put and timely witticisms. Here is one she flashes at Solicitor Healy, who recently argued before the Supreme Court against the eligibility of women to serve on the Boston School Committee:—

Why must all women remain the inferiors of Solicitor Healy? Answer—Because, being women, they cannot expect to rate (expectorate) as he does.

Among Mrs. Howe's other flowers of speech, this last may be called her *Healy*otrope.

THE CORNER-STONE of the new Paine Memorial Hall was laid, in this city, on the Fourth of July. Appropriate services were held on the site of the proposed building, and in the Parker Memorial Hall close by; at which Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, B. F. Underwood, and others made addresses. The whole occasion is reported as having been an exceedingly interesting one. We gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a card of admission to the services from our Investigator friends, and only regret that unavoidable circumstances prevented us from attending. We heartily wish for the enterprise of the new building the most eminent success. In another column will be found a report of the exercises, copied from the Transcript.

REV. DR. PORTEOUS, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says that "America is a nation of tendencies, while England is a nation of results." This remark, as well as some others which this gentleman has made, shows that he has a discriminating mind. But inasmuch as he, being an Englishman, left his native country and came to America to live, we presume that he prefers "a nation of tendencies" to "a nation of results." We certainly do. It is better to be moving on than to be standing still,—if the motion is inspired by the courage of ideas, and the rest prompted by the cowardice that shrinks from necessary change and natural progress. America is a new country; it has a new country's faults and defects, and lacks the finish and culture of some of the older nations. But it has this very courage of ideas which is so desirable; it is not afraid of innovations and reforms, and new statements of truth. It will pardon much to a man who is in earnest for freedom, and who believes in the rights of the individual as against the tyranny of majorities. And whatever else America lacks, it has got far on the road towards accomplishing three results; namely, political, religious, and social freedom.

THE EDITOR of the Banner of Light is "moved to predict that, before another year is rolled up in the ever-winding scroll of time, Spiritualism will become, in effect, the popular religion of the day." Perhaps it will; we are by no means prepared to say it will not. Indeed, it is quite popular to-day, if one may believe the claims made in its behalf. But why this itching desire for popularity, any way? When any doctrines, institutions, or customs become "popular," they are largely obsolete to all thoughtful, far-seeing, progressive minds. We do not expect the truth ever to become popular; it will always be too "new" and "radical" for any but the bravest and most rational minds to receive. The truth always goes before us; we never can catch it and detain it in any form or formula. The radicals of this age will be the conservatives of the next; and a fresh brood of radicals must be hatched from age to age. It always has been so, and it always will be so. The real radical will never stop to consider whether he is popular, or his truth is popular; but he will utter what he believes, and try to live it, whether popularity or unpopularity attend on him or it. What we all need, more than anything else, is the COURAGE OF TRUTH.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Bible-Views of Nature.

BY W. C. GANNETT.

THREE WAYS TO RATIONALIZE OLD REVERENCE.

When a thing that has long been held in religious reverence,—a god, a ritual, a doctrine, a book,—loses that reverence as minds outgrow their earlier belief into one more rational, there are three ways of treating what is given up.

One is to banish it with flat denial, or even perhaps to vilify it. Thus in the first Christian days men treated the deities of the old faith, the Greek and Roman gods. They became demons, powers of darkness and evil. Thus at the reformation men in Northern Europe treated the ritual of the mother church. Down came the images and pictures. The inside of cathedrals, as far as might be, became whitewashed barns. Our Puritan forefathers for a long while would not even read the Scripture in church-service, nor make a prayer at a funeral, because that would savor too much of the Catholic superstition. And thus some men to-day are wont to treat the Bible. It holds much that is absurd and cruel,—therefore they throw the Bible to the winds. This way of rationalism sees no good in the old thing that was reverenced.

The second way sees no bad in it. If the first vilifies to destroy it, the second mystifies to save it. At the renaissance, for instance, when the love of classic lore revived, the scholars of the fifteenth century thus treated Homer, and Plato, and Moses, and Christ, in order to reconcile them all with each other. All were so beautiful, so true,—and yet with such a difference! How explain away that difference? Only by leaving the common-sense of each author, and diving below the sentences to find an inner sense, some diviner meaning in which they might agree. Of course by allegory, by twofold, threefold, fourfold interpretations, they could find anything they wished; and all was easily smoothed out into harmony and beauty. Thus, too, do some men treat the Bible now. Genesis and geology are in stubborn opposition. But let the creation-days be an allegory for epochs, let Jesus' promise of his second advent be mere allegory for the destruction of Jerusalem and the gradual triumph of Christianity in the world, and all is rationalized, if this be rational.

The third method of rationalism is not possible until what is called "the historic sense" is born; which recognizes that all religions grow, and that any given idea or morality must be set back in its native time and place before it can be fairly judged. When thus set back, it recognizes both good and evil in each old sanctity. It sees plainly that there is much to drop, and drops it; and as plainly that there is much to keep, and keeps it. It does not vilify, it does not mystify. Things true and admirable are true and admirable. The crudities are crudities, the cruelties are cruelties; at the same time these may be real, historic germs of other truth and beauty in which we moderns live, and move, and have our moral being. This is the way in which men to-day are trying to rationalize the ancient faiths; and in the presence of this method both the other methods seem crudities themselves.

In this spirit I am going to speak of our Bible,—though not now of the bad in it so much as of a certain good quality it has. There is very much in it to be criticised and unsparingly condemned from our stand-point in knowledge and ethical ideal. The Tom Paine-work is honorable, helpful, necessary—and extremely easy. It is instructive to oneself—until one has accepted the instruction. And then, if we have evangelical friends whose religiousness, we think, will be deepened, whose lives will be bettered by opening their eyes to see their misplaced reverence, Tom Paine-work, made delicate, is still instructive. But they who love by preference, for their own sakes, to point fingers at the poorness of the book, whose personal taste it is to decry the Bible, make one think of Voltaire reviling Shakspeare because he believed in witchcraft,—"There was that witch-scene in Macbeth!"—make one think of men who at the name of Kepler would remember, "That fellow who calculated horoscopes, and wrote a vile prophesying almanac;" who of Newton would say, "Yes, he dabbled in alchemy and wrote a big book on Daniel's prophecies;" of Luther, "Yes, he scoffed at the thought of the earth's going round the sun, and threw his inkstand at the devil;" instead of thinking first and most of the grand benefits for which each name is rightly famed. Their misplaced emphasis recalls those Protestants who emptied and whitewashed their cathedrals. To-day we Protestants of Protestants bring back our images (for we have saints) and pictures to the walls, and court the charm of music and of color, and wonder at those graceless, albeit stalwart, forefathers of ours. The Bible to us is no such book as it is in almost all the churches. It never again can be. But I believe, as our faith ripens, we shall probably turn back for certain things that we have dropped in the haste of first escape; will turn to the Bible again, and to Jesus, somewhat as we go back to the love of picture and cathedrals, not to take them at their old valuations, but at their real, intrinsic values, and honor them for much high worth which now we are apt to overlook; and that, in some of the darkest dogmas of Orthodoxy now decried, we shall see noble intents, foreshadowings of truth.

THE BIBLE AS A PICTURE-BOOK.

In these summer days we live out of doors all we can. We watch the sunsets, and some of us the sunrises. We sit on the doorsteps in the evening wind. We wander in the fields, and listen to the music in the grass, and think how the broad, green continent stirs all over with the life of leaves. The voice of the mountain and the voice of the sea seem calling to us. The showers and the shinings rhyme to each other. The mornings and the nights move on like the verses of a perfect poem. Let us spend our half-hour within reach of these summer-sights and sounds, by opening the Bible and glancing at the views of out-door Nature that lie upon its pages.

Whatever else it is, the Bible is a sketch-book, a portfolio of fine pictures, a book of Eastern photographs. The old monks, copying its chapters before the printing-press was born, used to illuminate their manuscripts with glowing letters and quaint devices set among the words in gold and purple and crimson. But the color and the grace are there already for those who have fresh eyes for the old book. It is self-illuminated, one of the great picture-books of literature. I know none more fit than parts of it for hillside reading, and for woody walks.

One reason of this picturesqueness is simply because it is an old book, written—much of it—in the childhood of the race. The farther we trace man back toward the early times, the closer do we find his eye and ear to Nature. Earth—the solid, painted, sounding earth—that lies about him in his infancy, is giving his senses that experience which only slowly through the ages ripens into abstract and general ideas. Many things betray this early attitude of man. The very letters of our alphabet began as rough pictures of the object that gave them their first names; although the pictures were long ago so clipped and chipped that now in our conventional A B C the old likeness is almost entirely rubbed off, and it is hard for one who has not gone back to their early forms and watched the gradual change to believe the story. So too with the words which the letters spell. Many of our spoken words, traced back to their roots, are found to be mere imitations of Nature's sounds, or attempts to imitate by sound the impression which Nature's sights make on us. They are echoes, sound pictures. Our Webster's Unabridged is a kind of vast whispering-gallery, hundreds of generations long, with the roar of old oceans, and the rush of old storms, and the crash of rocks, and the cries of ancient animals, at the other far-off end of it. We have the grand instrument lying quietly on our study-table, and call it our family dictionary!

Thus it is also with the whole of early literatures. They are picture-books. To read the first books of the earth is like looking from an open window, like listening in the fields. The ideas translate themselves into sight and sound. They gleam and gloom; they shout, and sing, and clatter. Each thought is a thing. Each event is an act. Little abstraction, little speculation. Principles are personified. If there be a theory, it is given in concrete analogies. If there be moralizing, it is given in fable and parable, such as you tell your child. The metaphysics lie in one-lined proverbs, or pithy sentences, wrapping some mystic meaning in a symbol. Discussion all turns into drama. Feeling is always stronger than thought, and the language is full of imagery. All this reminds us of our nurseries, where the children dramatize, and improvise, and symbolize. And this is why nearly all the national literatures begin with poems. Sober prose comes afterwards. Homer comes before the Greek philosophers, and even they begin as poets. The Vedas, hymns to the gods, come long before the Hindu metaphysics. And our own old Norse and German ancestors bequeath to us their Edda songs, the epic of the Nibelungs, the romances of King Arthur and Charlemagne; and little else.

Now our Bible, whatever else it be, is another of these early picture-books of Nature. Its psalms and prophecies, its history, its science, its biographies, its ethics, are written very largely in pictures, and some of these we will turn and look at, if you will.

ITS TWO PARTS, HEBREW AND GREEK.

Properly speaking, however, the Bible should not be called a book. It is a literature containing many books, of many dates, and on many themes; and the first thing of all to notice is that it has two parts, a Hebrew and a Greek part. Nor does the division fall where we are wont to put it, and where it does fall in the language used, between the Old and the New Testamemts; but rather, if we seek it in any one place, between Luke and John. Emerson says that Europe extends to the Alleghanies, and only there does America begin, so strongly has the Atlantic slope, where the first settlements were made, retained the Old World character. If we cross the great basin and the plains to the Pacific coast, we find in California another strip whose men and manners, being largely Eastern born, are again more European than the men and manners of the central cities are. It is somewhat thus with the Bible. That break between the languages of the Old Testament and the New beguiles us. The Hebrew part, instead of ending there, runs over. The first three gospels, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, though preserved to us in Greek, are still works of the Hebrew mind. At John's gospel Greek thought begins, and most (not all) of the Epistles reflect very large elements of Greek thought and life mingled with the Hebrew influence. Then again, at the end of the book, we find another bright Hebrew picture of the Messiah's second advent and the New Jerusalem.

THE PICTURES LIE IN THE HEBREW PART.

The first thing of all is to notice this fact about the two parts, because in respect to picturesqueness there is a great difference between them. The out-door poetry, the hymns and songs, the landscapes with creation, and earthquakes, and spring-times, in them, the idyls of home and country life, the parable scenes, the dramatic appeals to national feeling,—nearly all of these lie in the Old Testament and the Hebrew portion of the New. On the other hand, subjective ideas, abstract doctrine, belong to the Greek and not to the Hebrew. Take out one or two books from the earlier collection, and almost the only formal doctrines left are affirmations that there is but one God, Creator, and Provider; that good and evil get their due reward, and that Israel is the chosen nation,—an idea which blossoms into the Messianic faith by gospel times. Grand themes, indeed, are these, on which grand music bursts out from jubilant hearts, and is wrung out from breaking or indignant ones. But that is it; all turn at once to music and imagery. All is objective. There is an approach to metaphysics in Proverbs and Ecclesiasticus, where "wisdom" is so often spoken of. There is a long-argued speculation in Job. But these very exceptions illustrate the general character I speak of. That Old Testament "wisdom" is usually personified as a woman who crieth at the city-gates and through the streets to the sons of man; and from the niches of Job's high speculation, we gaze on starry skies, and on sea-waves and storms, and watch the war-horse pawing, and the eagle on her crag, and Behemoth lying under the shady trees, and Leviathan making the deep to boil like a pot.

In the New Testament, no idyl is more beautiful than that of Jesus' birthright; but this is one of those due to the Hebrew fancy. No drama more intense than that in which the avenging angels and the beasts of the Apocalypse are actors; and this is Hebrew also. There is even a Genesis in the New Testament; for the Bible ends, as it begins, with a story of creation. At the beginning, the heavens and earth to which God said, "Let there be light! and light was!" At the end, new heavens and a new earth which "had no need of sun or moon, for the glory of God did lighten it." Creation and a recreation. But even here, although it is a vision of the Hebrew mind, we feel a difference between the first dream and the last akin to the very difference we are noticing; in the later there is less of Nature, more of man. The first earth was country; this second a city, "the New Jerusalem." The first pictured a shady garden; we see trees and animals, and a single man and woman wandering among them. The last reveals paved streets, and thronging multitudes of the saved are walking through them. The one story smells of the fresh earth all through; the other gleams with gems, as if the man who fancied it had seen kings' palaces. And this change from the one conception to the other hints the whole long story of the complex society and civilization that have grown up between.

ABSTRACT DOGMA IN THE GREEK PART.

On the other hand, subjective ideas have their home in the Greek parts of the New Testament. We go in doors, away from the outward sights and sounds, and enter human nature when we approach the themes of sin and redemption as they are treated in Paul's epistles. Not that they are very abstractly treated even here. Dramatically, rather; but it is a transcendental drama of the soul: the scene is laid on the inside, not on the outside, of history. And not that the difference is wholly due to Greek influence, although Paul was a man Greek by birthplace and half-Greek by education. By no means. As just hinted, it was partly due to time. The Hebrew thought also was growing more abstract in those centuries of culture, and one would have heard the rabbis in Jerusalem, the teachers at whose feet Paul sat, talking on his themes of grace and faith, regeneration and salvation. Still, so far as our Bible is concerned, these themes and those of the incarnation, the atonement, justification, the great dogmas of full-blown Christianity, have their main roots in his letters and in John; and when one plants the germs that grow to such dogmas, his thoughts are far away from earth in the region of inward speculation. We would not expect to find the landscape pictures very distinct and frequent here; and we do not.

As before, there are exceptions to this general character, and as before they are such as illustrate the character. There are psalms in Paul's letters, but they are no longer of green fields and rocky hills.

They are those passages in which Paul, having climbed up his steep argument, stands on his conclusion as on a mountain-top, and looking out over the dim glory of the future chants how Christ has brought life and light into human darkness; how he has made men free with the liberty of the children of God; how nothing can separate us from that mighty love, and how all affliction of the moment is light before that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. That is the kind of psalm we have in the New Testament. You will find one in the eighth of Romans, and the fourth of II. Corinthians; and as we read, it seems as if we could hear Paul's voice swell, and see his lighted face. But it is not David's tone nor David's face. Paul looks upon a different world. There is another psalm in the charity-chapter, "Though I speak with the tongue of men and angels." Another in the resurrection-chapter, "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." Yet one only needs to turn away from these to some of David's to feel that he has left an intellectual atmosphere where the song reflects preëminently human nature and ideas of history, and gone into an atmosphere where the song reflects far more closely the outward impressions of eye and ear.

JESUS A COUNTRY-BOY.

Or compare Jesus with Paul, and judge which of them loves Nature best. You know a man's talk betrays his origin and occupation. If I come among you speaking of cows, and birds, and trees, you say I am from the country. Talk of books, and shops, and street-life, would mark me from the city. Have you ever noticed how many little signs there are in Jesus' talk that show he was a country-boy? and that he and the friends who followed him were men of the common people? His speech is a perfect mosaic of pictures, and nearly every one is a country-picture. In the parables we see farmers ploughing, sowing seed, dressing their grape-vines, wondering at the weeds in the wheat-field, manuring their fig-trees, gathering in their harvest, bargaining with their hired hands, and having a quarrel when they pay them off. One wants to try his new oxen. Another is pulling his ox out of the ditch on the Sabbath day. Another is leading his ass to water. The prodigal son feeds swine, and his father fattens calves. A foolish farmer is planning to build bigger barns, and another is filling old bottle-skins with new wine. Or we see a shepherd seeking his lost lamb out on the hill-sides, and dividing the sheep from the goats on a grand market-day. In other parables fishermen are drawing their nets, women are sweeping the house, and setting the bread to rise, and grinding meal at the mill. There is a glimpse of white harvest-fields, of a hen gathering her chickens under her wings, of a fox's hole, and a sparrow falling from its nest; of grass, and the lilies, and the birds flying overhead.

PAUL A MAN OF THE CITY.

Now listen to Paul. There is hardly a word like these in his letters. I can remember only some half-dozen allusions to out-door Nature in all he wrote. But on the other hand he abounds in illustrations drawn from city-life, the busy life of crowds. There is much about the soldier's business, weapons, trumpets, fighting the good fight, and winning the crown, and pulling strongholds down. As a model for the earnest Christian he draws the picture of a Roman soldier in full armor standing solidly at his post. We catch hints of the foot-race, the wrestling-match, the gladiator in training, the slave that leads rich men's sons to their school,—all these being scenes from the streets, and circuses, and gymnasia of Greek cities. We hear of heirs and divorces, of fellow-citizens versus aliens, of philosophy and science, of building and foundations and corner-stones. All this is what we would expect from Paul of Tarsus, "no mean city" in that day; from the missionary who took the Christ-faith out of Judaism and preached it for years in Athens, and Corinth, and Ephesus, and Rome. As he speaks to audiences that ask reasons for the faith he preached, he speaks in argument, and has his system of doctrines, and shows book-knowledge. He is the scholar of that forlorn hope. Quotations from the nation's history and the sacred books are all the time upon his lips, and woven into his strange syllogisms. They must be there, for in those Old Testament prophecies, made good in Jesus' history, Paul found strong evidence that he was the nation's expected Christ. David and Isaiah give him his test-proofs; Adam and Abram and Moses furnish his parallels and contrasts; Isaac and Jacob and Elias all do service; Eve and Sarah and Hagar and Rachel, too. Many an incident of the escape from Egypt and the wilderness-experience is recalled, and once at least he quoted a Greek poet, a heathen, to show—do you remember what?—that God is our Father.

Such quotations were not far from Jesus' lips, either. Still, from all this, may we not feel sure that Jesus was a country-boy, one who knew well the hill-tops and the fields, one perhaps who loved to lie upon the grass alone, and think, and bend over the flowers, and watch for their coming in the spring? And that, compared with him, Paul was a student, and a theorizer, and a man of the world, the busy city-world?

THE OLD TESTAMENT (1.) REFLECTS THE LANDSCAPE AND THE PEOPLE.

But we are lingering too long in this newer portion of the Bible which, after all, does not contain the most or the grandest of its views of Nature. They lie in the older portion; and we find them there for the two reasons that it is the older, and that it is all Hebrew. Here we do nothing but ramble through scenes of Nature and life.

We lose much, it is true, in a translation. They tell us, who know, that the Hebrew is one of the most remarkable of those echo-languages I spoke of, and that many a term which is a bright and lively metaphor in the original appears as a plain, prosaic noun in modern versions. But taking what we have in King James' English, have you ever noticed, in the first place, the way in which the sentences run on, reflecting the surface and the climate of Palestine, the occupations and the history of its people? If that little strip of land between the Jordan and the sea—not much larger than Vermont—had sunk as the Dead Sea valley sunk, and we had saved its Bible, we could still tell to-day how the people lived, and what they did day by day, and what kind of a country it was they called their Canaan. We should know, for instance, from a thousand allusions, that it was a land of corn and wine, of fig-trees and vineyards, a land flowing with milk and honey. We should know it was a land of tall cedars, and choice firs, and olive trees. We should fancy it was a land of burning sun, for grass is scarcely spoken of save as the emblem of withering,—"all flesh is grass;" and flowers are rarely mentioned, flowers that to-day are such ever-freshening poems. But that, perhaps, is because the Hebrew heart seems to have felt the sublime rather than the beautiful. Roses and lilies twice or thrice are noticed; but Jesus' little word about the lily, and one or two verses in the Apocrypha and the Song of Solomon, are the only tender words about the flowers that the Bible holds. Instead of flowers gems seem to have touched the sense of beauty more, and many a flash of rubies and sapphires and other precious stones gleams out from the pages. We should know it was a land with a desert near it, and that there had been some terrible desert experience in the people's history; for no pictures are more frequent or more vivid than those of the thirsty, howling, barren wilderness, ofttimes a ruined city, and, by way of contrast, the same place breaking out into blossoms and water-springs. We should know that the people were an agricultural and pastoral people, not a nation of the sea; for their talk abounds in such country scenes as I cited from Jesus' lips, while the ocean, though it furnishes a few grand illustrations, does not enter deeply into their literature, as it does enter, on the other hand, into the thought and language of Greece. For the same reason we should infer there was no large river in their country,—if there had been it would have flowed more often through their poetry. But we should be sure it was a land of hills and mountains, of valleys and gorges, of cliffs and caves,—for these lie all about the book, strewing it with the images of steadfastness, and safety, and strength, and everlastingness. The skies must have been clear and brilliant there, and the night-skies grand; for the sun and stars rise and set so grandly in their Psalms and in the book of Job. They must have known earthquake shocks and raging storms; thunder, lightning, heavy rain, and the beauty of showers; and snow and hail were not unknown to them,—for we see and hear all these "powers of the air" as we listen to David and the prophets. And we can even name what creatures used to burrow in their fields, and eat their crops, and roar at night, or nest in their trees, and soar over the hill-tops.

Must it not be a book of Nature that will tell all this to us incidentally, not of set purpose, but as the language of worship, and entreaty, and moral indignation? It is hymns and prayers, cries of heart-break, fierce rebuke, and hallelujah songs, that tell us this story of Palestine. The ear and eye to which such voices correspond lay very close to the sounds and sights around them.

(2.) IT PERSONIFIES AND DRAMATIZES NATURE.

This actual reflection of the landscape is not the only thing which gives the Old Testament its picturesqueness. We are startled at the boldness with which everything, the most inanimate, is personified and pressed into dramatic action. "The morning stars shout for joy." "The floods clap their hands," and the trees clap theirs. Here is a summer scene: "The little hills rejoice on every side, the pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn. They shout for joy, they also sing." Here is one of a different kind, an earthquake, perhaps: "What ailest thee, O sea, that thou fleddest? Ye mountains that ye skipped like rams, and ye little hills like lambs?" All things are made to speak, and feel, and grandly sympathize with Israel. If he be glad, earth and the skies throb with him; if wrath be on him and disaster, then storm, and rocks, and briars repeat his woe. The captivity of the people is the desolation of Nature, and their return makes the solitary place glad, the heavens drop down, the wolf and the lamb lie down together, and the children "die a hundred years old."

(3.) IT FILLS NATURE WITH ONE MIGHTY FIGURE.

Such expression is foreign to our sober way of looking at things, though we find it beautiful and impressive when we read it in the Bible. Our hearts are near enough to Nature to understand and like such fellow-feeling with it. To the Hebrews it was most natural, for it was connected with the mighty belief they held that the world was the great working-place of Jehovah. He was outside of it, they thought, building it in the beginning, and carrying on its operations ever since. All was of his will, the immediate operation of his hand, or the mediated operation of his purpose. This belief strews the book with a third set of bright illuminations, the most important of all for us on the watch for the picturesque. It underlies every verse very much as some allusion to laws underlies every page of a book of modern science. It was the Hebrew's conception of the universe, —not poetry to them, but fact. It was their science, so far as they had any, and it is most unjust to them to allegorize it all away into modern meanings to make the Bible tally with our science. They were more sincere than that, and doubtless spoke the best they knew, and what they literally believed, in their stories of creation and intervention from on high. To them it was no unusual intervention. Nature was full of the comings, and goings, and speakings, and direct doings of Jehovah.

"Sweet were the days when Thou didst lodge with Lot,
Struggle with Jacob, sit with Gideon,
Advise with Abraham, when Thy power could not Encounter Moses' strong complaints and moan.

"One might have sought and found Thee presently
At some fair oak, or bush, or cave, as well;
Is my God this way? No, they would reply,
He is to Sinai gone, as we heard tell.
List, ye may hear great Aaron's bell."

We smile at George Herbert's verses, but he would not have smiled. It is this belief, even more than the reflection of the sky and hills in the flowing chapters, even more than the quickening of those hills into frisking lambs, and that sky into a singer's face, that impresses us so much in the Bible-view of Nature. Everything stands for God, is from him, and for him, and is his! One great hand possesses all, does all. "The trees of the Lord are full of sap," —how homelike that sounds, as if the earth were God's cottage-door. "The hills of the Lord are full of strength." "The sea is his,—he made it, and his hands formed the dry land." "He counteth the stars, and calleth them all by name." The light is "his garment," and the clouds "his chariot." The thunder is "his voice, shaking the wilderness and making Lebanon to skip." He sends the lightnings; "they go and say unto him, Here we are." The animals are his animals,—"all wait upon him; the young lion roaring seeks his meat from God, and he provides for the raven his food when his young ones cry unto God, and wander for lack of meat." Man, too, though little lower than the angels, is his,—"He is one God, and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand."

THE HEBREW'S SECRET.

No wonder that we still go to the Bible for our poems, and to freshen our religiousness, when it is the home of thoughts like these,—the actual home of them, where such allusions play in and out like children, and fill the windows with their faces for the reader passing by. Or, rather, it is One Face that we see all the time. For the unique fact about the Bible-view of Nature is that the Hebrews at a very early time in their history seized the thought of Oneness in Nature in connection with the Life and Will there. That is the secret which makes the Hebrew seem to us the great religious nation of old time. Other peoples had the life and will conception, but they had not the clear oneness. Other peoples reached the oneness, but then they had greatly dimmed the life and will: the Hindus, for instance, to whom the gods became the vague Allness; and the Greeks who reached their monotheism slowly through their philosophers. But the Hebrew grasped the thought of unity before he lost his child-sense of this other element. It is this combination which makes him refer, with such startling simplicity, not only creation and the stars, but the trees and the cornfields and the wild asses, to Jehovah. Not only the strange sea, but the familiar land; not only the earthquake, but the summer-shower; not only the blasted nation and the pestilence, but the uprisen nation and the gladness of the clean heart. And it is this constant reference which gives the pervading grandeur to the Old Testament view of Nature. Everywhere we feel the stir of one Mighty Figure exacting righteousness,—stir, and figure, and righteousness, conceived according to that day. So the grandeur is austere, reverend to awfulness; that of a king on his throne, or moving forth resistless. The prompting is to "fear the Lord, the great Creator."

But the best of the conception was that it ensured a noble future to religiousness. Man's will and life had but to grow more moral, social, humane, and brother-like, and to his thought the one life and will, lord of Nature and of nations, was sure to change character also, and grow more loving, more father-like, more the God of individual men and women. The stern grandeur would soften into tenderness. And accordingly we find, from the Mosaic to the prophet's conception, a marked advance in this direction, heralding and making wholly natural the still deeper, tenderer faith with which Jesus and his contemporaries called God their Father in the Heavens.

WE ARE HEBREWS STILL.

No wonder, then, that the Bible, the holy literature of that little Asian tribe, is still a holy book for Europe and America, the length and breadth of continents. Its vision of the God in Nature is still the vision which religiousness confesses. And as one likes to meet a man more religious than himself, and bows before him, even if simple and ignorant and queer, because the religion makes his queerness poetry, and his simpleness a kind of greatness—so we feel strengthened and upborne by thinking about our Blue Hills as "hills of the Lord," about our apple trees as his trees, about his lightnings in the skies, and his locusts in the humming fields of our New England summer, though the phrase is odd as well as holy to nineteenth century ears.

Not so odd to the heart, after all, and not so very odd to the head either, save in those middle moods between a deep thought and a shallow thought. The deepest and the lightest thinking seem to agree in referring all to "God." Neither the savage nor the man of ripest life and science is apt to fancy himself an atheist. Eastern travellers tell us that the Arabs, who are modern cousins of the Hebrews, still talk in the Old Testament style of their race. If a pestilence comes among them, or if their flocks increase more than usual, if their crops prosper or fail above the common measure, if the storm is very violent, or the rain comes out of season, the outstretched hand of God is in it. One dreams a dream. In the morning he tells his friends that God spoke to him in a vision of the night, saying, "Do thus and so." And an Arab historian still would fill his book with tales like those in Joshua, of God helping Israel to win battle-fields.

Are we not Arabs yet among ourselves? What ardent belief in miracle, and special providence, and private inspiration still! Men pray yet for rain. Men pray yet that heretics may be silenced. In war both armies pray for victory, and King William would give the glory to the God who has prospered German soldiers. Perhaps we would neither pray nor send such telegrams. But when the sudden joy, the sudden woe—a baby's birth, a death—comes into the life of any of us; when it is our boy who goes to battle, and stays there; or when we suddenly see great beauty in a face or in a mountain view; or when we hear of some vast law discovered to be playing out its eternal life through the spaces of the universe,—does not every one know how the instinct hidden in his heart leaps in the old way to his lips, and words the words "My God!"—words them, because that names not the feeling only but the flash of conviction. The One Life is in it, the One Will is somehow working there. Theodore Parker was accounted a rationalist; but they say who knew him that he never saw a new thing striking to his sense, but the thought "My Father in Heaven" was his greeting to it. Diderot was called the French atheist, and probably did not object to the name. But one day, walking in the fields with a friend, he plucked an ear of corn, and fell a-musing over it. "What are you doing?" asked the friend. "Listening," was the reply. "Who is speaking to you?" "God." "Well, what does he say?" "He speaks Hebrew. The heart comprehends, but the understanding is at fault." It was the old Hebrew in these men, or rather it is the dim child-of-God sense in them, and in the Hebrew, and in us all.

BUT WITH A DIFFERENCE.

When, however, this recognition of the One-in-All begins to interpret itself, the interpretation is an ever changing process,—ever changing, never doubt, for ideas still better suited on the whole to excite religious feeling. Religious feeling changes little. But of the change in ideas there can be no denial from the most conservative. Science is simply better, and better, and better understanding of fact; and our science alters almost every specific statement about Nature in the Bible, from the word-creation of the first heaven and earth in Genesis, to the sudden clashing descent of the new heaven and earth in Revelation. The first becomes a process of eternal evolution in the past; the second becomes the gradual ascent through the ages yet to come,—the continuous aspiration of the earth to be a heaven, and of all within it to do the perfect will. Eden and its fallen exiles, universal flood and Babel-scattering, chosen nation and Sinai-revelation, inspired prophet and incarnate son, with all the host of miracles which in such atmosphere of thought was but a supplementary course of Nature,—all this our science puts aside to replace each statement with some truer statement which the earth itself furnishes to mind that has lived upon it two thousand years longer than the Hebrews had. Every statement, because a truer, is felt to be a grander one.

If one asks, How then do we reconcile this blotting out of Bible record with that appreciation of the Bible? this is our answer: Those ideas which have been outgrown need not and ought not to be appreciated any longer save as poetry, save as we appreciate and enjoy child-prayers and child-thoughts of God. But while much has vanished from belief, that main idea of all, that Hebrew secret, has only changed for most of us by vastly expanding, deepening, intensifying its meaning, and it is to that we bring our reverence,—the conviction that God acts here and now; that Nature and our lives are full of him; that everything that happens begins and ends in universal providence. We cannot go outside of that great Hebrew thought, though inside of it science has rearranged for the better almost every single fact of Nature.

True, as to that idea also, we are not exactly at the ancient stand-point. The ancient thought he understood God's being, not his ways; the modern claims to understand his ways and not his being, and to know his ways but very little. The ancient personalized Nature; the modern naturalizes person: that is, to the forefathers Nature was the unknown, which they would fain explain by the known element person; to us person, both in man and God, is the unknown, which we would fain explain by what we know of Nature. When they said, "There is one God," they spoke not quite our meaning when we say, "God is one." But now as then, when behind the laws we stop and gaze upon the eternal force, still the unknown force within our consciousness claims kindred with that unknown everywhere, and of it as of ourselves we say life, will, or we cannot speak at all. It is a poor name,—yes. The grandeur is that our name is a poor name for the fact! The truer way to name it is, "If not will, infinitely more." But what to us is more, what higher? We can fall back dumb and bowed, or we can climb as high up on the truth as we may, and call the force, will,—its order, wisdom,—the progress in its ordered working, goodness. And then we have to-day as in the Hebrew day for our oneness, "Jehovah, I am that I am," and "I am the first and the last, the beginning and the end." And He makes the light, and creates the darkness, and sends our lightnings, and makes our grass grow, and our hearts beat, and our homes glad,—and is our God!

How can we ever go beyond, outside of, that Hebrew thought which makes the Bible holy?

It is that thought which makes the universe holy, and this place holy, and this minute holy, and you, and me.

RELATION OF THE BRAHMO SOMAJ TO HINDUISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

(From the Theistic Annual of the Brahmo Somaj.)

If, from what I have said, it be understood that the whole system of religion recognized by the Brahmo Somaj is made up of borrowed ideas from different systems of belief, there cannot be graver misapprehension. There has been an originality of religious genius in the Somaj, and a depth of spiritual development among its followers, which alone could enable them to find the deep principles and experiences of their souls crystallized within other systems of religion. There is not the least doubt that in these days the speculative atmosphere of the world is so overcharged with various influences, both ethical and religious, produced by conflicting schools of thought and belief, that a modern inquirer, in his honest pursuit after truth, cannot but unconsciously imbibe some of them. Thus, much of the Hindu and Christian influence, to which I have alluded, has been imbibed by the Brahmo Somaj. But the relation of the principles of that institution with those of Hinduism and Christianity does not in any way compromise its originality, its indigenous growth and spirituality, but proves, on the contrary, that the deepest experiences of the souls of men in all ages have been the same. And it also proves beyond doubt the catholicity and universality, in origin as well as in ideas, of the Brahmo Somaj, which some men would fain identify with a particular sect or community.

It only remains to conclude by examining the tendencies of the Brahmo Somaj in relation to Hinduism and Christianity. It has been prophesied, by some far-seeing men, that the Somaj would in time either merge into the Hindu religion or into the Christian Church, and that it cannot long remain an independent body as at present. This statement is not to be lightly passed over. There are indeed two rocks through which the Somaj has to steer; and in avoiding the Scylla of Hinduism, we may be shipwrecked on the Charybdis of Christianity. The danger ought to be clearly seen and known, especially at the present time. Are we Christians? No, we are not. If without the divinity of Christ, without the infallibility of the Bible, without a historical revelation, without miracles, prophesies, sacraments, people may be called Christians, you may call us so. Yes, you may call us so, but I doubt if those who give any meaning to that name will like to share it with us. Are we Hindus? Yes, nationally, socially, we are. The Brahmos take pride in calling themselves Hindus, so far as the name of their country goes, so far as their ancestry and the society of their countrymen among whom they live are concerned.

But religiously Brahmos are not Hindus. Religiously they are Hindus as much as they are Christians; they are neither the one nor the other; they are plain Brahmos only, plain theists. If discarding the authority of the Veds and Purans, of the Rishis and incarnations, of the Brahmins and sacred law-givers; if discarding idolatry and caste, astrology, and incantations, and all that is superstitious or false in Hinduism, can make a man a Hindu, you may call us Hindus. But I doubt very much whether those who impute any sacredness to that name will ever care to call us so. The name Hindu, apart from its social and national import, carries a peculiar religious significance, with which we cannot honestly identify ourselves. But some think they can. And who are those? They are some enrolled, professed Brahmos. Here is a significant tendency of the Brahmo Somaj. Behold a number of Brahmos calling themselves Hindus in religion, their faith Hinduism, and calling the Shastras their Scriptures! Is not the prophecy to which I have alluded founded upon some possibility of fulfilment? Nay, one section of the Brahmo Somaj have already gone back to Hinduism. Since the passing of the Native Marriage Act, a number of the Brahmos belonging to the Calcutta Brahmo Somaj have found themselves in the most uncomfortable position. This law being virtually intended to legalize Brahmo marriages, which do not conform to the Orthodox rule, and cannot, therefore, be considered Hindu marriages; and there being many Brahmos who honestly eschew the religious significance of the Hindu name, our friends feared lest, by calling themselves Brahmos unconditionally, they be outlawed from Orthodox society, and lest they be obliged in marrying their children to take advantage of the new law. On the other hand they could not venture to call themselves Hindus unconditionally, because that would be too shameless. So they have been trying to make the two ends meet, by ingeniously proving Hinduism and Brahmoism to be identical. They call themselves Hindu Brahmos. Here I cannot but call to mind some people who style themselves "Brahmin Christians," and others who style themselves "Christian Brahmos." Of course the world is fertile in many things, and not least in such anomalous beings, however you may call them, or they may call themselves. If Brahmos are Hindus, and Hindus are Brahmos, and if Brahmoism and Hinduism have sprung from a common stock, why should Orthodox society persecute the Somaj? why should there be any excommunication, any self-sacrifice, above all, any Native Marriage Act? There are Brahmos, we know, who will not object to be anything before anybody; but whether real live Hindus will call themselves Brahmos, or call such Brahmos Hindus, is quite another question. . . .

Will those leaders of what is called the Conservative Somaj, who have taken upon themselves to prove that the whole religion of the Somaj is derived from Hinduism, be good enough to answer whether in much they have written they have caught their inspiration not from Vyas and Shunbeer, but from Cousin and Kant? Is not much of the best of their productions often only a transcript of the ideas of certain European and Christian philosophers, whose books they have read at second hand as translated into English? I personally know this to be a fact; every Brahmo knows it, though everyone will not admit it. There is no shame in confessing a fact, but there is great dishonesty in wilfully concealing it.

Let these men freely acknowledge what they have got from Christian Europe, and what from Hindu India. Let them, let us all, vindicate our own conscience, and honestly acknowledge the mixed origin, the catholic ideas, and universal principles of the institution which some, in their unfortunate frenzy, would fain identify as a Hindu sect.

THE NEW CATECHISM.

CHAPTER I.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Q. What is Christianity?

A. It is a name. Grammatically speaking, it is a proper noun, because a proper name.

Q. What did Jesus make the test of discipleship?

A. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Also this: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Q. Was he right in making this test?

A. Some say he was not; that he was mistaken.

Q. What is necessary to constitute a Christian?

A. A man must say that he is one.

Q. Mention some prominent Christians in history.

A. Philip II., Pope Alexander VI., Catherine II. of Russia, Torquemada, and many others.

Q. Why were these people Christians?

A. Because they called themselves by this name.

Q. What is the difference between a Christian and a Buddhist, or Mohammedan?

A. One calls himself a Christian, while the other calls himself a Buddhist, or Mohammedan.

Q. Were the first followers of Jesus Christians?

A. No, sir. It is now found that they were not.

Q. Why were they not Christians?

A. Because they did not so call themselves.

Q. Was Jesus a Christian?

A. No, sir. Strictly speaking, he was not, although a person eminently to be respected and loved.

Q. Why was Jesus not a Christian?

A. Because he never called himself by this name. It was not in use during his lifetime.

Q. Are "Christian" and "follower of Jesus" synonymous terms, therefore?

A. No, sir. They are not.

Q. Explain the difference.

A. To be a follower of Jesus after the spirit, is to be pure and true in life and character, and to be loving, as he was. A Christian may be all this too, though all are not so; but, in addition to this, he calls himself by the name of "Christian."

Q. Is it probable that this distinction of words will always be kept up and made a bar to fellowship?

A. No, sir. As men come more and more to study realities, they will judge by facts, not by names; and striving together for these, they will develop new and higher forms of life. By whatever name it shall be called, it will be the fuller coming of that kingdom which Jesus proclaimed, and for which Paul labored, which poets have sung, and for which martyrs have bled.—Liberal Christian, June 13.

THE USE OF RELIGION.

BY COLONEL THOMAS W. HIGGINSON.

Colonel Higginson occupied the pulpit of the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society, yesterday morning, and delivered a very interesting discourse on the "Use of Religion." The conclusion at which he aimed was in effect that religion in some form, or under some system, is necessary for the soul of man, and without its presence there will be a void which no earthly good can fill. He thought it impossible, however, to reduce it to any set form or law, as there are scarcely two intelligent beings who will receive exactly the same impressions from any object or from any inspiration. He began by relating a story of a young tutor in the scientific department of a New England college, who called upon him, about two years ago, and very seriously told him that he was afraid his religious opinions would get him into trouble. He was not a Christian, and could not be; neither did he find any evidence, in his researches, of the existence of a God, and he could not believe in the immortality of the soul. He had heard the president of the college say that no man could be promoted to a professorship who was not a believer in Jesus Christ and the other fundamental principles of Christianity. A professorship would be vacant in a year or so, and he was afraid that if he did not sacrifice his own independence and believe against his convictions he would be disqualified. Colonel Higginson said he reasoned with this young man, but found him obstinate to the end; and the only thing he could offer in the way of sympathy was to tell him that it was better to be fit for a situation and not get it than to get it and not be fit for it. The vacancy occurred, and the young instructor gravitated into it as a star gravitates into its place in the firmament. A year after that time, he wrote to a friend of his, who had known his opinions, and informed him that he was about to be confirmed as a member of the Episcopal Church. He had no restraining power or influence, and through perfect freedom of thought he changed his views. Some men, said Mr. Higginson, will change of a necessity, and every person who has watched their career closely will not wonder when the change is announced. Very little surprise was manifested at the course of Brownson, Hepworth, and Stone; their writings had foretold, years before, what was about to take place. But here was a man who had never given any signs of a growing faith, and yet, through natural influences, embraces religion. This want in the soul, he said, we must call religion, for want of a better name; but we do not understand it as Abbot did—"Man's endeavor to perfect himself"—but rather what might be styled simple piety, without any set form or faith. The best reforms were heralded by men outside the church as well as the grandest acts of philanthropy. I remember, said the speaker, when a suburban town not very far from Boston, which had been trying to find an honest man to put into the treasurer's chair, at last settled down upon the only man in the place who never went to church. He was not the more honest because he did not attend at any form of worship, but he stayed away because he was honest. The great sin of the church is hypocrisy, and this the atheist has not got, except it may be in France where atheism has become popular. The answer given by the Paris waiter, who was asked his religious belief by a party of atheists, was given as an illustration. He said: "Gentlemen, I may be a very humble individual, but I don't believe any more than the best of you."

He then cited several examples of heroism in defence of opinions both from Christian and Pagan history, and said that the one sustaining power was religion. Science was not sufficient to satisfy the cravings of the human soul; there must be something softer and more soothing to reach the emotional part of our nature. There is nothing sadder, said Mr. Higginson, than the superstition of irreligion except the superstitions of religion. What can be more unnatural than that a scientific man should try to break down the delicate sentiments of a bright and hopeful daughter, and build in its stead a shaky fabric, the foundations of which are his own conclusions from science; or to impose upon his son the necessity of believing this or that theory when his only faith and religion consist of the dying words of a dear mother, which he cherishes as dearer than life itself? He said he stood for the preservation of religious sentiment, and between the two extremes. He would rather be half way between two parties who maintained on the one hand that two and two made three, and on the other that their sum was five, than to attach himself to either. Speaking of prayer, he said that he was amused to see at a public gathering, about a week ago, a learned divine from a sister city read a very fervent prayer from a manuscript. He would look down upon the paper and catch a word or idea, then close his eyes and appeal to the Deity, as though the Deity did not know as well as he did that the manuscript was there.—Boston Globe, June 29.

THE PAINE MEMORIAL.

The infidels of Boston and its vicinity, perceiving the necessity for better accommodations for holding services to their increasing numbers, at last succeeded in obtaining sufficient funds to warrant the erection of a building to be used in connection with the Investigator, to be named after the late Thomas Paine; and to be called "The Paine Memorial Hall and Investigator Home." The building, which is to be built on Appleton Street at a cost of $60,000, is to be of brick, 100x55 feet, and will contain four stories; the lower story to be occupied by stores and the Investigator, the second to be a large hall to be called Paine Hall, the third to be a dancing hall, and the fourth story to be used for a banquet hall. The cellar is nearly completed, and it is expected that the building will be finished this season.

At nine o'clock, Saturday morning, a large number of the Society of Infidels gathered at the proposed structure to perform the ceremonies. The exercises commenced with the playing of national airs by the Wakefield Brass Band; after which Mr. Horace Seaver, editor of the Investigator, deposited the tin box containing a copy of the original circular of the trustees, photographs of the trustees and employés of the Investigator office, a copy of the deed of Mr. James Lick, of California, a copy of the trial and imprisonment of Mr. Abner Kneeland, the daily papers of the day, the last issue of the Investigator, copies of the Banner of Light, and THE INDEX, specimens of fractional currency, and gold and silver coin of the United States, a general review of the liberal cause, an address to the future generation by Mr. Horace Seaver, a programme for the day, and a ticket of admission. He made a few remarks, referring briefly to the life and character of Mr. Paine, and stating that it was by his efforts that the building was to be built. It was to be used for social enjoyment, and to be let to any one who wished to hire it. A song, "Paine's Ode to America," was sung by the audience; after which the exercises adjourned to the Parker-Memorial Hall, near by, which was filled to its utmost capacity by the multitude from the outside, and continued by an original march, "Triumph of Liberty," dedicated to Thomas Paine by Mr. W. S. Ripley, leader of the band. Remarks were made by Mr. J. P. Mendum, who gave a brief history of the life of the Investigator.

A meeting was held several years ago by the friends of Thomas Paine, and stock subscribed to the amount of $70,000 for a building to his memory. They applied to the Legislature for a charter, but were unable to obtain it, and the society gradually fell off; and in 1839, when Mr. Abner Kneeland left Boston, the society had entirely broken up. In 1844, the Infidel Society was formed, and held regular weekly meetings, and soon numbered eighty members. This society prospered for several years. They, also, sought a charter and were refused. A few years later, in March, 1871, a circular was issued to friends of the cause, and now they are to have a building of their own. The hall is to be free to all, subject to no creed or class, and any party can have it upon reasonable charges. It was called "The Paine Memorial Hall" by request of Mr. James Lick, of San Francisco, California, who has liberally helped the cause, and by whose last contribution of $20,000 it has been commenced.

A song, "Thomas Paine, the Patriot of 1776," written for the occasion, was sung by the Charlestown Quartette Club in a fine manner; after which Mr. Horace Seaver delivered a short address on Thomas Paine. An ode, "The Author-Hero of the Revolution," was sung by the quartette, and addresses made by B. F. Underwood, Mrs. Laura Cuppy Smith, Mr. Jamieson, G. L. Henderson, of Minnesota, and Dr. Brown, of New York.

The address of Mr. Jamieson was very radical, he asserting that he did not believe in God, Jesus Christ, or the Bible. The exercises closed soon after twelve o'clock by a song, "The Freeman's Shout," by the company, with an accompaniment by the band.—Boston Transcript, July 6.

CHINESE SENTENCES.

FROM CONFUCIUS.

—Sincerity is the way of heaven. The attainment of sincerity is the way for men. To this attainment there are requisite the extensive study of what is good, accurate inquiry about it, careful reflection on it, the clear discrimination of it, and the earnest practice of it. Let a man proceed in this way, and, though dull, he will surely become intelligent; though weak, he will surely become strong.

—What needs no display is virtue.

—Learn the past, and you will know the future.

—Worship as though the Deity were present. If my mind is not engaged in my worship, it is as though I worshipped not.

—Let there be daily renovation. What truly is within will be manifested without. By nature, men are nearly alike; by practice, they get to be wide apart.

—Is there one word which may serve as a rule of practice for one's life? Is not reciprocity such a word? What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others.

—He who speaks without modesty will find it difficult to make his words good.

—If one cannot rectify himself, what has he to do with rectifying others?

—A man should say, I am not concerned that I have no place—I am concerned how I may fit myself for one. I am not concerned that I am not known—I seek to make myself worthy to be known.

—Virtue is not left to stand alone,—he who practises it will have neighbors.

—To see what is right and not to do it, is want of courage.

—Fine words and an insinuating appearance are seldom associated with true virtue. Recompense injury with justice, and kindness with kindness.

—Employ the upright and put aside the crooked: so can the crooked be made to be upright.

—Heaven penetrates to the bottom of our hearts like light into a dark chamber. We must conform ourselves to it till we are like two instruments of music tuned to the same pitch. We must join ourselves with it like two tablets which appear but one. We must receive its gifts the very moment its hand is open to bestow. Our irregular passions shut up the door of our souls against God.

—With coarse rice to eat, with water to drink, and my bended arm for a pillow,—I have still joy in the midst of these things. But riches and honors acquired by unrighteousness are to me as a floating cloud.

—Is virtue a thing remote? I wish to be virtuous, and lo, virtue is at hand!

—They who know the truth are not equal to those who love it; and they who love it are still below those who find delight in the practice of it.

FROM MENCIUS.

—The great man does not think beforehand of his words that they may be sincere, nor of his actions that they may be resolute; he simply speaks and does what is right. The great man is he who does not lose his child-heart.

—Wherever the superior man passes through, transformation follows; wherever he abides, his influence is of a spiritual nature. It flows abroad, above, and beneath, like that of heaven and earth.

THERE WAS an old preacher into whose hymn-book a bad boy pasted the old song:—

"Old Grimes is dead, that good old man,
We ne'er shall see him more."

On opening the book one day, before sermon, his eyes fell on this production. He gave out the first verse and then paused with surprise. He wiped his spectacles, read it again, and said, solemnly: "Brethren, I have been singing out of this book for forty years; I have never recognized this as a hymn before; but it's here, and I ain't agoing to go back on my book now; so please raise the tune, and we'll put it through, if it kills us." A great many theological dogmas are held and persisted in on precisely the same principle.

PURCHASE IN THE CHURCH.—The rector of Merthyr Tydvil has been preaching on this subject. He described the traffic, and stated that it extended to 6,600, or about one-half, of the parishes in England. Looked at from a spiritual point of view it was a frightful, an abominable, and a ridiculous thing. There was really nothing to prevent a joint-stock company of High Churchmen, Low Churchmen, Broad Churchmen, or even Jews, from buying the advowsons and next presentations of more than half of all the livings in England and Wales, and so in one day take steps to secure to themselves and their own views 6,600 parishes.—London Graphic.

Poetry.

THE FACES ON THE STREET.

BY STELLA OF LACKAWANNA.

There is hunger in the faces
That we meet—
Helpless hunger in the faces
On the street;
Not for bread, or wine from Albion,
'Cross the seas,
Not for juices, richly flavored—
None of these.

There is sadness in the faces
Up and down—
Wistful sadness in the faces
Of the town;
Is it poverty, or losses,
Or regret,
Born of unsuccessful struggles
Bravely met?

There is sunshine in the faces
That we meet—
Sunshine in the children's faces
On the street;
Though our lives but gather shadows
As the night,
In the faces of the children
There is light.

There are eager, questioning faces
On the street:
How they probe our thin disguises
When we meet!
How they startle—how they stir us—
Passing by!
Till we turn, and watch, and linger,
With a sigh.

There are flushed and radiant faces
Sweeping past,
With each rose-tint ever deeper
Than the last;
Oh the love, and light, and laughter,
Breaking through!
Oh the nearness of Elysium
To their view!

There are white and suffering faces
That we meet
Pushing through the nameless tumult
On the street;
Shall we follow?—see how hollow!
See how wan!
While our eyes with pity glisten,
They are gone.

There are faces that invite us,
And beguile
Half our fancy's sad divining
With a smile;
Fair, bewildering, tender faces
On the street,
That impel a daring homage
When we meet.

There are faces—how they haunt us
As a song,
When no more we hear the music
Ring along;
How they float along the dusky
Waves of thought—
How they trouble us by coming,
All unsought!

There are faces all around us
Full of care,
And the grooves that tears have hollowed
Slowly there;
Is it penury—or struggle—
Or defeat?—
All this hunger in the faces
On the street?

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 4.

John A. Lowe, $1.50; Scott Stivers, $3; Jacob Reedy, $3; J. B. Austine, 50 cts.; Chas. A. Gould, $1.50; H. T. Appleby, $4; A. N. Adams, $1; B. A. Ballou, $3; John Gardner, $3; Henry Appleton, $3; J. J. Hoopes, $2.75; Myron Child, $3; R. T. Starr, $3; Abner Forbes, $1.15; J. C. Fargo, $1; John Wirth, 75 cts.; Augusta Seeger, $1.50; D. F. Henderson, $1.50; J. T. Clarkson, $1.50; L. Fritsch, 75 cts.; D. W. Payne, $3; E. J. Leonard, $2; Sarah Woodworth, 50 cts.; G. H. Foster, 60 cts.; N. R. Waters, 20 cts.; J. H. Sawyer, 50 cts.; H. Clay Neville, 25 cts.; P. S. Sherman, $1; A. O. Scott, 60 cts.; Jas. Leonard, $5.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JULY 9, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

N.B.—Any person whose name is now on our mail-list will receive a second copy of THE INDEX, mailed to the same address, for a year, on pre-payment of One Dollar. This offer is made to accommodate those of our subscribers who wish to increase our circulation by sending extra copies as samples to their friends.

PARAGRAPHS.

BY W. J. P.

Karl Rudolf Hagenbach, one of Germany's first theological scholars, died last month, at the age of seventy-three. He was the author of several books, mostly pertaining to ecclesiastical history; the one best known, perhaps, being the History of Doctrines.

At the recent graduating exercises of the Divinity School, in Cambridge, there appears to have been nothing specially marked either for ability or for heresy. The class is considered a safe one, theologically. But real theological studies are sometimes just entered upon when theological students begin the practice of the ministry. The end, therefore, is not yet; and prediction is uncertain.

Father Hyacinthe holds fast to his reformed Catholic faith. A report having been started that he had gone to Rome to be reconciled with the Pope, he silences it by saying: "With a willing heart I would be reconciled with the Pontiff,—but upon two conditions; first, that the Holy Father should consent to renounce his personal infallibility; and, secondly, that he should consent to bless the cradle of my child."

The Free Religious Society which was organized in Providence a few months ago has prospered thus far beyond the expectation of those who were most interested in its formation. It has continued to hold meetings on Sunday afternoon up to the end of June, and means to resume them again in September. Its pleasant little hall is well filled with a company of earnest hearers, who are also, we believe, earnest doers of the word.

On a preceding page will be found some interesting selections from an article on the "Relation of the Brahmo-Somaj to Hinduism and Christianity," published in the Theistic Annual for 1873, issued under the auspices of the Somaj. It will be seen that the same parties, and the same arguments, with only the necessary change of names, appear in India as in America. The parallelism is striking, and may throw some light on the question now becoming familiar here, How far can those who have been born and bred in the Christian religion change and develop their religious ideas, and still call themselves Christians?

Prof. L. T. Townsend, of the School of Theology in Boston University, has been giving a series of sermons in New Bedford, on the doctrine of future punishment, which have startled, by the vividness of their presentation of the old horrors of a literal and eternal hell, even some of his Orthodox hearers. It is evident that this dogma is not yet wholly out of date, though few ministers have the temerity to give it to their audiences in such undiluted form as does Prof. Townsend. In these days of mild Orthodoxy there is something to be admired both in the administering and the receiving of this old heroic method of spiritual treatment.

In a general miscellaneous procession in one of our cities, on the Fourth of July, a pleasant and happy feature of the demonstration was the children of the public schools conveyed in large excursion wagons profusely decorated with flowers. But the courtesy and liberality of the occasion were marred by one of the wagons bearing the motto, "Keep the Bible in our Public Schools." Many Catholic children were in the wagons, Catholic men were in other parts of the procession, and many Catholic citizens were looking on from the sidewalks; yet some one, probably some sectarian teacher, had the ill manners to hoist this sectarian device, in utter forgetfulness of the principles of liberty which the day and the celebration signified. It would not be strange if the Catholics should now be disposed to take up the challenge thus flaunted in their faces.

Among the performances of the graduating class at the recent Commencement exercises at Cambridge was an oration on Pantheism and in defence of it, which has called forth high praise from competent critics for its ability and reverent earnestness, and which was received by the audience with an enthusiasm rarely witnessed as the genuine result of a "Commencement part." The orator was Mr. E. F. Fenollosa, of Salem, Mass., a young man of fine metaphysical talent, as this address bore witness; and he spoke evidently from thought and conviction, and not simply to perform a "part" which college rank had chanced to assign to him. It is a good sign of progress in the college and in the community that such an essay, touching upon delicate questions of theology, should be allowed to be spoken on Commencement day. Formerly such a topic was unknown on the occasion, and for a student to advocate pantheism would have been regarded as almost a sufficient cause for withholding from him his degree.

Among those who received a diploma of graduation from the Harvard University Law School, at the recent Commencement in Cambridge, was a young Japanese gentleman, Mr. Ennouye. He came to this country several years ago, when a mere boy, under the care of American missionaries. Being put into an Evangelical school, where special efforts were made to indoctrinate him in the miracles and peculiar Orthodox dogmas of Christianity, his reason was aroused in protest, and he was found to be a difficult subject for conversion. As he said in a recent conversation, he could see no reason why he should abandon an enlightened view of his own religion for a superstitious conception of Christianity, nor why his instructors should convert him more than he them. He has a keen, analytic mind; and, besides carrying on the study of law at Cambridge, has found time for mastering the works of Herbert Spencer, Tylor, Lubbock, and other modern writers, on the subject of the development of religious ideas. He now returns to Japan a believer in Free Religion.

By the death of Charles Lowe one of the rare souls has passed away. Although mention of this event was made in The Index of last week, yet too many testimonies cannot be given to such a man's worth: not that such character needs the testimonies, but that friends need for their own satisfaction to utter them. Mr. Lowe began his professional work twenty-two years ago this month, as associate pastor of the First Congregational Society at New Bedford. He remained with the society only a year, his health thus early failing; but in that short time he won the love of hearts that through all the succeeding years of separation he retained. And his work during that year, especially in the Sunday-school, and in private homes, left an impress which has not vanished. Clear in thought, pure in heart, energetic and self-sacrificing in action, so he has nobly performed and nobly finished his life's service. So fair was he to all opinions, so just to others' motives, so true to the right, so filled with the spirit of good-will, that I think he never made an enemy, and attracted constant friends wherever his lot called him to live. Compelled to fight an insidious disease from the very beginning of his public work, he yet by sheer strength of will and spirit, seemed to keep the forces of dissolution at bay, so that he did apparently a well man's tasks. And, though he has now died at forty-five, he was one of those of whom we may repeat the words, "Honorable age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor that is measured by number of years. But wisdom is the gray hair unto men, and an unspotted life is old age." Blessed be the memory of the man when dead, who by his life blessed so many souls!

NAMES.

The world seems never to have been troubled in determining the real significance and proper application of certain words,—like heathen, pagan, Jew, infidel, sceptic, etc. They have been flung out as carelessly as army mules used to fling out their hind feet; and, like the latter, they have always left a dirty spot where they struck. But how much trouble some people are having just now to determine whether this or that man shall be called "Unitarian," and "Christian." Are these words, indeed, such precious things that we should court them in long columns of newspapers, from one year's end to another, chase them through all Anniversary Week, and get ourselves so very uncomfortable with sweat and dust at nearly every convention of "Unitarian and other Christian Churches"? The alabaster-box that held the precious ointment was no doubt a quite costly box; but when the ointment was spilt we have no evidence that the disciples crowded around, jostled and disputed with one another as to who should have the box. When you get away from Boston, a good deal of the precious ointment is spilt out of the "Unitarian" name; and, among a large portion of our Western people, the name "Christian" has a decidedly bad odor. Don't imagine, dear Bostonians, that we are so very anxious to possess ourselves of your old oily "Christian" or "Unitarian" ointment-boxes!

In the farce of Box and Cox, these gentlemen got into a hot dispute as to which of them should have the hand of Penelope Ann, when a fortune was believed to go with it; and then they disputed as angrily as to which should not have her hand, when it was rumored that she had lost her fortune. Boston people are in the first scene of this farce. "Christian" Penelope Ann is apparently the admired of all the Unitarian Boxes and Coxes in Massachusetts. They court her, lavish their best gifts upon her, are willing to endow her with all their own worldly goods, and also all the goodly virtues of all other religious peoples; swear that she is altogether the loveliest, divinest creature that ever was or ever can be; that without her they and the world are ruined—simply because they suppose that Miss "Christian" P. A. is the possessor of a handsome fortune in her own right and title. But in many parts of the West, I am happy to say, the farce has progressed to the second scene. Box and Cox have just discovered that the reputed heiress is heiress only of a name; that some of her forefathers were very respectable gentlemen, and some were bigots and fanatics, liars, thieves, and murderers of innocent women and children. Her royal birth and great fortune are fictions. She is nothing more than plain Penelope Ann, obliged to associate on terms of equality with infidel and Jew, extra-Christian and anti-Christian, and altogether treated like one born among us. She has her admirers, it is true; but it is equally true that there are plenty of people one meets every day who would feel grossly insulted if it were reported they were in love with "Christian" Penelope Ann.

I hope that before the next great Œcumenical Council of Unitarians at Saratoga, when they expect to ring in the whole known world (except Hepworth), they will have reached the second scene in this Box and Cox controversy; and in the course of the century we may hope to see an end to the farce.

When Mr. Trowbridge was ordered by Mr. McCormick to get up and go right straight out of the office of the Interior, in Chicago, Prof. Swing was so affected by the cruel scene, that, under the title of "Expelled from Paradise," he poured forth his soul in the sublime strains of Milton:—

> "Oh, unexpected stroke, worse than death!
> Must I thus leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
> Thee, native soil? these happy walks and shades,
> Fit haunt of gods? where I had hoped to spend,
> Quiet though sad, the respite of that day."

These words involuntarily came to our mind when we saw the gate called "Christian," that leads into the Unitarian Paradise, slammed by Dr. Cordner, Dr. Hedge, and others, in the face of Mr. Potter, at the last Anniversary meetings.

Oh, if we were only Christians—no, if we were heathens and could call ourselves "Christians,"—then we could enter in through the narrow way to the select company of "Unitarian Christians;" we could have our names printed every year in the Year Book, and eat of the cold tongue and ice-cream at their great Annual Festival in Music Hall, and hear the regular proud mention of the names of the great men who once were Unitarians—now dead,—and how Unitarianism is leavening all science and literature, and feel rejoiced that we were born among the great, if not born great, and get "enthused" to go out

West and plant apple-trees ahead of civilization. But, as it is, we are banished from this beautiful Paradise, and have no place to live in except the outside world—chilly! plenty of light, but no heat! What's in a name? Why, all these aforesaid things in the Unitarian Paradise! What's banishment, but being sent away from all these forever?

But, seriously, it is amusing to watch from a distance, and the stand-point of an outsider, this running fire kept up in the Unitarian ranks over the proper application of the names "Unitarian" and "Christian." Men seem to clutch them with a death-grip, as though the very universe would go to pieces if they should loose their hold on these. Now these names, no doubt, are very respectable and useful in many places of the East and West. In some places they would be the best rallying words one could employ. But I am satisfied that there is no name so popular, no name that will attract so many people and diverse opinions, as the name "Independent." Attempt to establish a society as a Universalist, and you will fail; try it as a Unitarian, and you will fail; but take the name "Independent," and your chances to succeed are doubled or trebled. The fact is, the names Universalist and Unitarian only stand for a partial, limited freedom in the West. They have a decidedly sectarian flavor about them. They are no broader than the name Christian. They do not take in the Jew, nor German rationalists, nor Spiritualists, of whom there are a great many of the unsectarian kind in the West ready to be organized. They are not Christians, and will not be called Christian; but they can be organized under the name "Independent." I know of one society in Wisconsin, only two months old, with over seventy families already, and more than one hundred members in the Sunday-school, that is organized under the name "Independent." In this society there are a few Universalists, some six families of Jews by birth, as many families of German freethinkers (some of whom belonged to the Frei Gemeinde in the fatherland), several first-rate atheists, a good many first-class infidels, a large squad of Spiritualists, besides a good number of nondescripts, in the rank and file. Now these people are united to "promote truth and true religion;" not as Christians, Jews, Unitarians, Universalists, radicals, theists, or atheists, but as Independents. I am satisfied that no name less broad could have drawn so many together. The Universalists attempted and failed. The Unitarians and Spiritualists would likewise have failed. There seems to be no name that is so free from sectarian narrowness, covering so many, uniting all, and cutting off none, as the name chosen. If it is by the Unitarian name that they can conquer in Boston, let them keep it; but they will find it is not big enough, broad enough, free enough, to rally many in the West; and, besides, it is getting smaller every year.

W. H. S.

THE MEANING OF IT.

There seems to have been a pretty general impression, among those who were present at the dedication of the great Memorial Hall, at Cambridge, that the exercises were inadequate to the demands of the occasion. There was sufficient variety in the programme to keep up the interest of the anditors, at least of those who were near enough to the platform to be really auditors, and the commendable brevity of the parts prevented their becoming tedious, perhaps, even to those who could not hear. But in neither the oration, nor prayer, nor in Dr. Holmes' hymn, was any great sentiment so grandly said as to stir the heart of the assembly there, or to be remembered afterwards. We may say that all was good, but nothing was great. The prayer of Dr. Bellows was too ornate and artificial to suit the feeling of the hour. We can but think that he would have expressed this feeling better if he had trusted himself to the inspiration of the occasion instead of reading, as he did, a prayer which he had previously written. Dr. Holmes' verses were unexceptionable—except that they did not reach the height of the demand. They were well constructed, but probably he would not himself claim for them the divine afflatus. They were beautiful, rather than grand; and their inadequacy was especially felt when they were sung to the tune of Old Hundred. Mr. Adams, upon whom the chief burden of the services rested, was wise perhaps in not attempting more than he did. As it was impossible that his voice should reach more than a quarter or third of the people assembled in the Hall, an elaborate oration of the usual dimensions would have become very tiresome, besides prolonging the exercises to an unwarrantable length. Yet it would seem that an orator might have been found in the country who, even in the time which he used (a half-hour), could have said something more befitting the great opportunity. Lincoln's Gettysburg address was but ten minutes long, but it is one of the immortal utterances. Vast as have been Mr. Adams' services to the country, and however much some of us, because of his ability, experience, and character, would like to see him in the highest office of the republic, evidently he was not quite the man to speak the chief word on that occasion. The great diplomatist of the war, perhaps by reason of the very character of his service, and of his temperament which fitted him for that, was not the fittest spokesman for the memory of the soldiers in whose honor Memorial Hall has been built.

Yet we must not be too critical. There is no man living, probably, who would not have felt his littleness, his inadequacy to the height of the demand, standing in that magnificent structure, before that multitude of people, to utter the words of dedication. Nothing but a rare and mighty inspiration could have given the fitting utterance. And such inspiration does not come at the summons of committees, nor at the suggestion of critics. And, though no single utterance struck the high key of the occasion, nor responded fully to what was struggling for expression in the hearts of the vast assembly, still it must be said that the services, by their variety and general interest, and a significance that was felt, though not spoken, had a genuine animation and vitality. The mammoth procession of Alumni and others interested in the college, the mighty multitude of auditors that seemed to fill the Hall when the procession entered it, the impressive grandeur of the Hall itself, the choral music, the gathering of so many who had done military service in the war, the votive tablets to their dead comrades, the presence of hundreds of soldiers' mothers, wives, sisters, to honor the memory of their dead, or still living, heroes,—these were the things that made the occasion memorable, amply covering the short-coming of any individual utterance, and expressing the real dedicatory sentiment of the hour.

But more noteworthy than any failure of individual speakers to reach the full height of the opportunity, and more open to criticism, too, was a general tone of timidity in what was said—a tone amounting almost to apology for the act of building the Hall. Mr. Adams' address, in particular, was in its general tenor a defence of the project of erecting such a Hall in the midst of a University devoted to peaceful pursuits, and intended to be open to young men from all sections of the country. And it was a kind of apologetic defence which seemed to betray that the author did not feel his case to be a very strong one, and to which some at least of his hearers felt he did not bring much ardor of heart. Something of the same timid, defensive tone was apparent throughout the exercises, and was detectable in much that was said at the dinner of the Alumni the next day. In private conversation it was heard still more; and there are not wanting those who openly declare that the University ought never to have allowed the erection of a building to perpetuate the memory of a civil strife, since it has graduates who fell on both sides of the strife, and still makes its appeal for students from both parts of the country engaged in the contest. The truth is, some nine or ten years have elapsed since Dr. Walker, in his Alumni Address, made the impressive suggestion of some memorial structure on the college grounds in honor of the graduates who had died in the Union army; and during these years the Northern people have passed in a great degree out of the sentiment which then made the old First Church at Cambridge ring with the echoes of applause that greeted that suggestion. We have come now to the era of reconciliation; and, because we have come to this era, we are in danger, in our desire and efforts for reconciliation, of forgetting the real differences that made the conflict inevitable, and that gave the glory to the actions of those whom by monumental stone or hall we would commemorate. It is from this spirit of peace-making that so much is now said of the equal heroism, bravery, self-sacrifice, and sincerity of conviction on the side of the South as on the side of the North. And since, so far at least as the two armies were concerned, there was the same fidelity to conviction, the same soldierly valor, the same genuine manhood on both sides, why, many minds are asking, should we not honor the dead of both armies alike?

And, certainly, we should honor them both alike, if to commemorate valor, and heroism, and sincerity, without reference to the cause in which they were displayed, be the sole object of our memorial structures. If the Cambridge Memorial Hall were designed simply to perpetuate the remembrance of those graduates of Harvard who died honestly and bravely in our great war, then there is no valid reason why it should not include the memory of those graduates who perished in their honest devotion to the Southern cause. If this be all, then what a Southern graduate of the college said, after the dedicatory exercises at Cambridge the other day, may become a reality—that he expected to live to see the day when tablets in honor of those graduates who had died in the Confederate service would be placed in the Hall side by side with the honored dead of the Northern army; and if heroism be all that we honor in that Hall, this expectation ought to be realized.

But every body who has had anything to do with the erection and dedication of the Hall would probably shrink back from such an action as that. And this hesitation to accept the logical consequence of this theory of the Hall shows that it is not the real theory on which it has been built. It is, indeed, to empty the magnificent structure of all its real and best significance, to claim that it represents only our reverence for manly heroism and valor. Let the surviving Union soldiers on Decoration Day drop flowers, if they will, on the graves of such of their old Confederate enemies as chance to have been buried in Northern cemeteries. This is but a passing act of generosity and of soldierly regard for a brave and fallen foe, the meaning of which is not likely to be misunderstood. But even this custom were to be deprecated, should it cause us to forget and confound the vital distinctions in aim that separated the heroic combatants. We may be magnanimous and forgiving. But let us not stultify our own past record and empty the war of its moral significance by any action that seems to imply that we deem the actors of the South as worthy of honor as those of the North. There was a difference of cause which is never to be forgotten, however equal may have been the devotion and the heroism on the two sides; and to overlook this difference is to confound and overturn the grandest lesson of modern history.

It is true the talk at Cambridge did not go to this extent; but much of it tended in this direction. The phrase of Mr. Adams, that the Hall honors only "the purity of the motive that inspired these noble young men in a holy cause," is a general statement that, in his own mind, covered probably the very distinction to which we have referred. But unfortunately it is a statement so general that, without some specification of what made the motive "pure" and the cause "holy," it will be claimed to characterize the Southern soldier as well as the Northern. And the specifications which were made in other parts of the address were not such as would necessarily make a cause "holy." In one brief sentence Mr. Adams alludes, indeed, to the institution of slavery as the "remote origin" of the war, but dismisses it with the remark that it was a practice "which no one in the present day will be found likely to defend, and for the inception of which in America neither side was responsible." The things that he does specify and dwell upon as rendering the devotion of the young men to whose memory the Hall has been built worthy of honor, are that they risked all "for the single object of aiding to uphold the fundamental laws of the land;" that they "devoted all their powers to the one patriotic end of helping to hold up the honored institutions of the land;" in a word, it is in patriotism, or in the sentiment that impels to the defence of one's country and its established institutions, that Mr. Adams finds the pure motive and the holy cause that are to be commemorated. But a doctrine like this might exclude from honor those earlier sons of Harvard who bore a noble part in the Revolution against what was then politically their country, Great Britain. Or, if to uphold the governmental institutions of the land be the only honorable thing, then, if the slave-holding party of the South, as well nigh happened, had got control of the government at Washington just before the actual outbreak of hostilities, our Northern citizen-soldiers could have had no honor in resisting their schemes. It is evident that patriotism, wherever it is worth honoring by a perpetual memorial, must mean something more than the defence of one's country and its laws and institutions, whatever these may chance to be. And here in our country patriotism must mean liberty, justice, equal rights for all, or else it presents no motive worthy of respect.

And any survey of our war of the Rebellion which overlooks the fact that it was a contest on one side in the interest of slavery, and on the other in the interest of liberty, omits the one fact that is the strong defence and the most lasting honor of the Northern side. Even though it be admitted that few of our soldiers had at first any appreciation of this issue, they nevertheless did understand that the blow which had been struck against the country was in behalf of slavery, and they felt instinctively that this object of the blow enhanced its criminality; and as the war went on, they came to see clearly that this was the issue, and they accepted it; thenceforward their flag meant, not only secretly but openly, a full application of the principle of liberty to all inhabitants of the land, and the consequent emancipation of the slave was the crowning glory as it will be the historic vindication of the war. We should have little to be proud of, little for which to build memorial halls, if the valor of our soldiers, the blood of our Harvard brothers, had only served to restore the Union as it was, with slavery still in existence, and all its constitutional guarantees still binding. But it is because those votive tablets commemorate a self-devotion not only to country, not only to a conviction of duty, but devotion to a country and duty which meant also justice, freedom, equality of rights, and of opportunity to even the lowest in the land, that the grand Memorial Hall at Cambridge will stand as a perpetual fountain of noble inspiration to the young men who shall be there educated.

And we are glad to note, in closing, that at the Commencement dinner, on the day following the dedication, both President Eliot and General Bartlett in their speeches plainly alluded to these higher objects which distinguished the cause of the North from the cause of the South. The latter well summed up the difference, and indicated the true ground of reconciliation, in saying that the time would come when Southern young men would not stay away from the college because of this Memorial Hall with its tablets in special honor of graduates who were loyal to the Union; but would come there to say, These men fought for our flag, and died for our country, and we can honor them because they saved our country—not that they fought more bravely, or died more heroically than their hostile brothers in the South, but that they had a juster aim and a holier cause. W. J. P.

LETTER FROM KESHUB CHUNDER SEN.

The following letter addressed to the Secretary of the Free Religious Association, and read at the late Annual Meeting of the Association, is presented to the readers of THE INDEX in advance of the Annual Report.—W. J. P.

CALCUTTA, 17 April, 1874.

DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER:—

Accept my love and greetings. To all those who are coöperating with you in promoting the cause of Free Religion in America, and strengthening the ties of brotherly love among the missionaries of truth in distant lands, my hearty good wishes and affectionate regards. I sincerely regret I did not receive your cordial message in time, or I would gladly have sent a response for your May meeting last year. It was perhaps through inadvertence you posted it round the Pacific, instead of via England. Hence the unusual delay. I trust, however, my present letter will reach you in time for your next Annual Meeting. Both from your letter, and the Report of the Free Religious Association you kindly sent me, it is clear that the tide of liberal thought is steadily and mightily rolling onward in your part of the world. The success of THE INDEX is a striking fact. I wish we could get the paper in exchange for our Indian Mirror, which is a daily paper, devoted to religious, social, and political reformation, under the auspices of our church. The evidence you have given of the remarkable activity of the liberal press during the year 1872 is most encouraging. The books you mention, judging from your flattering remarks, are alike creditable to the authors and the spirit of the age, and will no doubt greatly help the development and extension of pure faith. May all those whom God has called to the battle-field fight valiantly and earnestly, and may their examples inflame the zeal of their weaker brethren, so that with able leaders and a numerous band of faithful soldiers, with ample resources and an extended and powerful organization, we may eventually be enabled to overcome all opposition, and unfurl the banners of victory. It is indeed of the utmost importance that all scattered forces should unite, and our roving brethren, unknown to each other, should meet in a common home, and unitedly and lovingly further their common work. Dogma unites men, and forms communities. That we have seen. Love, too, can unite the children of the One True God, even where there is no dogmatic and sectarian tie. This the world has yet to see. May all true-hearted theists in different parts of the world be one in faith, and love, and hope, and combine to hasten the advent of the kingdom of God. Here, too, our church prospers. The Lord is working in our midst, and evolving fresh truths and ideas, for which we thank and bless him with hearts full of gladness. He is so kind and merciful to us and our motherland! How he is cheering and sanctifying the souls of our countrymen and countrywomen! Not a month passes but we have some new tokens of his love. Sweet is it to glorify the God of Love.

Let us, then, brother, join hands and hearts to sing the glory of our common Father, and further the cause of truth in the world.

Believe me, yours affectionately,

KESHUB CHUNDER SEN.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The tone of your article on "The Ordeal of Unitarianism," in THE INDEX of June 4, so delights me that I cannot forbear to add a few thoughts of my own upon the present position of the Unitarian body, as exemplified here in England. With yourself, I go heart and soul in feelings of respect towards a church which has for so many years literally "stood in the breach" in the conflict with the worst superstitions of Orthodox Christianity. Like you, I hold in dear friendship many Unitarian ministers and laymen, and I should accuse myself of the deepest ingratitude were I ever to forget the kind welcome which they extended to me on every side, when driven from my benefice and church at Healaugh.

All this, however, cannot shut our eyes to what we believe to be a fundamental error in the course which the conservative Unitarians are endeavoring to take. I say "endeavoring," because the issue is by no means settled as yet. It is true that, in America, they have been victorious in the matter of excluding Mr. Potter's name from their list of ministers, for his refusal to be labelled a "Christian." It is true that, here in England, the London District Association had succeeded in voting out the Rev. Peter Dean from Clerkenwell Chapel, on account of his theistic tendencies, and his implied alienation from Christianity. But the voting-out in this case has been compromised, or cancelled; and Mr. Dean will still remain to carry on a most successful ministry in that locality. Moreover, the London District Association were so divided in opinion that they prudently based the vote of dismissal upon financial grounds, in order to avoid committing themselves to a direct charge of heresy against Mr. Dean. The subject was well discussed in the Inquirer, and the Board began to think twice about their decision, which has now been rescinded. This is but one incident, out of many, to show that the Unitarian Church is yet in a state of solution on this great question, and that many—perhaps nearly a majority—are unwilling to cast the die which shall seal their fate. Mr. Alfred Preston, one of a long line of honored Unitarians, made a most manly protest in reference to the agitation, and his sentiments were warmly received.

On several occasions I have received private expressions of sympathy from Unitarian ministers, coupled with the sad confession that they were too fettered to speak as openly themselves. I have not the smallest doubt that, were the opinions to be taken by ballot, the vast majority of Unitarian ministers and laymen would vote for "going forward;" for leaving the Christian name optional, and for the utter riddance of all spoken or implied fetters upon perfect freedom.

I see no way for the saving of the Unitarian Church as a separate organization, but in a prompt renunciation of badges which carry more or less distinctive dogmas. The sect is being rapidly disintegrated by departures on either side, to Orthodoxy, or to theism. The illogical position of quasi-Christian is more and more keenly perceived; the hopelessness of establishing the Unitarian sense of Christianity for the Catholic sense is more and more deeply felt. At present, therefore, thoughtful men amongst them have no choice but to embrace Christianity proper, as Maurice did; or to join the Theistic Assemblies wherever they can be found. If this process of emigration be kept up much longer, the Unitarian Church will follow the fate of English Quakerism, which is rapidly disappearing. Clearly, then, the only chance of self-preservation consists in carrying out the principle of liberty on which the society was at first erected. It is true that the early Unitarians no more dreamed of not being or calling themselves Christians, than of being circumcised; but, in so far as it was deemed necessary, they claimed liberty to the fullest extent, and won by that alone, inch by inch, their subsequent triumphs. Why, then, do they not waive the obligation to be called Christians, and let their ministers and members do as they like? Why do they wish to append any more adjectives to their title, when those adjectives are ambiguous, and claimed alike by others with whom Unitarians can have no sympathy? I fear that the name "Christian" has a fascination for them, owing to the long-cherished pride with which it has been used in Christendom. No doubt, at its origin, it stood for much more that was noble and beautiful than for what was mean and revolting. But this is no longer the case; and a name with such fearful associations as those which history has fastened to it may now be honorably repudiated by those who most revere the prophet of Nazareth.

I fear also that there is even among Unitarians a superstitious regard for Jesus,—superstitious only because they have an ideal Jesus present to their minds, and not the real historical one. We are, I think, quite as little justified in describing him as perfect and faultless, as we should be in speaking of him without high regard. Both extremes of detraction and adoration are unjustifiable. Certain it is that Arianism still lingers in the body which started with the New Testament as a divine revelation; and until Arianism be expelled it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the Church to advance beyond its present boundaries.

In all probability I should have become a Unitarian minister, but for the evident fact that their boasted liberty was very much less than was claimed, and for the too manifest Arianism which was, till very lately, the fashion among the Unitarians. Had I gone over to them in their condition three years ago, I should have been soon embroiled in endless controversies, been accused of compromising the sect, and perhaps found myself a subject of a fresh lawsuit concerning violated deeds of trust.

Mr. Potter's manly stand against the efforts to cripple his liberty is only the "beginning of the end;" and I may venture to predict that the Unitarian Church in America, no more than the Unitarian Church in England, can long withstand the powerful moulding influences of modern religious thought. The religion of the future will certainly not be, nor will it be called, Christianity.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, June 17, 1874.

Communications.

THEOLOGICAL ANTIPATHIES.

It may be truly said that no controversies are characterized by such relentless animosity as those arising from different religious views. We all have known, since we received our first lesson in "sacred history" from the old illustrated family Bible, the kind of arguments used in religious disputes in ancient times, and the summary fate inflicted on the vanquished. Those sanguinary conflicts, which some suppose were fought under the approbation of God to vindicate his eternal right to man's homage, have chilled the happy and loving heart of many a child, who has been denied its wonted sports in the fragrant air and genial sunshine of pleasant Sundays, and immured in that gloomy youth's prison called "a religious home," to receive the pious instruction which its misguided parents deemed proper for the "hallowed Sabbath day." Many can remember how hard they tried to believe that the Jews did right in the indiscriminate slaughter of their religious opponents, and how their childish instinct recoiled from the justification of such inhuman deeds.

But the cruel enmity of religious persecutions is not confined to the dark ages of antiquity. The horrors of the Inquisition are fresh as historic facts, and the burning of "heretics," a few centuries ago, was as fashionable as cremation is likely to become in a generation hence. Even in the recent history of our own country, we find the same malignant persecution seeking to exterminate the germ of free thought. A small number of religionists, who are not permitted to worship God according to the inclinations of conscience, flee from their native country, and seek a home in the untamed forests of the new world, where no established church or creed can tyrannize over their sacred rights. But soon the irrepressible tendency to free inquiry produces a dissenter in their midst, and the same men who have encountered such perils and privations to secure the boon of religious freedom for themselves refuse to grant it to others; and the meek, unoffending Roger Williams is driven into an inhospitable wilderness to dwell among savages, because his religious views are not bounded by the narrow horizon of his bigoted fellow-countrymen.

I often have been surprised at the enmity with which the churches treat those who dissent from their creeds. On all other subjects persons will differ more amicably than on the subject of religion. The whole domain of scientific inquiry is traversed by theories radically conflicting; yet their respective advocates do not assail each other with the hostility that religious teachers manifest toward one who may not be able to accept their imperious dogmas. One may believe, or deny, that the moon exerts an influence in producing the tidal phenomenon; that phrenology is a true science; or, indeed, he may take either side of any controversy outside of religion, and receive from his opponents the credit of having honest convictions: but if he enter the pale of theological belief, and attempt to point out what he considers pernicious errors, many cry out, "Hear him not; he hath a devil!"

This spirit of rigid intolerance, which would prohibit free thinking on religious subjects, must arise from the assumption of an infallible revelation of divine truth, which is the foundation of all Christian churches. While the Church claims to be guided by a perfect and unerring inspiration, the persecuting of "heretics" will naturally follow. "Divine rights," whether assumed by king or priest, have always become tyrannies; and liberty has not suffered more from this false idea on the throne than in the church. The acceptance of a creed formulated far back in the venerable past, and sanctioned by long usages, is so accommodating to the mental stupor of persons untrained in the exercise of original thinking, that they gladly receive and adhere to ideas thus obtained, rather than endure the labor and unrest necessary to free their minds from traditional rubbish, and build a new structure of belief from their own resources of thought. And from a law as universal as mankind, that a common experience in any condition or pursuit of life produces a fraternal feeling, it follows that those who have thought least in obtaining their views will have the least inclination to tolerate those who differ from them. While the traditions of the churches are received as infallible authority, and the generous exercise of free-thought denied to the masses, it is but the inevitable logic of such a condition of things that religious intolerance must continue.

It is that earnest and humble seeking after truth, when we have divested ourselves of the pretensions of all party and denominational distinctions, which divests us of arrogance, and cultivates in us respect for the opinions of others. And when theology abandons its dogma of infallibility, and investigates religious truth on scientific principles, then, if the millennium of agreement does not follow, intolerance will certainly cease. H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo.

PROHIBITION.

DEAR INDEX:—

With many others, I have been pained to notice your position taken in the matter of Prohibition.

The bill abolishing the State Constabulary, passed by your venal legislature, was heralded in THE INDEX at once; but when vetoed by acting Governor Talbot no mention, so far as I have noticed, has been made of it. The course pursued may please the Germans, but will not be acceptable, I hope and believe, to Free Religionists generally. I am not able to express my views as they should be on this subject, but am glad that Professor Newman has come up so fully to the work. Free Religion does not mean free rum, any where in my acquaintance.

It satisfies me when you publish both sides. Let truth and error grapple. The subject of Prohibition is one which presses more and more upon all thoughtful persons.

Fraternally yours,
PULASKI CARTER.

PPOVIDENCE, Pa.

[Our correspondent is certainly right in supposing that THE INDEX is willing to "publish both sides" of any and every subject which is discussed at all in its columns; and so fair-minded a man as Mr. Carter will certainly not condemn THE INDEX for having its own opinion even in opposition to those of some of its readers.—A. W. S.]

TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND PROHIBITION.

MR. EDITOR:—

Some who write on the temperance reform fail to distinguish clearly between the simple propriety and wisdom of abstaining from alcoholic stimulants, and the prohibition of the same by law. Questions, to be intelligibly and profitably discussed, should be clearly and definitely stated.

The right of individuals to abstain from the use of stimulants no sane person will question. The desirableness of such abstinence generally few, if any, will deny. Even they who are accustomed to the moderate use of liquors and wines, and who think that in some cases they may be used beneficially, must admit, in view of the prevalence of drunkenness, and of the fact that many cannot use stimulants at all without using them to excess, that great good would result from the universal adoption of the principle of total abstinence.

But whether it is right and proper for the State to prohibit by law the sale of alcoholic stimulants, is another and entirely different question. Many of the warmest advocates of temperance think it is not. Admitting and deploring the evils of drunkenness, and recognizing the importance of going to the foundation and trying, by all moral means, to diminish these evils, by encouraging the disuse of stimulants—not only alcoholic drinks, but all stimulants and narcotics, such as tea, coffee, tobacco, and opium,—which lead to intemperance, they yet claim that any law which prohibits the sale of liquors, or any of the stimulants and narcotics named, and virtually forbids the use of them, even by those who use them in moderation, involves a principle that is fatal to personal liberty, and dangerous to free institutions. On the same principle, they say, the majority may compel a minority to forego any pleasure, abstain from any habit, or conform to any usage, which the former, at any time, may deem right and proper. Of those who think thus I confess myself one. I would no sooner vote for a law absolutely prohibiting the sale, and consequently the buying, of brandy, wine, and beer, than I would vote for a law prohibiting the sale of tea, coffee, and tobacco. Yet I should not like to be considered an enemy of temperance, or an opponent of total abstinence.

Liberals who clamor for "prohibitory laws," it seems to me, do not sufficiently consider the principle which is involved in them, and which, if fully carried out by an intolerant majority, would restore the days of Puritanism.

Your editorial on this subject, in a recent number of THE INDEX, Mr. Editor, I think one of the most logical, sensible, and timely papers that I have read.

In the Banner of Light for June 20th appeared also an excellent editorial article on the same subject, from which permit me, in conclusion, to give the following quotation:—

"These sumptuary laws are a flat contradiction of the primary principles of freedom in citizenship. It is impossible to reconcile the spirit of the two under the same form of government. Sumptuary enactments are the old-time reproduced, the rack and the thumb-screw, the inquisition and its attendant enormities. When private morals require the support of force, whether legalized or arbitrarily assumed, they have become something else than morals."

Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"FREE SPIRITUALISTS."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

May I inform the many liberal readers of your paper that the new "Parker Fraternity" (lower) Hall has been leased by the "Free-Platform Spiritualists" of this city, and that they are having lectures in that place every Sunday afternoon and evening?

W. F. Jamieson, Anthony Higgins, and Laura Cuppy Smith, have already given acceptable lectures at this place on the live issues of the day. We believe in an open field, fair play, and an unmuzzled platform.

The following will serve to show where we stand:—

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

At a regular meeting of Primary Council No. 1, of Boston, Mass., of the Universal Association of Spiritualists, the following resolutions were discussed, and unanimously adopted:—

Deeply regretting that the time should ever arrive that, in order to give any important question its fair and proper consideration, it would become necessary to step outside of any organization of Spiritualists; and

Whereas, The discussion of the social question is either wholly or partially forbidden in many such organizations, thus rendering it necessary for the friends of such discussion, in order to give that question the prominence it deserves, to organize outside of societies of which we are members; and

Whereas, Most of such societies are defining their positions on this subject,—we, the First Primary Council of the Universal Association of Spiritualists of Boston, in order to place ourselves squarely on the record, define our position.

Resolved, That Spiritualism, having already demonstrated to us the fact of a continued and progressive existence after this life, our true mission is the salvation of humanity from ignorance, superstition, bigotry, and oppression, from whatever cause.

Resolved, That, as Spiritualists, we should be recreant to the great trust imposed upon us as recipients from the higher life, aided by the divine promptings in our own souls, did we not make common cause with the down-trodden, whether by political, religious, or social oppression.

Resolved, That true Spiritualists are preëminently the people to grapple with these questions, and their platform the very place on which they should be discussed.

Resolved, That, in the case of any organization of Spiritualists "so pure," "so respectable," or "so rational," that they can be injured by the discussion of the social or any other live question of the day, their speedy dissolution will be a blessing to the oppressed. Their fitting epitaph—"Died of the dry rot."

Voted, That the above resolutions be forwarded to the Spiritual and liberal journals, with request to publish. JOHN HARDY, Cor. Sec'y.

I have the pleasure to announce that the Rev. Dr. C. A. Bartol will lecture for us at the above Hall, Sunday afternoon, July 12. Subject, "The Claims of Spiritualism." Yours for freedom,
JOHN HARDY.

BOSTON, July 4, 1874.

THE STORMS from the Atlantic break with great fury on the coast of Cornwall. There was a solitary inn upon a cold, exposed spot, in a hamlet, on a cliff near the sea, whither one dark night during a tremendous storm of wind, thunder, and lightning, which rocked the houses to their foundations, the terrified inhabitants resorted. The walls were thick, and the landlady was a kind of village oracle. The tempest increasing, terror was upon every face. At length somebody proposed that prayers should be read, and a lad of all work in the service of the landlady—the only one of the party who could read tolerably—fetched a book and began, the rest falling on their knees. He proceeded for a little time uninterruptedly, until he came to the words, "And his man Friday," when the mistress called out, "Why, Jan, thee art reading Robinson Crusoe!" Being piqued at the remark, the boy replied, "An' if I be, missis, I s'pose Robinson Crusoe will keep away the thunder as well as t'other book!" There were but two volumes in the house, and Jan, in his hurry, had brought DeFoe's novel instead of the prayer-book.

THE Working Church (Brother Tyng, Junior) has a long editorial on the irrepressible Cheney-Whitehouse-Tucker-Littlejohn controversy, and comes to the conclusion that it is time to amend the Prayer Book, and insert a versicle in the Litany: "From bigotry and all meanness, good Lord, deliver us."

THE WOES OF PROSPERITY.

DEAR MADAM:—

Have you a word of consolation for such as I? Encouragement I do not hope for. I have lived long enough to see nearly all my hopes and aspirations come to nothing. I have made many resolves to overcome the disadvantages of an imperfect education by study at home; but, alas! such schemes have always failed, and now, at thirty-two, I am hopeless of accomplishing anything, and am often distressed at the utter uselessness of my life, and far from being reconciled to my own mediocrity—if, indeed, I reach even that point. My health is not good; inherited indigestion and palpitation often make my few and light duties irksome to me. I was born in an affluent home. We have many luxuries, a fine piano, horses, carriages, etc.; but that home is in a remote country place, where there is absolutely no society. Church-going, of necessity, is the exception, not the rule. Yet the years go so fast on their eventless course that I am shocked to find my youth gone, and nothing before me but the same useless, unsatisfactory life. I have always wished to become a teacher, and believe I have some qualities necessary to that vocation; but with all my efforts I am well aware I could not pass examination. I am sure, dear madam, you will decide that this is an aggravated case of shiftlessness; but how can I get the energy and ambition, perhaps I should also say ability, which I so much need for success. JULIA.

The above is a verbatim copy of a letter which has just reached us. It is not the first one, by any means, of the same tenor, that we have laid awake nights to think what to say in reply.

We advise Julia to read Jane Eyre over again, and then do somewhat as Jane Eyre did when she ran away from Thornfield. Let her go to some rural district where she is not known, carrying with her letters of introduction to the school committee. A letter so well written as the above cannot come from a scholar very imperfect in the common branches. It would do no harm for her to state to the committee, in case she does not pass a handsome examination, the reasons that impel her to teach, and assure them that she will do all in her power to make herself accurate and thorough in the daily lessons taught. Nothing so firmly fixes knowledge in one's own mind as imparting it to others; and there are few sensations keener or more delightful than those that spring up when we see the flash in the eye of thoughts, hopes, aspirations we have kindled in other minds. Just so soon as the definite purpose to start out and actually put on the yoke of daily toil and daily achievement takes possession of Julia's mind, she will be another woman. Studying with an object in view will make her more accurate and painstaking, and open to her a new world of hope.

She will find teaching is not easy work; that to bring a cheerful heart and a prompt intellect to duty every day at nine o'clock in the morning, and keep it there for five or six hours, will tax every faculty of mind and body; but the discipline is profitable every way, if it be not too long continued. She will find out what she knows and what she doesn't know, especially the latter. Let her read meantime what Hamerton in his Intellectual Life says about woman, weep because it is so true, and set to work to make herself one of the admitted exceptions. This vigorous regimen will do for Julia one or two things—it will give impulse, purpose, vitality to her life, and lift her out of the inanition she complains of, and be a stepping-stone to higher things; or, disgusted with the fact that "of all work that produces results nine-tenths must be drudgery," she will go back to her affluent home content with the "lilies and roses" of life.

A corollary drawn from the above may be profitable to those who feel the daily spur of necessity, and dream that idleness would be bliss. Of all the blessed curses ever pronounced on man, that "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread" is the most blessed. There are a few bright names on the roll of honor that have in spite of prosperity risen to renown; but the majority of those who have accomplished great things for themselves and for the race have had a hand-to-hand struggle with adversity in some of its manifold forms, and by the strength and knowledge born of disaster have finally come off conquerors. Since some of us must walk the hot, dusty, rugged highway, bearing heavy burdens, let us thank the Divine Providence that insists upon making us laborious, useful, and able in spite of ourselves.

Another corollary for the fathers of all Julias born in affluence may not be out of place. It is not enough to give our daughters pleasant homes, pianos, horses, carriages, and fine clothes; they must have minds thoroughly cultivated, and abilities trained in some one direction that shall enable them to feel that they can devote themselves successfully to some one industry or art. We know two or three young women of the most respectable and wealthy families in the country who, weary of the emptiness of life without purpose, have devoted themselves to the study of medicine, and are now successful practitioners of the healing art. In spite of the opposition of parents and friends, they have insisted upon having a career, and proving themselves to be capable of usefulness as members of society. Every movement in this direction should be cultivated. There is enough work in this human vineyard to give every earnest soul all it can do.—New York Tribune.

THERE IS A VULGAR expression, more common formerly than now, "By Jingo!" or "By the living Jingo!" The first verse of the translation of Genesis into Basque shows us that Jainko is the Basque name for the Deity. Miss Carolina, Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs, in the Vicar of Wakefield, was probably unaware of this when she used the term.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ..... .

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 2.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibilty in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic American,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below any other First-VALUE, $30 above class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HAVE WE

TWO BRAINS?
Dr. C. E. Brown-Séquard.
IS ALCOHOL A POISON?
Dr. Wm. A. Hammond.
THE POET LONGFELLOW.
James T. Fields.
U. S. SURVEY OF THE WEST.
(With Map.) Under Lieut. G. M. Wheeler.
THE HORSE IN AMERICA.
(Illust'd.) Discoveries by Prof. O. C. Marsh.
SAFETY AT SEA.
(Illust'd.) IRON STEAMERS THAT WILL NOT SINK.

These interesting Lectures and Letters, with a careful report of the important papers read at the April meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and at the May meeting of the American Oriental Society at Boston, are published in full in THE TRIBUNE EXTRA, No. 19. Price, in sheet form, 10 cents; in pamphlet, 20 cents; or seven for $1.

Circulars, giving full details of the contents of all THE TRIBUNE EXTRAS, free by mail.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE,
THE FARMER'S FAVORITE PAPER,
until January 1, 1875, for $1.
Address THE TRIBUNE, New York.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to

S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.

Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK,
FOR 1874-1875.
THE LEADER!!
BY H. R. PALMER AND L. O. EMERSON.

The most successful Church Music Bookmakers of the day. Will be ready in August, and will contain the usual Singing School Course, and a large amount of new and choice music for Choirs, Conventions, and Singing Classes. Specimen pages now ready, and will be mailed, post-free, on application.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per Dozen.

THE EMERSON NEW METHOD
FOR REED ORGANS.
By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. B. MATTHEWS. $2.50. One of the newest and very best of the New Methods.

GUIDE IN THE ART OF SINGING.
BY GEO. L. OSGOOD. $4.00.
New and very superior book for Voice Training.

RICHTER'S MANUAL OF HARMONY.
Translated from the EIGHTH German edition by J. C. D. PARKER. Price $2.00.
Prepared expressly for the Leipsic Conservatory, and is a complete and reliable Grammar of Composition.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1874. WHOLE NO. 238.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

A CORRESPONDENT writes us that we are all wrong about the last use of the chromo-premium business; and says that, at a little town in New Hampshire, at the weekly prayer-meeting, a chromo was offered to all who would "come forward."

THE Golden Age has been doubled in size, and Mr. W. T. Clarke is announced as its "sole owner and chief editor," Mr. Tilton retiring from both proprietorship and editorship of the paper. Mr. Clarke, who is a host in himself, will have Mr. Tilton's assistance as an editorial contributor.

BAYARD TAYLOR is in Egypt; and it is said that, somehow, he has been able to get possession of all the love-letters which passed between Joseph and Mrs. Potiphar! Well, we hope Mr. Taylor will severely disappoint the prurient public, by refusing to give to the printers this interesting supplement to the Book of Genesis.

DURING the last twenty-five years, Belgium has almost entirely relinquished the infliction of capital punishment; and now it is officially stated that "the commission of grave crimes is everywhere diminishing in Belgium, and it is a noteworthy circumstance that for nearly eleven years no execution has taken place in the country."

REV. ROWLAND CONNOR will relinquish his charge of the Free Congregational Society in Florence, Mass., on the first of August. He has been its resident minister, we believe, for two years; and during this time the Society has vigorously flourished and prospered. It will now return to the itinerant method of supplying its pulpit.

THE HEBREW paper hitherto called The Israelite, published in Cincinnati, Ohio, is hereafter to be called The American Israelite; and Rev. Dr. Sonneschein, who spoke so acceptably at the late Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association in this city, is to be associated with Dr. Wise in its editorship. The paper in the future, undoubtedly, will more than maintain its previous reputation for ability.

THE VENERABLE Investigator solemnly declares that "Col. Higginson, if we can understand him, is a Christian"! Well, it would seem to be of little use for a man to try to define his position, or to assume or refuse any denominational name. "Christian" is a title that just now is "lying around loose," and the best man is liable to have it applied to him, as well as taken from him. So we trust Col. Higginson will not be distressed by the hard impeachment of the Investigator.

ONE HUNDRED of the "locked-out" farm laborers, in England, have been going through the agricultural districts pleading their cause in the principal large towns. This means business to some purpose, in the way of reform; and is much better than "strikes" and other questionable methods of securing the rights of labor. Let the laborer make his appeal to the intelligent sense of justice in men, as against injustice and tyranny; and though his cause may progress more slowly, it will progress more surely.

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH, since his return to England, has been having debates with various "Christian" gentlemen. In one which he held recently with Rev. Brewin Grant, on the "Relative Merits of Secularism and Christianity," Mr. Bradlaugh felt called upon to say to that gentleman, in reference to a statement which Mr. Grant had made, "That is a lie; a deliberate lie!" The provocation seems to have been considerable; but we submit to Mr. Bradlaugh that the cause of truth can hardly gain much by his debating with men whom he is obliged to reply to in this way.

THE NEW YORK World enters into an elaborate calculation to show how much "vacations" cost our people annually. And, "in round numbers," it says, "ninety millions of dollars are distributed by tourists and pleasure-seekers, during the summer, among the country landlords and landladies, and the railroads." Well, this vast sum is well spent; for, without vacations—which interrupt haste, divert ambition, cool off passion, tranquillize agitation, pacify strife, and elevate worldliness,—our people would be more inane and superficial and prosaic than at present; and that, indeed, would be too bad.

ONE SAYS: "I am always impressed with the cleanness of the country. Let Nature alone, and she never gets filthy; but as soon as human hands lay hold of her, how vile she becomes!" The truth is, Nature knows no such thing as filth or vileness. Nothing is unclean in her eyes, because she utilizes everything. The mud at the bottom of the pool, and the lily that blooms on the surface, are both parts of her beauty; because both are parts of her order, and both are in their place. When man becomes as wise as Nature, he too will come to see all things to be good, because he will see everything in its time and place. We need to have a great patience with the slow evolution of things, and learn to discern the necessary relations between one degree of evolution and another. "Dirt is matter out of place," it is said. Let us learn how to keep our social house in order, and then we shall discover no dirt anywhere; because everybody and everything will be in right relations.

MRS. WOODHULL'S Weekly is four years old this month. The "two principal corner-stones" upon which the Weekly is founded are declared to be "political equality with man for woman, and sexual emancipation of woman from her virtual ownership by man." In the advocacy of the first of these demands the Weekly vigorously participates with many other journals; and it is safe to say that the growing sentiment of the nation endorses it. As to the second demand, we believe that the increasing intelligence, the developing conscience of the community, with its deepening respect for all the rights of woman, will sooner or later insist that this also be met and accorded. Any and every kind of slavery to which woman is subject, and which hinders the development of her fair and gracious womanhood, she should be emancipated from. But the precise nature and significance of this demand should be well understood, and its advocacy should be most wisely and judiciously conducted.

COUNT DE CHAMBORD, in his late manifesto to Frenchmen, tells them: "My birth made me your king." How obsolete and passé in his notions the count must be, to utter such a sentiment as this; and how puerile it sounds to American ears! Who can conceive of Gen. Grant demanding of the people a third election to the Presidency? He may desire it, and scheme for it, and possibly he may obtain it by political manœuvering; but if he were to claim it as his special prerogative he would be hooted out of the back door of the White House. Gov. Chase once said to us, in his private office in Columbus, Ohio, that he thought the nomination to the Presidency was due to him from the Republican Party for his long service in the cause of liberty. But John C. Fremont was nominated instead; and Gov. Chase lived long enough to learn that the American people consult their own mind as to the man they will put into the Presidency. We hope the French people will teach Count de Chambord some such lesson; for whether the people choose well or choose ill, theirs only is the right of choice.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Social Amusements

AS RELATED TO PUBLIC AND PRIVATE VIRTUE.

A DISCOURSE GIVEN IN THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

BY WILLIAM J. POTTER.

I began a recent discourse on Labor and Wealth with the remark that man is a working animal. I might begin this, in which I shall attempt to show the relation between amusement and human welfare, by saying that man is a playing animal: by which I should mean that play, amusement, diversion, entertainment, is a natural expression of a natural human faculty, and has a natural and important office in the development and progress of the human race both individually and collectively. A distinction, however, must be made between the playing faculty and the working faculty. The working faculties aim more directly at accomplishing the objects of human destiny. They are the levers set purposely for that end. The playing faculties help ultimately to the same achievement, but their office is more indirect and subsidiary. They serve to ease, to refresh, to lessen the friction, to smooth the movements of, and prevent waste and wear to, the working faculties. They lubricate the working machinery. What the little oil-glands are to every joint, and lever, and movement in the human body, that is the office of the faculty of humor in the machinery of the mind as the tasks of life are wrought out. Without it the machinery of the working powers soon gets to creaking; motion becomes harder; more power is required; part rubs against part unevenly and complainingly; there is wabbling and waste; and, finally, the machinery wears out, and stops before its time, and before its proper tasks are done. Keeping this distinction in view, we may say that man is just as naturally a player as a worker. While labor is the main agency by which he attains the legitimate ends of his existence, amusement is a necessary accompaniment and condition of successful labor.

It has been said, indeed, that man is the only animal that laughs. But naturalists now begin to tell us that this is hardly true. Just as they are telling us that the higher species of the brute creation give evidences of acting sometimes from reason as well as generally from instinct, so in species just below man they say they find an expression of delight very closely resembling the human laugh,—certainly near enough like it to be its forerunner. But let this be as it will, no one can doubt that brute animals are endowed with the capacity for amusement as well as with the faculty for work. The gambols of lambs, the frolics of kittens, the ludicrous play of monkeys, the fun of dogs, the statelier pranks of the horse, the entertainments that birds provide for themselves, are constant evidence of the natural gift for enjoyment, and for the expression of enjoyment, which all of them possess. And this, also, is to be noted, that, looking at the different grades of species, the capacity for amusement appears to increase among the lower animals very nearly in proportion as they rise in the scale of intelligence. There seems to be some normal relation between the faculty for work, or the power of taking care of themselves by their own efforts, which comes with increased intelligence, and the faculty for play, or of amusing themselves.

We might naturally expect, therefore, that when we rise to man in the scale of being, we should find a creature not only more intelligent, but, because of his greater intelligence, of increased capacity for enjoyment also. And so we do. Look at children. How overflowing with delightedness they are! Play seems their natural vocation. From morning till night they keep at it, beginning even before the day awakes to its tasks, and hardly ceasing or tiring until night comes, and sleep shuts the laughing eyes that will soon laugh themselves open again, and stills the babbling voice that will soon fill the house again with its overflow of joy. Not lambs nor kittens are more filled with the spirit of glee than they. Note, too, how largely their plays are mimic work. How they take the serious services of life, its deepest and loftiest experiences, its tragedies, even, and dramatize them, and act them out in their childish way. And thus by their plays are they being educated and trained for the great realities of existence: that which gives them joy to-day is preparing them also for service in after years.

Yet, if we look at the condition of primitive man, or at the lowest types of savage men that still exist, we shall probably not find any apparent increase in the capacity for amusement, at least in the expression of it, over the highest species of animals. And how is this, if it be true that the capacity for enjoyment increases as intelligence increases? We may explain it in part, I believe, by the very probable fact that at the first awakening of an intelligence that could properly be called human there would naturally come with it the sense of a necessary conflict with the powers of Nature,—an intenser sense of personality, indeed, of a power which, properly used, may cope with Nature; yet for this very reason the sense also of responsibility, the sense of being obliged to exert this personal power with judgment, and shrewdness, and energy, in order to win success in the struggle for existence. Even in a very primitive state of mankind there must have been some such feeling as this, though in rude and rough shape,—a feeling that was the forerunner of moral responsibility, but which at first we may conceive to have been little more than the sense of power, and of consequent obligation, in an intelligent being, against the external powers of Nature, in shaping one's own career. And when such a consciousness first comes, it must necessarily give to life a grave aspect. The necessity of struggle, not the opportunity for enjoyment, is the sensation that will be uppermost. We see how this is to-day, even under conditions of civilization, in the transition state from youth to the responsibilities of manhood and womanhood,—which usually, perhaps we might say always, in rightly developing lives is the most individually solemn and serious, and often the most gloomy, period in the whole course of life's experience. So it need not surprise us if, when that step was made, in whatever way it was made, from the brute species of animals to the organism of human intelligence, there should have been in the newly formed race less manifestation of joyousness than in lower races that had preceded. The faculty for joy was there, though apparently awed for a time into silence by the more commanding voice of responsible power. The capability of delight with which Nature seems to have stocked so bountifully her forms of animated existence had not ceased, but, like all other powers that had been transmitted to this new-born intelligence, was waiting for the new form of development which the exigencies of this higher existence should require.

For, whatever may be the cause of the gravity and seriousness of man in the primitive savage state, it is certain that as he has become civilized, as he has progressed in knowledge and culture, his faculty for amusement has also developed. Just as in the grades of the lower races of animals the capacity for joy and for expressing joy seems to increase as intelligence increases, so it has been in the history of mankind. The culture of the faculty for amusement, and the improvement of means for satisfying the desire for amusement, have kept pretty even pace with the progress of man in mental enlightenment and in social civilization generally. It may be said, to be sure, that the degree to which the capacity for amusement exists in different peoples is largely a matter of race and temperament. But race and temperament are to a great extent dependent on external conditions, on the outward exigencies of life, and these outward exigencies have been dominant agencies in the process of civilization. Therefore do we find even in the savage state more expression of joyousness, more playfulness of nature, among a people living in a tropical climate than in a people who have to struggle for existence against the severities of a cold climate. The hard contest for life which Nature compels represses the joy, and makes existence hard and forbidding. The tropical African has a native sunniness of nature which flows out like the fertile sunshine around him, in jets of fun and easy good-humor, and which not even years and centuries of slavery in our Southern States have been able wholly to repress. The North American Indian is severe, sullen, treacherous, subject to sudden change of mood, like the climate in which he has lived. His is a wintry, not a joyous, summer nature. Go farther north, to Siberia, to the arctic regions, and it is a wonder that the natives ever smile. The cold seems to have frozen out of them the very capacity for amusement, as it has the capacity for civilization and culture. But differences of climate will not account for all differences in the progress and character of civilization, and must not be pressed too far. Civilization is the complex result of many agencies acting and interacting for ages. So also are the differences among races and nations. The ancient Greeks and the Romans flourished not very far apart in time, and were nearly in the same latitude, and were of the same old Indo-European stock. They both had their amusements. Yet they were nations of very different temperaments, and their amusements were accordingly very different in character. The Greeks were naturally gay, and their amusements were the natural expression of their gayety of temper. The Romans were severe, stern, and their amusements more ceremonious and artificial. A similar difference exists between the French and English to-day. I saw the Chinese at North Adams playing a same of ball. They were boys and young men from gixteen to twenty-one. Yet they did not play with the sweating earnestness and labor of Yankee boys, nor with much apparent system or aim. It was rather with the fun and frolicsomeness of children. It was recreation, play, not work.

Still, in spite of all differences of race, temperament, and surroundings, the sense of humor, the love of amusement, the faculty to provide enjoyment for the mere sake of enjoyment, asserts itself as an inherent part of human nature, and its demand must be recognized as a legitimate demand, and be supplied. And if we ask for the philosophy of such a demand, if we ask why man should seek to do some things for no other satisfaction, and which have in themselves no other use than simply the enjoyment of doing them, I know no better answer than that which I gave at the outset: that through this capacity for amusement there comes refreshing, strengthening, not merely resting, but literally re-creation, exhilaration, and ultimate increase of power, to the other and higher faculties of our natures. What may seem at first sight to be waste of force and time, is therefore saving. What seems expenditure for mere vanity, is really solid income. Nature, we may be sure, knows her own aim. She beguiles the journey with wit, and story, and laughter, that our muscles may not discover the length and tediousness of the way, and may be in better trim for the serious tasks that are expected of them. Amusement stands to the grave business of life precisely as beauty in the outer world stands to mere use and service. Forms may be useful that have no comeliness nor grace; yet we feel that a higher art is reached when beauty mingles with use, as in all the more grand and magnificent processes and forms of Nature it does. Looking at utility merely, or utility in its roughest, barest outline, we might say that it would be better for man, that is, more convenient, if wood should grow in square timbers, and boards ready for building his house, or in sticks suitably shaped for his fire. But who, for that object, would lose the graceful beauty of a living tree, or the grand majesty of a forest? Utility, too, has higher aspects. Who can estimate all the material and mental needs of man which in subtle ways a growing tree supplies to his organism? The very inspiration and expiration of its foliage affects the atmosphere he breathes, affects the fertility and products of the soil out of which his organism is sustained, and his brain is made the instrument of thought. So of the subtle relation between the capacity for amusement and the capacity for service, between joy and labor, between play and work. A higher utility than any we can see by a mere casual observation binds the two together. The relationship goes down into the profoundest depths of character. It touches the most secret springs of virtue. It penetrates the finest work of man's intellect. Nay, we have not learned the innermost experiences of religion, unless we have discovered that delight and serving, that worship and enjoyment, are one,—unless we are ready to say that we will be "glad in the Lord," and actually feel the gladness of communion with the superabounding life that flows through Nature, and pulsates in the mental and moral consciousness of humanity.

But we are speaking in this discourse not of the general gladness and joy with which any of the legitimate services of life may be performed, but of that special form of enjoyment which is sought as an end in itself (though it may indirectly serve some other end), and is known as amusement. We are to legitimate that, if we can. And one way in which we can show its legitimacy is by noting the evil results that have come to character, the defects and deformity that have been produced, when the desire for amusement has been unnaturally suppressed in any way, whether by religious belief or civil law. Calvin attempted in the city of Geneva to put all public amusements under the ban, and did so by the iron hand of law, sustained by religious opinion. But human nature would not be permanently mutilated. The passion that was denied a legitimate channel contrived to flow in surreptitious ways, and became foul in consequence with all sorts of corruption. And even Calvin and his coadjutors, though their pure intentions and earnest zeal kept them upright and true in character, yet would have had something more of grace and lovableness, and would have been, perhaps, in some respects a little more just in opinion, and a good deal more generous and charitable in spirit, if their unflagging spiritual zeal had sometimes forgotten itself in a good hearty enjoyment of some of the very things which they were accustomed to regard as the vanities of life. I would say the same thing of our Puritan ancestors. Noble ancestors they were; we are very proud of them; we are glad to have had such founders of our State,—men and women of such integrity, of such unflinching fidelity to convictions, of such devotion to freedom (for themselves), men and women of the stuff of which martyrs are made,—we are very glad and proud that we of Massachusetts can look back to such an ancestry, and that New England was settled by such men and women, and that their influence has gone out into all the country. But we are very glad, too, I think, that they are all dead,—that they lived two hundred years ago, and that the very type of them is passing away. They are excellent for ancestors, but we should not like them for our contemporaries, and should be greatly apprehensive if we should see them reappearing in our children. They were excellent founders of a commonwealth two and a half centuries ago, but we should not much enjoy their resurrection to make our laws to-day. They had a great part in history, and they performed it well; but we do not care to have their mission or their character exactly repeated. And why? Not because we should not glory still in their public and private integrity (and heaven knows that the country needs it); not because we should not honor their fidelity to conscience and belief, for this is one of the virtues that never grow old, or their endurance, or bravery, or patience, or trust; or sturdy, rugged independence of soul, for such qualities of character never cease to compel homage,—but because, with all their greatness of character and service, we yet see that they were narrow, stern, severe, angular, with little of joyousness in their faith or their life. We give them all credit for what they did and were—and perhaps they could not have done just what they did had they not been just what they were; yet we now see that while they were grandly developed on one side of their natures, another side, and an important one, was cut off without any development whatever. And that was the side of imagination, the æsthetic side,—the side from which spring the drama, music, romance, poetry—both poetry of thought and language and the poetry of motion—the side where dwell the desire for entertainment, the sense of humor, the passion that seeks amusement, the faculty whose office it is to throw such a charm over the rough and hard experiences of life as will somehow neutralize their sting, and transfuse them with a spirit of joyous cheerfulness. All this the Puritans wanted; they deliberately, heroically, repressed it. They had seen evils growing out of this passion for entertainment,—had seen abuses of the drama, had seen instrumental music made an accompaniment of debauchery, had seen the English people diverted with merriment when great questions of truth and spiritual freedom were crying for solution; and so they said, "We will uproot the whole thing; we will eradicate from our natures the very desire for amusement; we will not suffer it to grow; it is one of the seeds of our fallen, corrupt nature; whatever it produces is sin, to be punished, and all the imaginations of men are an abomination, to be put away." And on that principle they acted; on that principle they founded the faith and government of this commonwealth. But to just the extent that they carried out the principle, they maimed their characters, and failed to secure fairness and symmetry of government. They established civil traditions and laws which we have had to keep undoing for the last hundred years and more, and left the inheritance of a faith which made the earth, indeed, the scene of a brave struggle with evil, but with little joy attending it, and human life a gloomy pilgrimage through a vale of tears, and not a dwelling, with hope and good cheer, in the paternal presence and home of God.

And the gloom and sadness of this religious faith, which sought to crush out the joyous side of human nature, still cast their shadow over the popular theological belief of New England and of America. There are thousands of people brought up in the popular churches, who look with disfavor on the theatre, who reckon dancing a sin, who think billiards and card-playing are but enticements of Satan to recruit the inhabitants of his fiery abode,—people who will not distinguish abuse of amusement from its use, and who seem unable to comprehend how religion can harmonize with any other kind of enjoyment than that lugubrious quality of delight which manifests itself in psalm-singing and the prayer-meeting. I remember once reading the biography of a distinguished Calvinistic clergyman—Dr. Payson—noted in the first quarter of this century in New England for his learning and his pulpit eloquence; and seldom have I read a more melancholy record of human experience. In all the good man's life there was scarcely a spark of genuine joy. He did not believe in joy, except in the joy of saving souls from eternal torment by bringing them into the church; and for this service (in which he had great success) he was so afraid of taking credit to himself that he had no real joy in it. His faith told him that he ought rather to feel the burden of the world's sinful and lost condition upon him; and that he ought to repress every desire for pleasure, and almost every human affection, so that he might feel this woe the more keenly. And so, in genuine Roman Catholic style of the old time, he shut himself in his room for hours, remaining on his knees in prayer. He appointed religious taskwork for himself. He fasted—not as most people fast on the governor's fast-days now,—but literally and actually abstained from all food, one day of almost every week. What was the result? More power as a preacher, more comprehension of truth, more joyousness of religious trust, more sweetness and serenity of faith? Not at all. But a tormenting, incurable dyspepsia, most melancholy depression of spirits, hysteria, nervous derangement, amounting at times nearly to insanity. And finally the good but deluded man died, prematurely, at the age of forty-four, literally eaten up by his pious zeal. And I laid down his biography with the conviction that he died for the want of amusement; and that it would have been better for his own soul and for the souls of the people whom he had converted by the contagion of his morbid, diseased piety, if instead of fasting he had gone to the theatre, and in place of some of his prayers in his close closet he had tried the virtue of skates, or of oars, or of a saddle-horse, out in the bracing atmosphere.

But this kind of piety is happily passing away. No sect would now countenance it to this extent,—unless, perhaps, the Roman Catholics, and they not so much as once. The Catholics, too, have generally been wiser than Evangelical Protestants in that they have recognized the need of amusements for the mass of the people. The saints could dispense with them, but few were called to be saints. To the outside world amusements could be allowed. But Protestants are now coming to the same conclusion, and some even go farther. They begin to admit that even saints, so long as at least as they are on earth, have bodies, and that piety is perfectly consistent with a reasonable degree of temporal enjoyment. The Young Men's Christian Associations, in some of the large cities, are providing in their buildings means for amusement as well as for religious exercises. It will not much surprise me, if, before long, they open their doors to dramatic performances. And why not? I have noticed, too, that the Methodists, as a denomination, do not discourage amusements as they once did, nor as some of their Evangelical brethren of other sects still do. To a considerable extent they feed the appetite for entertainment, too, in their religious exercises. They believe in a social good time, and their camp-meetings furnish it. They can laugh and pray in the same breath, and find no incompatibility between piety and humor. Any one who was acquainted with Father Taylor, or has read the biography of him—a man who had equal genius for wit and for religion,—can well understand why the sailor should say it was as good to hear him preach as to go to the theatre. In fact, he dramatized piety. And Methodism generally, to a large degree, does the same. Hence it satisfies, partially at least, the natural desire for amusement; and this is one element of its popular success. The negroes in the South, it is said, prefer a camp-meeting to any other kind of entertainment. And, judging from one that I attended in South Carolina last year, I do not wonder. It had the elements of a genuine drama. The Society of Friends, who, like the Puritans, attempted to banish amusements from social life, and even banished singing as a religious exercise, are moving with the rest. The time was, and not so very long ago, when their children, if moved to gratify a love of music, or of dramatic performances, or of a social dance, had to climb surreptitiously by night out of windows, or creep softly out of back-doors, lest "the discipline" should be summarily enforced upon them without waiting for the action of the meeting. But the present generation of Quaker youth know no such obstacles. They need hardly go away from home for any legitimate entertainment; or, if they go, they may go openly. The discipline itself—though once it seemed as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians—has been changed. Singing is creeping into the Sunday-schools, and even meetings of Quakers. The piano stands unmolested in their parlors. Pictures adorn their walls. Children romp in picnics, and almost dance on their lawns. So long as the birds would come every spring and sing in their grounds, and they could not help listening to them, and loving them for it, it was in vain to keep up the argument against music. Abuse? Yes, every good gift may be made an instrument of corruption by a mind already corrupt. But why is it not worth while for man, endowed with such powers as reason, and conscience, and a responsible will, to take the birds in this respect for his example, and make his music pure? And as a matter of fact music has freed itself from its early corrupt accompaniments. At the same time that it has improved in character and compass, it has purified its moral tone, until it has become the most elevating and refining of æsthetic arts. It furnishes to-day one of the best, if not the very best, of public entertainments,—the most unexceptionable on moral grounds, the most refreshing and resting to mind and body. It is one of the amusements to be encouraged for its direct aid on the side of virtue.

Yet, unfortunately, all of us are not constituted so as to feel the full attractions of music. The faculty is yet to be educated in many minds. There is need, therefore, of variety of entertainment to meet the wants of all. And what has been done towards purifying music as a means of public amusement, freeing it from its accompanying vices, and elevating its character, may be done with other amusements. There is no inherent necessity that the theatre should be corrupting, nor that actors and actresses should be immoral. There is no inherent necessity that cards should be accompanied by gambling, that billiards and bowling should be connected with bar-rooms and tempt to habits of drinking, nor that dancing should be associated with profligacy. There is no legitimate amusement that may not be dissevered from evil associations and demoralizing surroundings, and made fit for the purest society. And I mean by legitimate amusement any entertainment that is not in itself evil, and that conduces directly or indirectly to physical health, and moral and mental recreation.

But let me add most emphatically, that I would not say one word that can by any interpretation be used as even an indirect sanction of the abuses, immoralities, licentiousness, intemperance, that do now, alas, so often go along with this class of social amusements. And I would say to young men—there should be no need on this point to say anything to young women,—but I would say to young men, Better a thousand times let go the amusements than soil your self-respect by even giving your presence at places where depravity is encouraged and made to feel itself at home. You may have moral strength to resist the positive temptations of the place, but you should make it a point of honor not to patronize an entertainment where you would be ashamed to be seen by your mothers and sisters. Nor would I say one word that should be deemed an encouragement for those theatrical indecencies which some of our city theatres have presented in these latter years with so much sensationalism, and to which even reputable people have given the patronage of their presence. No, I plead not for amusements as they are, but for amusements as they should and might be,—for amusements directed and sustained by an enlightened, cultivated, refined, and moral public sentiment. I would have them taken out of their vicious surroundings, put in connection with moral associations and influences, and in some way brought under the control of persons, even if it have to be done by law, who shall feel their moral accountability to the community. And this end will not be secured until all people of virtuous desires and pure intentions shall resolutely frown upon all immoralities connected with public amusements, and refuse their patronage where they appear, and as resolutely encourage all efforts that are made to purify and elevate such entertainments.

I ought to say, too, that I am not speaking specially of the individual wants in the way of amusements of those who are accustomed to assemble here. Were I, perhaps a word of moderation would be in order. Most of us here, certainly, have little need in this direction which is not already supplied. Pleasant homes, books, parlor music, social entertainments, reading and dramatic-clubs—these supply the want so thoroughly that there is rarely occasion to go abroad for public amusement. The danger rather lies towards excess of social entertainment, so that not time enough be left for that more substantial culture which can only come by individual labor, or for duties that are of higher obligation than social amusement. When the opportunity for amusement is freely open to people, then there may be need of restraint; need to study simplicity and to resist extravagance. The faculties may be dissipated and their healthy balance disturbed by over-indulgence in entertainment as much as their efficiency may be impaired by the want of it. The need of persons in the way of amusement who are not deprived of it either by their circumstances or theological belief, but who may, perhaps, have almost too much of it, I am not considering in this discourse. With many of this class of persons the recreation most needed, and sometimes most coveted, is rest from social demands; the privilege of an hour of solitude for reflection, or for silent refreshment with Nature.

But I am speaking of amusement as an educating influence for mankind in general. And especially do I plead in behalf of the needs of those who have none of these pleasant social surroundings,—of those who have not these comfortable and elegant homes, and perchance no homes at all; who have merely staying-places nights in small rooms in attics or cellars; who have no improving society, no money for books or pictures, and, what is worse, no culture or taste as yet for enjoying them; of those who are pressed down and burdened with daily toil for self-subsistence; drudging from morning till night, day after day, and month after month, and year after year, with little or no relief, few holidays, and no summer vacations, until the very sense of enjoyment seems to be crushed out of them. Look at the children of this hard-toiling, care-burdened class. How pinched and sad their faces! How stunted in growth! How shrunk and wizened their features even in youth! It is for such as these that I plead. It is of the obligations of society, of our obligations here, to send some stream of refreshing joy into the arid life of these, that I speak. It is for these, and for that other class who are able to live with more of comfort, but can afford few of the home refinements of taste and culture, that public places of amusement are needed. Let them be provided,—pleasant places of social entertainment for the young, surrounded with all virtuous influences; cheap concerts, as in Germany—cheap in cost to the auditors, but not cheap in quality of performance; out-door concerts in summer; public pleasure grounds, gardens, galleries, gymnasiums, museums, free to visitors; theatrical entertainments that shall be pure and elevating, and under, perhaps, public supervision. I am not sure that it would not be well and wise to have a free theatre sustained by municipal taxation—were it not that the tendency is already too strong to claim for philanthropic institutions public support. But especially should out-door amusements be encouraged. Entertainment in the free, wholesome air is a double recuperator. Let there be, in our country, more holidays, and better provision for making them genuine holidays, refreshing both to mind and body. Especially should the hard-worked population of crowded cities be furnished with easy and cheap access to the country. Simple intercourse with free Nature is a great restorer. In the material universe are stored the energies that repair our wasted faculties; and these energies are as musical with the spirit of harmony and delight to-day as they were in the time of which the old Hebrew poet said: "When the morning-stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy."

But the discharge of such obligations as these must not be left to public votes and public taxation, nor to private enterprise that is looking only for gain. Here is one of the legitimate fields of modern philanthropy,—a field for men of wealth who would be public benefactors. Let them supplement the free school, and the free library, with wise and generous provision for free amusement to the people.

And let me say, in closing, that when we have learned truly to apply the inexhaustible fund of gladness that is stored up in Nature—in material nature, and in human nature,—and have discovered how to diffuse it proportionally through the various phases and experiences of life, then shall we have put in their place some of the now missing elements of a finer social and spiritual harmony. Then will home become the chief centre of enjoyment, care will break into laughter, work itself will sing, labor and wealth will dance together, trial and sorrow will lose half their bitterness in a more genial and filial trust, our charities will have less of condescension and patronage, and more of the warmth of fraternal love in them, and our religion will rise clear of all gloom, forget at least the theology that has made the earth "a vale of tears," and be suffused with the smile of a paternal Providence.

The Internal Revenue officer, when a gentleman made his income return, said, "You swear that this statement by you made is correct according to your best knowledge and belief?" "No," said the honest man, "I swear it is correct to the fraction of a cent!" We ought to add, perhaps, that the assessor told us that our friend was the only man in Boston that ever took such a forcible oath.—Investigator.

[For The Index.]

AN ADDRESS TO THE FRIENDS OF RADICAL REFORM THROUGHOUT THE UNION.

Neither of the old corrupt political parties can be relied upon to fulfil the promises of reform which their leaders invariably make when elections are approaching, but which are as invariably broken when they have elected their tickets and divided the booty.

By means of wheedling phrases and fine promises, the political wire-pullers generally succeed in inducing the voters to cast their ballots for them; but when they occupy their seats in the Legislature or in Congress, whence the people cannot recall them for one, two, four, or six years by any effectual legal process, most of them lack the strength of character to resist the monopolists and their millions, who tempt them to betray the cause of the people to the interest of the selfish moneyed men.

The "Liberal Reform Party" did not realize the expectations of their honest adherents, because they eschewed the application of thorough radical remedies to the existing evils, expecting salvation from the action of a single man, who was to be intrusted with a powerful office; when they should have known, from history, that governments which depend upon the ability and good-will of a single individual are always dangerous, and the powers vested in them liable to be abused to the detriment or even the destruction of the people.

The public mind is more trustworthy than the fickle mind of most individuals, and the law of self-preservation will be sure to guide the people to do what is best ultimately, even though occasional errors may not be entirely avoided. Therefore all governmental institutions should be framed so as to be as independent as possible of the influence of the changeable mind of individuals placed in office, and should be subject to the direct control of the people; for then, and only then, will they be truly democratic.

Some of the reforms hereinafter to be spoken of have not been discussed before the people sufficiently; and as new ideas generally strike those who are not yet prepared for them as impracticable, they will at first have to struggle against the conservative inertia of the masses. But we would point again to a fact proved beyond doubt by history; namely, that those reformatory movements which were based upon great fundamental principles have always carried the victory sooner or later, when the people had learned, from sad experience, the futility of any policy of mere expediency that used palliative means adapted only to the wants of the moment.

Convinced of the truth of these premises, the Radical Democracy, rejecting all temporary expedients propose to the people of the United States a radical revision of the State and Federal constitutions, in accordance with the above views.

The history of our republic shows that the Senate—not elected directly by the people, and hence aristocratic in its tendencies—has always advanced the interests of the money, railroad, and manufacturing speculators, to the prejudice of the common welfare. Therefore the right of impeachment has proved a sham, and every committee of investigation a whitewashing institution.

The Presidency, and the multitude of dependencies of the same, being the great aim, and becoming the spoils of all the ambitious party organizations, may be considered the principal source of the all-pervading corruption.

The tax exemptions existing in many States are in glaring contradiction of every principle of justice and equality. They should be repealed forthwith.

It is a lamentable fact that the fundamental principle of democratic republicanism—liberty and equality of all human beings—was not consistently adhered to by the framers of the constitutions; for the curse of slavery, which they suffered to remain in existence, has brought endless suffering upon the nation.

Another inconsistency, the denial of political equality to the female sex, is avenged in that the ennobling influence of woman is wanting at our polls, and in the administration of our public affairs. The alarming corruption that pervades everything connected with our political life is owing in part to this deviation from a just principle. The experience gathered for the last five years in Wyoming Territory, relating to Woman Suffrage, utterly refutes the expediency arguments of the opponents to that measure; for during this time the elections in the Territory have passed off with unusual order and quiet. Wherever women have occupied public offices they have done so with honor to their sex; and in no wise has the attainment of full citizenship lessened their purity, or impaired their true womanhood; nor are they treated with less respect by their fellow-citizens.

The Radical Democracy propose a series of reforms in regard to the right of suffrage; capital and labor; public lands; monopolies, privileges, and duties; civil and criminal law; justice free of expense; a higher degree of public instruction; religious liberty, and so forth,—which must all receive due consideration in the event of a revision of the constitutions. But among all reformatory measures the following five appear the most important at present:—

First, and above all, the constitutional right of the Voters to recall Members of the Legislatures and of Congress, if they do not conform to the demands of their constituents, or in any other way neglect to do their duty. Some members of our party propose the Referendum; that is, the subjection of all laws to the direct ratifying vote of the people. Perhaps the two propositions might be combined.

Second, the Abolition of the Aristocratic Senate. The Senate, besides being anti-democratic, is of itself superfluous. The will of the majority of the people can only be expressed by the assemblage of delegates, or representatives, elected and commissioned directly by the people.

Third, the Abolition of the Presidency, with its dangerous royal prerogatives. The Executive should consist of a responsible Executive Council, chosen, controlled, and revocable by Congress; an institution similar to that of the Swiss Republic.

Fourth, Equal Taxation, and the repeal of all exemption-laws without exception.

Fifth, Political Equality of Men and Women.

The friends of reform are reminded and warned that notwithstanding they may succeed in electing honest men to various offices, by extraordinary exertions, now and then, the great evils of which the people are justly complaining will ever recur unless the Reform Party enforce the application of the only remedy which will insure a permanent reform; that is, the Radical Revision of the Constitutions. True patriots! make this the watchword of your campaigns; and form Radical Democratic Clubs in all parts of the country!

The details of the Platform of the Radical Democracy can be elaborated at the National Convention, to be called in due time. But the patriots who earnestly wish to see our republican institutions purified of defects under which the people are constantly suffering; those whose independence of thought is not trammelled by selfish aims or a morbid desire for immediate results; those who have the courage to oppose the united force and tricks of the political demagogues and charlatans, and to bear the attacks of short-sighted conservatism; and those who would have our country stand forth as a complete justification of the republican principle, encouraging the enslaved nations of the globe to throw off the incubus of despotism,—let them all unite without delay, and then march in solid phalanx upon the enemies of the public welfare!

Until the National Convention of the Radical Democracy assemble, all notices of the formation of Clubs and other communications are to be directed to

Carl Doerflinger,
Secretary National Executive Committee,
56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

P.S.—Every independent newspaper is requested to copy this address, and discuss the propositions contained therein.

[For The Index.]

WALLACE'S "DEFENCE OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM."

When a physiologist like Dr. Carpenter shows, as he does, that many of the phenomena of Mesmerism and Spiritualism may be accounted for subjectively by "unconscious cerebration," or "expectant attention," or the influence of a "dominant idea," the most convinced Spiritualist must needs attend respectfully, and learn somewhat. When, on the other hand, a naturalist, who shares with Darwin the honor of discovering the principle of "natural selection," becomes an ardent Spiritualist as the result of long and patient investigation, the most determined sceptic must needs attend respectfully. In late numbers of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. A. R. Wallace has given reasons for the faith now his. He arraigns the men of science and their public for their unscientifically hostile attitude. He complains that those who have devoted much time to the investigation are almost denied a hearing by the public, while it listens, as to an oracle, to those who have given little time to it, and are almost ignorant of the researches of others,—men who end their examinations and explanations with phenomena on which no thoughtful Spiritualist relies as tests; who, because they have encountered people easily deceived, think all Spiritualists are like them; who insist on prescribing conditions of experimentation to Nature, though aware that in all other branches of research Nature, and not the seeker, determines the essential conditions; and who are so firmly convinced, on à priori grounds, that the more remarkable phenomena said to happen do not really happen, that they believe all the eye-witnesses, some of them having high scientific reputation, are victims of some mysterious delusion. Dr. Carpenter confesses that he and his compeers have "no place in the existing fabric of their thought into which such facts can be fitted;" so Wallace sets to work to modify their "fabric of thought" itself by showing how wide and varied is the evidence, and how remarkably the separate lines of inquiry converge to one uniform conclusion.

An historical sketch shows how Spiritualism has won its way, in a quarter-century, against doubt, and dislike, and contempt, and by investigation, till now it is the belief of millions, in all classes and professions. It is the evidence of sense attested in all sorts of ways, not the evidence of "intuition," or authority, or "faith," on which these believers rely. Not all inquirers accept the Spiritualistic theory of their origin, but (Wallace ventures to say) "no earnest inquirer has ever come to a conclusion adverse to the reality of the phenomena, and no Spiritualist has ever yet given them up as false."

As John, in the Gospel, selects from among the "many other signs" some half-dozen of the most startling, and gives them with detail, to prove that Jesus is the Christ, so Wallace with his evidence. He cites three kinds. (1.) The career of the remarkable mediums, Miss Fox, Mr. Home, and Mrs. Guppy, with their most characteristic and repeatedly tested wonder-works. (2.) The history of converted sceptics, like Judge Edmonds, Sexton, Crookes, and others, who only after years of investigation yielded to conviction. By such men "the spiritual theory, as a rule, has only been adopted as a last resource, when all other theories have hopelessly broken down, ... as the logical outcome of the whole of the facts." (3.) Spirit-photographs. Three amateur photographers, under circumstances which seem to preclude all chance of delusion, have obtained results on their plates that "establish as a scientific fact the objective existence of invisible human forms, and definite invisible actinic images." The real strength of his article, of course, lies in this exhibition of testimony, and an impressive catalogue summarizes the wonders, both physical and mental. The Banner of Light has reprinted the whole article in a pamphlet, which can be easily obtained.

At the close, he answers the cui bono question with great enthusiasm. In the first place, history is strewn with historical phenomena which science cannot deal with, but which Spiritualism explains. Spiritualism rehabilitates Socrates as a sane man, his demon being no mental illusion. It allows us to believe that the oracles of antiquity were not all impostures. It makes credible the miracles of the Old and New Testaments (even the three men unsinged in the fiery furnace, and the water turned to wine, and the multiplication of loaves), and of the mediæval saints and modern Catholics. It gives a rational explanation of the facts in witchcraft, of second sight, of occult disturbances like "Bealings Bells, &c." And it perfectly solves the question of the efficacy of prayer. Prayer may often be answered by sympathetic spirits. "The perfect simplicity, faith, boundless charity and goodness, of George Müller, have enlisted in his cause beings of a like nature; and his mediumistic powers have enabled them to work for him by influencing others to send him money, food, and clothes, all arriving, as we should say, just in the nick of time." Witness the sudden, "uncontrollable impulse" which the far-off donors often mention.

But the moral teaching of Spiritualism makes its great value. The theory of human nature, which all the mediums, all the spirits, concur in maintaining, whatever their sectarian bias may be, is as follows:—

"1. Man is a duality, consisting of an organized spiritual form, evolved coincidentally with and permeating the physical body, and having corresponding organs and development.

"2. Death is the separation of this duality, and effects no change in the spirit, morally or intellectually.

"3. Progressive evolution of the intelligent and moral nature is the destiny of mankind; the knowledge, attainments, and experience of earth-life forming the basis of spirit-life.

"4. Spirits can communicate through properly endowed mediums. They are attracted to those they love, or sympathize with, and strive to warn, protect, and influence them for good, by mental impressions, when they cannot effect any more direct communication; but as follows from clause (2) their communications will be fallible, and must be judged, and tested, just as we do those of our fellow-men."

Yes, says Wallace, the very "twaddle" of so many spirits harmonizes with the essential teaching of Spiritualism,—that we are there what we here prepare ourselves to be,—and speaks a mighty warning into the very ear of families, to deter from low, selfish, physical life, and stimulate to the intellectual, social, affectional life. This theory of human nature, and of inevitable reward and punishment dependent wholly on the proportionate development of our higher mental and moral nature, leads to "a pure system of morality, with sanctions far more powerful and effective than any which either religious systems or philosophy have put forth." . . . "If Spiritualism's only product were this theory of a future state, that alone would negative the supposition of its being all imposture, or delusion, or the result of 'expectant attention,' or 'unconscious cerebration.'" This last statement, we must confess, somewhat staggers our faith in Wallace's logic. "Behold how noble a doctrine; how rich its blessing to the world! Therefore it must be a divine revelation," is the argument with which we are but too familiar. And does Wallace think the essential moral feature of this theory of future life new, or peculiar to "Spiritualism"? That in many minds it has been born with Spiritualism, we have no doubt.

A science of human nature, which is founded on observed facts; which appeals only to facts and experiments; which takes no beliefs on trust; which inculcates investigation and self-reliance as the first duties of intelligent beings; which teaches that happiness in a future life can be secured by cultivating and developing to the utmost the higher faculties of our intellectual and moral nature, and by no other method,—is and must be the natural enemy of all superstition. Spiritualism is an experimental science, and affords the only sure foundation for a true philosophy, and a pure religion. It abolishes the terms "supernatural" and "miracle" by an extension of the sphere of law and the realm of Nature; and, in doing so, it takes up and explains whatever is true in the superstitions and so-called miracles of all ages. It, and it alone, is able to harmonize conflicting creeds; and it must ultimately lead to concord among mankind in the matter of religion, which has for so many ages been the source of unceasing discord and incalculable evil;—and it will be able to do this because it appeals to evidence instead of faith, and substitutes facts for opinions; and is thus able to demonstrate the source of much of the teaching which men have so often held to be divine." W. C. G.

A Scotch parson had a farming neighbor who was in the habit of shooting on Sundays, but after a while this Sabbath-breaker joined the church. One day the minister to whose church he belonged met a friend of the farmer, and said: "Do you see any difference in Mr. P—— since he joined the church?" "Oh, yes," replied the friend, "a great difference. Before, when he went out to shoot on Sunday, he carried his gun over his shoulder; but now he carries it under his coat."—Transcript.

ASA GRAY ON CHARLES DARWIN.

Nature has recently published a fine picture of Mr. Darwin, in its gallery of scientific worthies, and Prof. Asa Gray, the distinguished American botanist, supplies the short accompanying sketch of his friend's life and work. "Two British naturalists," he says, "Robert Brown and Charles Darwin, have, more than any others, impressed their influence upon science in this nineteenth century." But he gives Darwin a higher rank for service done than even his own great chief, the facile princeps Botanicorum. We quote a few of Prof. Gray's sentences:—

"Mr. Darwin's evident delight at discovering that some one else has 'said his good things before him,' or has been on the verge of uttering them, seemingly equals that of making the discovery himself. It reminds one of Goethe's insisting that his views in morphology must have been held before him, and must be somewhere on record, so obviously just and natural did they appear to him.

"Mr. Darwin takes his readers into his confidence, freely displays to them the sources of his information, and the working of his mind, and even shares with them all his doubts and misgivings, while, in a clear and full exposition, he sets forth the reasons which have guided him to his conclusions. These you may hesitate or decline to adopt, but you feel sure they have been presented with perfect fairness; and if you think of arguments against them, you may be confident that they have all been duly considered before.

"In the single instance in which Brown and Darwin took the same subject in hand, the explanation of the insect-forms of some orchideous flowers, and other extraordinary structures, as well as of the arrangement of blossoms in general, and even the very meaning and need of sexual propagation, were left to be supplied by the latter. The aphorism 'Nature abhors a vacuum' is a characteristic specimen of the science of the Middle Ages. The aphorism 'Nature abhors close fertilization,' and the demonstration of the principle, belong to our age, and to Mr. Darwin. To have originated this, and also the principle of natural selection—the truthfulness and importance of which are evident the moment it is apprehended—and to have applied these principles to the systems of Nature in such a manner as to make, within a dozen years, a deeper impression upon natural history than has been made since Linnæus, is ample title for one man's fame. These less known essays upon the various arrangements for ensuring cross-fertilization in flowers, for the climbing of plants, and the like, may, before long, as we have heard, be reprinted in a volume.

"Apropos to these papers, which furnish excellent illustrations of it, let us recognize Darwin's great service to natural science, in bringing back to it teleology; so that instead of morphology versus teleology, we shall have morphology wedded to teleology. In many, no doubt, evolutionary teleology comes in such a questionable shape, as to seem shorn of all its goodness; but they will think better of it in time, when their ideas become adjusted, and they see what an impetus the new doctrines have given to investigation. They are much mistaken who suppose that Darwinism is only of speculative importance, and perhaps transient interest. In its working application it has proved to be a new power, eminently practical and fruitful.

"And Mr. Darwin not only points out the road, but labors upon it indefatigably and unceasingly. A most commendable noblesse oblige assures us that he will go on while strength (would we could add health) remains. The vast amount of such work he has already accomplished might overtax the strongest. That it could have been done at all under constant infirm health, is most wonderful."

NATIONAL VITALITY AND TRAINED MEN.

Mr. Galton, in his work on Hereditary Genius, has drawn attention, in a striking chapter, to the effect which the systematic destruction and expatriation, by the Inquisition or the religious intolerance of the government, of the leading men of the nation—its boldest thinkers, most ardent investigators, most prudent, and careful, and ingenious workers, in generation after generation—had in bringing about the moral and political decline of the three great Latin countries, France, Spain, and Italy,—a decline of which, in the case of the two former, at least, we have probably not seen the end. The persons killed or banished amounted only to a few thousands every year, but they were—no matter from what rank they came—the flower of the population; the men whose labor and whose influence enabled the State to keep its place in the march of civilization. The picture is very valuable (particularly just now, when there is so great a disposition to revel in the consciousness of vast numbers) as calling attention to the smallness of the area within which, after all, the sources of national greatness and progress are to be sought. The mind which keeps the mass in motion, which saves and glorifies it, would, most probably, if we could lay bare the secret of national life, be found in the possession of a very small proportion of the people, though not in any class in particular—neither among the rich nor the poor, the learned nor simple, capitalists nor laborers; but the abstraction of these few from the sum of national existence, though it would hardly be noticed in the census, would produce a fatal languor, were the nation not constantly receiving fresh blood from other countries. This element was singled out with considerable accuracy in France and Spain by religious persecution. It would happily be impossible to devise any process of selection one-quarter as efficient in our age, or in this country. The one we have been using for the last twenty years, and on which a good deal of popular reliance has been placed, is the accumulation of wealth; and under this "the self-made man"—that is, the man who, starting in life ignorant and poor, has made a large fortune, and got control of a great many railroads, and mines, and factories—has risen into the front rank of eminence. The events of the last five years, however, have had a very damaging effect on his reputation, and he now stands as low as his worst enemies could desire. As he declines, the man of some kind of training naturally rises; and it would be running no great risk to affirm just now that the popular mind inclines more than it has usually done to the belief that trained men—that is, men who have been prepared for their work by teaching on approved methods—are after all the most valuable possession a country can have, and that a country is well or ill off in proportion as they are numerous or the reverse. One does not need to travel very far from this position to reach the conclusion that there is probably no way in which we could strike so deadly a blow at the happiness and progress of the United States as by sweeping away, by some process of proscription kept up during a few generations, the graduates of the principal colleges. In no other way could we make so great a drain on the reserved force of character, ambition, and mental culture which constitutes so large a portion of the national vitality. They would not be missed at the polls, it is true, and if they were to run a candidate for the Presidency to-morrow, their vote would excite great merriment among the politicians; but if they were got rid of regularly, for forty or fifty years, in the manner we have suggested, and nothing came in from the outside to supply their places, the politicians would somehow find that they themselves had less public money to vote or steal, less national aspiration to trade upon, less national force to direct, less national dignity to maintain or lose, and that, in fact, by some mysterious process, they were getting to be of no more account in the world than their fellows in Guatemala or Costa Rica.—The Nation.

MAN IS AS A stream whose source is hidden. Our being is descending into us from we know not whence. The most exact calculator has no prescience that somewhat incalculable may not balk the very next moment. I am constrained every moment to acknowledge a higher origin for events than the will I call mine.

As with events, so it is with thoughts. When I watch that flowing river, which, out of regions I see not, pours for a season its streams into me, I see that I am a pensioner; not a cause, but a surprised spectator of this ethereal water; that I desire and look up, and put myself in the attitude of reception, but from some alien energy the visions come.

The Supreme Critic on the errors of the past and the present, and the only prophet of that which must be, is that great Nature in which we rest, as the earth lies in the soft arms of the atmosphere; that unity, that Over-soul, within which every man's particular being is contained and made one with all other; that common heart, of which all sincere conversation is the worship, to which all right action is submission; that overpowering reality which confutes our tricks and talents, and constrains every one to pass for what he is, to speak from his character, and not from his tongue, and which evermore tends to pass into our thought and hand, and become wisdom, and virtue, and power, and beauty. We live in succession, in division, in parts, in particles. Meantime, within man is the soul of the whole; the wise silence; the universal beauty, to which every part and particle is equally related; the eternal One. And this deep power in which we exist, and whose beatitude is all accessible to us, is not only self-sufficing and perfect in every hour, but the act of seeing, and the things seen, the seer and the spectacle, the subject and the object, are one.—Emerson's "Over-Soul."

ACCORDING TO THE following information contained in a letter reprinted in Littell's Living Age, the world is likely soon to know, it seems, which is the true religion:—

"A letter from Japan, in the Cologne Gazette, says that the religious question, which is an increasing topic of discussion among the Japanese, has been again brought before the public by a memorandum issued by two officials of the religious department. The memorandum begins by pointing out that Japan has made such immense progress that her civilization and commerce are equal to those of Europe, but that in religious matters she still hesitates between Buddhism and Christianity. It, therefore, proposes that public disputations should be organized between Buddhist and Shinto priests on one side, and Christian preachers on the other. Each of these disputations would take place on a specified subject, to be agreed upon beforehand by the contending parties. The speeches would be taken down by shorthand writers, and published in several languages; and an interval of ten days would elapse between one disputation and the next. By these means, the memorandum continues, the world would be able to decide which religion is the true one, and make its choice accordingly. The expenses of the proposed disputation would be covered by the proceeds of the sale of the shorthand reports."

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY lately preached a missionary sermon, at St. Peter's Church, Thanet, in which he said that though "the population in India, subject to the British crown, or more or less connected with it, is about 180,000,000 of persons, and though great efforts have been made of late years, to bring the influence of missionaries to bear upon those whom formerly they could not reach, still, with all efforts, not above 318,000 Protestant converts have as yet been made from these native populations.

Poetry.

THE SOUL'S REPLY.

BY STELLA OF LACKAWANNA.

I have questioned, I have queried,
Soul of mine, till I am wearied;
Pondered many a day, and wondered, with an undisguised desire,
As the stately suns sank slowly to their western couch of fire,
And the tardy twilights lingered till the midnight moon climbed higher,
If the gods—with gifts o'erflowing—
In their rich and rare bestowing,
Should but offer, should but proffer one among the magic three,—
Love, or Fame, or Gold, unstinted,—which of all thy choice would be?
Which could rouse thee into waking
From the dumb and dreary aching—
From the sorrow of to-morrow, or the grieving of to-day,
From the stupor and the torpor, wearing thy sweet life away,—
Love, or Fame, or Gold—oh answer! which the courted guerdon, say?

Gold! a wondrous wizard, surely,
Shining in the dark so purely,—
Luring willing souls to madness with its glamour, with its glare;
Clasping gemmed and jeweled baubles 'round each skeleton of care,
Till their ghastliness break lightly into beauty everywhere:
Gold the tempter! oh the treasures
It should buy thee, and the pleasures,—
Delicate and dainty offerings from a hundred spicy isles,—
Adulation from the many, and bewilderment of smiles;
Dreams too beautiful should woo thee,
Should pursue, perchance undo thee;—
Every star should glow a promise; every bud on flower and tree
Flush with hope's unspoken splendor, fleeting, cheating, though it be:—
Deign response, oh soul of silence. which the tempting gift for thee?

Or if gold yet lack the power
To beguile life's little hour—
If its glitter fail to charm thee, or thy being would'st not crave
What the world's great thousands toil for, moil for, to the last a slave,
Till the wild unrest sinks breathless to an uncomplaining grave,—
Yonder, like a fire-fly dancing,
Now retreating, now advancing,
In and out the hazy shadows, with a grace 'twere sweet to name,
Radiant garlands deftly wreathing, waits the gifted goddess—Fame;
Many a soul hath drained the chalice
Foaming in her glittering palace—
Many another knelt in rapture but to press her garment's hem,
Or to grasp the pearl dissevered from her peerless diadem;—
Love, or Fame, or Gold unmeasured—soul of sadness! which of them?

Yet no flutter, yet no waking
From the dumb and dreary aching—
From the sorrow of to-morrow, or the grieving of to-day,
From the stupor and the torpor, wearing thy sweet life away,—
What shall rouse thee, what shall save thee from this wasting slumber, pray?
LOVE it must be—thought hath guessed it,
For a sigh of thine expressed it,
And a stirful throbbing creepeth through each limp and languid vein,
Till the ruddy life-tide leapeth swiftly on its course again;
Though thy pride so silent made thee,
Love's sweet mention hath betrayed thee:
Gold may dash thy sky with rainbows where its meteors flash and fall,
Fame may hold thee and enfold thee in her fascinating thrall,
But 'tis LOVE'S magnetic mystery that enslaves thee more than all.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 11.

J. B. Davenport, $3; E. Leedham, $1; A. Williams, $6.44; Washington Cross, $3; R. G. Norton, $1.50; Henry Shreve, $3; J. G. Forlong, $4.04; E. Crosby, $3; S. W. Nelson, $5.50; E. W. Wellington, $3; G. T. Stevens, $6; Henry Kennard, $2; B. F. Dyer, $3; M. A. Kursheedt, $4; J. G. Dodge, $1; Martha White, $1.50; N. H. Webster, $4; Geo. Richardson, $1.50; Chas. J. Ryder, $3; R. S. Barker, $3; Anna P. Dixwell, $3; J. H. Boalt, $1.50; W. A. Fuller, $1.50; John Curtis, $4.50; R. P. Maynard, $1.50; J. E. Wright, $3; J. Smith, $1; W. A. Tower, $3; A. S. Waitt, $3; G. S. Folsom, $5.25; G. S. Moore, $3.75; H. H. Hatch, $3; L. C. P. Freer, $5; Charles Storrs, $100; J. Lienau, $40; J. Goldmark, $10; S. L. Hill, $700; W. T. Allen, $15; A. A. Bell, $1; D. Williams, 25 cts.; Wm. Willicott, 40 cts.; Wm. B. Taylor, 25 cts.; P. Fisk, $1; G. H. Foster, $1.85; A. K. Loring, 64 cts.; Cash, $1.84; P. B. Sibley, 25 cts.; Lizzie Martin, 25 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JULY 16, 1874.

PARAGRAPHS.

BY W. J. P.

Among the sins of Congress none was worse than its failure to pass the Civil Rights Bill. So long as it postpones that measure of justice it conspires with hotel keepers, and railroad and steamboat managers, to insult several of its own members, who, because of their color, are not allowed to travel as if they were gentlemen, on their way to their Congressional duties.

A book which will most certainly attract and reward the attention of all students of the Science of Religion, and which has for some time been promised, is announced as soon to be published. It is Mr. George H. Felt's Kaballah of the Egyptians, and the Greek Canon of Proportion,—a work which is the result of years of laborious and patient study. Investigations into the meaning of the Egyptian hieroglyphics, and into the connection of the Egyptian and Hebrew religions, are a part of its contents. It is to be published by J. W. Bonton, of New York, in ten parts, at $2.50 each; and the completed work is to be a quarto of 640 pages, abundantly illustrated.

Mr. Conway's Sacred Anthology receives from the Nation a very appreciative notice—unusually so for that paper. It says: "Thanks are due Mr. Conway for the admirable book which he has compiled. It may be described as a mass of well-arranged excerpts from the bibles of all nations, and from some other writings as well. These quotations relate to the whole of human character and duty, and embody much of the deepest and best-tried wisdom. A better book as a companion it would be hard to find." And this praise is deserved; for though the critically disposed may doubtless find some fault with the book—as, for instance, that the selections are not always arranged with perfect success under the chosen titles, or that some good things are not there, and that some not so good are,—yet it is, notwithstanding this possible slight criticism, excellent. A number of ministers already have found it of valuable service in their pulpit readings.

The Proceedings of the Pennsylvania Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends, held in June, at Longwood, have been published in a pamphlet of thirty-four pages, and show the meeting to have been one of interest and vitality. Oliver Johnson, who has been clerk of the meeting for eighteen years, and one of its most active members from the time of its organization, twenty-one years ago, was necessarily absent, and Charles G. Ames was made clerk in his place. The sessions continued from the 11th to the 14th of the month, and a great variety of topics came up for discussion. The pamphlet gives only a brief hint of the course of the discussions, but contains the "Testimonies" which gave rise to the discussions in full. These are entitled, "Religion," "Treatment of Hired Men and Women," "Political Equality of Women," "Capital and Labor," "Legal Holidays," "Reform in Woman's Dress," "Child Education and the Kindergarten," "Political Duties," "Treatment of Criminals," "Temperance," "Peace." Another, on "Sexual Holiness," presented by Nicholas E. Boyd, was directed to be printed in the pamphlet "for information and serious consideration," though "neither adopted nor rejected by the meeting." An interesting letter from Oliver Johnson, and a reply from the meeting, complete the Report. The Progressive Friends of this Longwood meeting are a live body, though they meet but once a year; and during the twenty-one years of their organization have had a marked influence on public opinion in southeastern Pennsylvania. It is especially noteworthy that the "Hicksite Quakers" in that section of the State, from whom the "Progressive Friends" separated, have latterly been advancing towards them, and that some individual meetings have progressed so far that a number of the "Progressives" have felt free to rejoin the old society, and have been received without any conditions as to the past or future.

It is pleasant to notice that picnic-excursions for the poor children of some of our large cities are again being provided, and that funds are requested for the purpose. Money can hardly be given for a better object, and should be plenteously bestowed. Every large city which has a class of street children should be doing something of this kind. The regret has been expressed that this charity should not have been instituted by the churches. It may be just cause for shame to the Christian Church that it should have been left to a secular newspaper to start this benevolent work. But we think it is much better that the charity should be in unecclesiastical hands. Many of the children who now have the enjoyment of the excursions are at least nominally connected with the Roman Catholic Church; and were Protestant churches to take up the work, a good many of this class of children might be deprived of the privilege through the suspicions of the Catholic priests that some ecclesiastical motive might be hidden under the charity. And if the Catholic Church should undertake it—which it is hardly likely to do—suspicions of sectarian narrowness and manœuvering would be still stronger. Even if all the children were of Catholic parentage, it would be better that such a charity should not be Catholic; for that church does already too much for its members on the paternal theory of taking care of them—too much for their best good. It is far better for the children and for society that the children should see that they owe this good time to the general good-will of society rather than to any church. It is a part of the natural punishment of churches, indeed, for their past bigotry and sectarianism, that they cannot now do to the best advantage many good works which they have it in their heart to do. And it will require an atonement of many years of practice in simple, undogmatic, human righteousness, before they can be accepted as the natural almoners of society.

Baccalaureate sermons have been numerous for the last month. Most of the colleges in the country now have a discourse, on the Sunday preceding their graduating exercises, specially directed to the graduating class. Since the young men who are to graduate—and we can now, happily, of some colleges say also the young women—are on the point of going out into the world to begin their life's work, or are to enter on some special professional study, it presents a fine opportunity for wise men to utter wise advice,—an opportunity, however, which not all who are called to speak are able to meet. The young men who are just on the eve of leaving college are generally in an earnest and coutemplative mood. They see the untried path of life before them, and feel the weight of responsibility that is soon to devolve upon themselves for their success or failure, as they have never felt it before. Even those who have been reckless in their college days, and shown little disposition to improve their opportunities, are apt to have serious moments as they are about to take the step out from the care of instructors and parents into the world, to hold their careers in their own hands. We well remember the words of wise Dr. James Walker on such an occasion at Cambridge, addressed to this mood of the young men,—particularly the impressive point when he said that careless and immoral students had not infrequently made graduation-day the real Commencement-day of a new life, but that this was generally the last opportunity for a change of moral habit which circumstances would offer; that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the moral direction which men took on leaving college would determine their course through life. Not all preachers may have the capacity of presenting considerations like these with the impressiveness of Dr. Walker, but it would be well if this mood of the young men on the occasion of Baccalaureate sermons were more borne in mind by the preachers. It is noticeable, however, that most of them (judging from reports of a number of sermons this year that have come under our notice) aim at this kind of practical discourse, to show the importance of sound character; and that comparatively little attention is given to inculcating "sound theology."

MYSTERY IN RELIGION.

Two tendencies are seen in all live systems of religious thought,—a tendency to definition of ideas, and a tendency to mystery. The creeds define, but never for long time is escape towards creedlessness untried by some earnest man, and he often heads a party. The doctrine, at first valued for its sharp outline, gets blunted at the points, its meanings multiply, a halo gathers round it, and presently this multiplicity of meanings, shading off into the light of common-sense, is what gives the doctrine half its worth to those who love it most. The truth at the centre is still truth to them, but it has become a mystery. It wins, perhaps, an ampler recognition than before, but they see that what they look at passes definition. Even where the creeds are still clear-cut, the most Orthodox deep-thinking confesses willingly that they at bottom rest on mysteries. Nothing surer than transubstantiation,—but it is a mystery! Than trinity and incarnation, than election and vicarious atonement, for "there they stand, facts by the Bible-word." Yet, confessedly, nothing more mysterious than these same facts. The deepest fact of all, that Life which men call God, through all the ranges of their thought, whether he be a fetish-stump or an unseen spirit, a myriad or One, has always represented mystery. The idol is but symbol, the incarnation is but a vouchsafed concretizing of some Absolute; and no high theism, however "personal," that does not affirm itself in some degree as pantheism.

We can renounce a given dogma, but we can never renounce mystery. Some improved theory, a certain self-contradiction, this or that special immorality in the articles, we abandon; but the fact that we thereby approach is stranger than all the fictions. If we flee the Three-in-One, it is to face the All-in-One: is it more intelligible? If we flee the single Incarnation, it is to pronounce a wider incarnation each time we say "Our Father." We can flee from Calvinism, but the Calvinist will turn round on us, and safely dare us to fully solve by reason the Calvinism of Nature—the problems of evil, and suffering, and evident inheritance, and partial fate. We can give up theism; and if we do, it is to acknowledge either that which its modern prophet specifically names the power "Unknowable,"—the mystery to which all thinking leads, but in which it is forever lost,—or else the mystery "Matter," a great What-is-it? still.

Instead of trying to escape from definition, or from mystery, we do well to accept both tendencies as natural. Both belong in us. We cannot help defining. The mind craves distinct conceptions, and works to get them. Feeling rises best when rooted in them. The conscience gets most loyalty from the will when it utters firmly, "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not." No principle of Free Religion debars our having definite beliefs, affirmative as well as negative; and to have an enthusiastic faith is not necessarily to be credulous. But we cannot help mystifying either. The mind craves room for the free play of imagination also; feeling soon withers, unless fed at the leaves of suggestion, as well as at the root of conviction; and the will demands that the "Thou shalt" shall have the strength of the universe to back it. Nor is this tendency mere scepticism, any more than the other is credulity. It is of the nature of affirmation rather than denial; and for that reason, doubtless, the two seeming opposites harmonize so easily in us. We distrust the outlines of our truth, because it is part of our belief that the truth we see is greater than we see. It is a part of our wisdom to know that we are, as children or as prophets, speaking in a figure wiser things than we yet understand. We are conscious believers and conscious mystics at once; and the best type of religiousness seems to be found where each half of this double consciousness exists in high degree. God is most personal,—it is less than true to phrase otherwise the deep belief; but most personal,—what is that? and the belief greatens as it loses outline. God is incarnate—and a man at his sins, and the brute, and very dust, is reverend with the fact that so transcends the thought that recognizes it. The universe is righteous: that faith seems to underlie all others in us; but we are mystics when we say it, and confess that we only see in part. Our will is free. We shall live on. But, though reasons for both beliefs are strong, we know our confidence is a confidence amid ignorance.

It matters little what we call this tendency. It matters much if we do not have it strongly in us, and give the impulse exercise. Like the other, like any tendency, it is wise to suspect it, as well as to trust it. But those who suspect it most, as possibly endangering reason's right to eminent domain, often have it in no small degree. Where it is not present manifestly in a party of religious thinkers, that party inevitably seems cold, and dogmatic, whether it be one that has a creed and catechism, or one with none at all, and scouting them. Where it is present manifestly, the mind or the party is quite certainly "religious" in feeling, even when not wise in creed. For this escape from outlines is contact with the universal. By it the beliefs themselves change, and grow, and greaten. Our poetry, our lifts called "inspiration," our idealizations, our natural worshippings, are due to it. Because we see so dimly the features of historic saints, the "transparent shadows" stay with us as saints forever. Because God's face, too, is an ideal face, the purest pure never can outgrow the vision. Because we have not known another life than this, the generations have never ceased building fairer and fairer heavens as earth grew better, and our friends there have been all that we would have them. In our best moods, the impulse is sure to be in exercise. Things unrim and halos begin to play, and the halos make the things not less real, but more real. All persons have it in them, more or less. For those who have it at its best, all common things are seen partaking in the eternal and the infinite to which all really do belong.

Speaking for most of us, one may say, then, that we cannot avoid mysticism, and had better not try to altogether if we can. But one choice we can make. We can choose what grandeur we will face in being mystics. The ardent Catholic is a mystic before his Church; the ardent Protestant a mystic before the Bible; the Swedenborgian a mystic before his prophet; the Quaker a mystic before the lighted moods of his own mind. To-day men are becoming mystics before Nature, and to science belongs the praise.

The same physical science that is so hardly spoken of because its tendency is thought to be just the other way, and all the other way; that which limits, and defines, and sets all fast. It brings all to fixed laws, and physical forces, and material atoms, and makes the universe a vast mechanism. And this is true; but just as truly it fosters the other tendency in us, that which recognizes mystery. Men know more than ever before, and never did they know they knew so little, as to-day. We set out to track home some commonplace fact; as we follow, paths open on all sides to tempt us, and our trifle is seen to interlace with others,—till the cloverhead, or the atom, is found to need the universe to account for it, and we learn that we never fully explain anything. "Little flower," says Tennyson, "if I could understand what you are, root and all, and all in all, I should know what God and man is." But its new secrets dawn so fast as we gaze at it! Nearly sixty years ago, a French botanist began what he hoped to make a description of all plants. His son and grandson taking up his work have just stopped it, still unfinished, at the end of seventeen volumes, "lest the undertaking should kill off the third race of botanists." In the elder's time, one could elaborate at the rate of ten species a day; under the modern requirements of knowledge, only at the rate of one! And that is but a type of what is happening in all fields of research. Never seemed the Universe so vast as now. Never have its time and space so fast stretched their bounds —both ways, towards the infinitely great, and towards the infinitely little,—as before our eyes. Never has it seemed so veritably a Uni-verse as now, when the terms of religion—monotheism, omnipresence, omnipotence—have almost become tested realities of physics. The persistence and correlation of forces; the ether that "goeth and passeth through all things;" the sun-stir, transforming itself into all motions on the earth; the starry constitutions, like that of our home-planet; the gravitation, everywhere attracting and shaping all things by all others; the various phases of the evolution-fact—nebular hypothesis, origin of species, uniformity of law in human history,—are so many illustrations, the best that religion has, that in One all things live, and move, and have their being. "The hard gravel of materialism," this! Yes, but the atoms become finer atoms, and the ethers subtler ethers, as we sound our dim way through them; and there is no end: the two worlds—"matter," "spirit"—seem to become one mystery, and man, the microcosm, becomes a wonder more unguessed than ever. If our knowledge thus reveals our ignorance, it would seem as if the tremblers before such knowledge might be grateful. That very slur oddly turns to grace, when we remember that William Blake's verse about the gravel is the prose of science to-day:—

> "To see a world in a grain of sand,
> And a heaven in a wild-flower;
> To hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
> And eternity in an hour."

What is more, after physical science has thus intensified the wondrousness of everything, she crowns her gift of mystery by reminding us that, after all, she never touches being, only phenomena,—never the source, but only the methods.

A double debt religion owes her, then. She does define, and build fixed frameworks for our large conceptions; and yet in all she does she fills us with a sense of mystery. From this latter contribution, also, we are winning our richer poetry, our deepening reverence, our nobler religiousness. She fosters both the tendencies on which religious thinking thrives. W. C. G.

A SIGNIFICANT SPEECH.

On the Commencement occasion at Hamilton College, on Sunday evening, June 28, Dr. Philip Schaff, of Union Theological Seminary, delivered an address before the Society of Christian Research, in which, while advocating the separation of Church and State, as established in this country, he contended that the State is bound to maintain four things based upon Christianity: 1. Monogamy. 2. The quiet and order of the Sabbath. 3. The Bible in the schools. 4. The exemption of church property from taxation.

Dr. Schaff, it is well known, is a learned, able, and determined man. It is not, perhaps, as well known that he is a man of remarkable moderation. Clear in the Orthodoxy of his opinions, firm in his conviction of their truth, exceedingly tenacious of the main positions of the Evangelical faith, a strong polemic, a keen controversialist, a stubborn foe to rationalism, —he understands the arts of prudent compromise on non-essential points, and is as well recognized a lover of peace in the "Christian" camp as a valiant soldier against the general enemy. He has, moreover, a very extensive acquaintance among the different ranks and orders of the "Christian" community. His correspondence has been large; he has travelled; he has been a good deal sought and advised with, and should be particularly well acquainted with the sentiment of leading minds on leading subjects. Besides all this, Dr. Schaff is a man of uncommon practical energy as an executive mind. To him, more than to any other, the Evangelical Alliance owes its eminence. In its dogmatical basis, its working constitution, its arrangement for periodical meetings, his hand may be traced. But for his patient endeavors, the convocation of last October, in New York, might, probably would, never have been held. He has the power of inspiring others, as well as of toiling himself. The confidence placed in him, the admiration for his learning, the respect for his character, make him in some sort a representative person.

The above declaration, therefore, as coming from one so intelligent, able, and discreet, is especially significant. It may not be formidable. It may not indicate a compact or wide-spread organization to further the specified ends. It may not foreshadow the coming victory, or even the coming onset, of the "Christian" host. The manifesto seems to us a proof of blind infatuation, rather than of moral power. The writer of these lines cannot believe that there is any real danger of either of the catastrophes that Dr. Schaff evidently anticipates with pleasure. The only effect of such declarations as he puts forth will be the awakening of a deplorable controversy that may be attended by more deplorable excitement. We have reason to think that the multitudes (and there are multitudes) outside of "Christian" communities are susceptible of very intense emotion on just those four points,—we will say on the last three of them. The Germans and French—in general, the Europeans—require but little urging to become fiercely excited over them. Let the "Christian" Amendment of the Constitution be proposed along with them—as it certainly will be, for it belongs in the same category,—and seeds of dissension will be sown that may bear a bitter harvest. In the tumultuous West—in Kansas, in Texas, for example,—rebellion against the assumptions of "Christianity" is avowed and aggressive. As contrasted with their attitude, that of the cultivated Eastern radicals is conservative. Dr. Schaff and his friends may be well acquainted with the sentiment of the "Christian" community; but with the sentiment of the extra-Christian and anti-Christian community they must be lamentably ignorant, if they imagine it will quietly submit to the imposition of any ecclesiastical rules whatever. Mr. Abbot and his friends wish, we presume, to avert such calamity as must ensue from the unseemly pressure of these preposterous claims, and, by timely warning, to put the public so completely on its guard that the attempt cannot be made. They may be, after all, the emissaries of peace rather than the instigators of war; and they who do not share the fears they profess may yet thank them for the peace they ensure. O. B. F.

Literary Notices.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY TRANSFORMED.

There was a time, during the existence of the Radical, when that periodical and another, called, let us say, the Church Magazine, were habitually bound at the same office. By ill-luck or good-luck, the whole monthly issue of each once got into the covers destined for one. And in looking at the July number of the Atlantic it would be easy to guess that it had undergone a similar interchange of covers with the Overland. It is not merely that Harte, and Miller, and Stoddard (C. W.), appear as contributors. It is not merely that, as the publishers claim, there is a new class of writers in the Atlantic. But the other claim of the publishers, that "the famous names throughout the East" still appear in the Atlantic pages, is singularly set aside by this number. We see in it the consummation of the change which, under Mr. Howells' guidance, has been gradually going on. It is not merely that every one of the old recognized staff of writers is eliminated; but there is not, so far as I know, an article in this number (except that of Mr. Sanborn, a new contributor) which bears the name either of a New England man, or of a college-bred man. This will be generally recognized as quite a change from the earlier traditions of the Atlantic.

Were this the whole of the alteration, it would be a secondary matter; for the important thing is to have good writing, no matter whence it comes. Unfortunately, the effect of the change has thus far been to take the Atlantic entirely aside from its old ground—cultivated talent,—and to transfer it to a new ground, which the Overland has so well preoccupied that competition is almost useless; namely, talent in the rough. This, if anything, is the literary supply yielded by De Mille and Baker, by Stoddard, and Harney, and Deming. Joaquin Miller, in the present number, certainly shows talent, and is more polished and less imitative than usual. Harte, on the other hand, takes up the imitative manner; and Miller never suggested Byron or Swinburne more strongly than Harte's "For the King" recalls Browning's "The Statue and the Bust" (in Men and Women). The metre, the situations, and even the images—as "the body's jewelled sheath,"—are taken with singular frankness from Browning. Nevertheless, these two poets show some power, and so do some of the prose writers. If it were really the Overland which we were reading, we could forgive Miller for saying that the ship in the desert is "Some like a grand, sweet woman," and such eccentricities. We could forgive the tiresome recurrence of the stock figures of the Border-State style of romance, where the hero is introduced in some such way as this: "A great wad of tobacco disfigured his mobile mouth, which" [his mouth?] "he first spat carefully into his hand, and then threw into the grate." ("Katy's Fortune," p. 37.) In a new country, with a wholly new literature, a good deal can be pardoned, where there is visible talent. But is it so hard to find an outlet for this, and are there so few dime novels in the market, that we must devote to this work what was once our best magazine? Is it asking too much to wish that there might be one corner left in American literature for cultivated talent, as well as for crude talent; a place somewhere for the prose of Holmes and Lowell, as well as for that of "Professor" De Mille, and "Will Wallace Harney"? That is all.

I have no wish to speak too roughly of a writer so pleasing as Mr. Howells; and have tried to convince myself that an impression of tameness and feebleness in the opening of his new story may be the result of my own obtuseness. Yet is it not singular that when Mr. Howells coins a word, which he not infrequently does, it should be usually some new phrase for weakness, and not a phrase that errs on the side of strength? His ladies give "a frailish start." His mother is "fragilely unlike her daughter." Even the oriole's note, the most inspiring and vigorous of all bird-notes (unless it be the crowing of the cock), suggests no rousing appeal to Mr. Howells, but only plaintive memories, such as the delicate warble of the blue-bird might be supposed to bring back. His poem, "While the Oriole Sings," is soft and graceful; but is so remote from all the emotions naturally suggested by the bird, that it is not surprising when the Western papers assure us that Mr. Howells never really lived by the "blue Miami," and that there is not a "cottonwood" within two hundred miles of that stream.

These things seem to indicate a certain want of fibre in Mr. Howells' intellectual composition; and this accounts not merely for the lavish admiration which he first, on coming East, was wont to heap on smooth poets like Longfellow; but for the reaction which now drives him away from cultivated power; and bids him seek crude power only in his writers, in the hope apparently of making the Atlantic into a second Overland. Yet is there any real hope for our literature, unless our editors can steer somewhere between the extremes, and can give us a mode of writing that shall be cultivated and vigorous at the same time? X. Y. Z.

Communications.

CO-OPERATION AND THE LABOR MOVEMENT.

F. A. HINCKLEY VERSUS "C. M."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

After three careful readings of "C. M.'s" article in THE INDEX of May 21, I fail to see that he has advanced anything that cannot be found in the trite arguments of capitalists for generations past.

Had "C. M." referred, as he could justly have done, to palpable errors connected with all labor reform, while also speaking with equal justice of the unmitigated selfishness which attaches itself to the capitalist, I should have felt that the subject was being handled with some degree of fairness; and in a most teachable spirit would I have sat at the feet of "C. M." to learn wisdom.

But to be told, in substance, that Mr. Hinckley's paper was at fault in nearly every point, and that no coöperative system yet hinted at by man compares in excellence with the present division of labor and its relations to capital, were statements too sweeping to carry conviction.

Have I misconstrued "C. M."? Let me briefly quote from him. "The vast, complicated, but most beneficial system of the division of labor is nothing but the most perfect possible coöperative system, not limited to one occupation, locality, district, or State, but extending over the entire civilized globe. . . . What are the results of all the coöperative movements ever organized by man, in comparison to those produced by this coöperative system of Nature, based on the division of labor and self-interest checked by unfettered competition"?

If "whatever is is right," and the present system (which is but the product of human ignorance and imperfection) is well enough, then is agitation a grave error, and all so-called reformatory movements should retire in disgrace.

But, seriously, are we to judge all new movements by their success or failure at the start? Is it any argument against new systems that they have not the present strength and respectability of the old? The Protestant Reformation was, of course, a failure in the eyes of the conservatives of that day. Then it was antagonism to the voice of God. Now it is antagonism to the "coöperative system of Nature." But when we interpret Nature, let us carefully discriminate between its ripe and its unripe fruit,—the latter bitter indeed with injustice, oppression, and a very unfair division of labor. To affirm dogmatically that this or that course is the true system of Nature proves nothing. Show us that it brings the greatest good to the greatest number. The "self-sacrifice, self-control, and self-abnegation," referred to by "C. M." as necessary to the accumulation of wealth, is not a virtue confined to the wealthy alone. It is also true that many of the poor do not lack that intelligence which, combined with self-sacrifice, would, under suitable conditions, bring them wealth. But, holding the wolf of poverty by the ears, they are in effect hand-tied, and cannot extricate themselves. Without combined effort of a very radical nature they cannot change their conditions, or make their immediate environment less grinding or crushing.

I could carry "C. M." to some homes where lives of wretchedness attest perpetual, life-crushing sacrifice, accompanied with that refinement of intelligence which makes the torture more complete. For the sufferers are aware that capital too often imposes a denial upon the poor which the family of the capitalist would not endure for a day.

Last fall, an old gentleman of my acquaintance gave me the most remarkable lecture on self-denial, non-accumulation, and non-production, I ever heard. With every want supplied, and a handsome balance over in real estate, government bonds, and bank account, it was a mystery to him how the poor could be so foolish, so short-sighted, as to spend all their money. A careful inquiry into the method this old gentleman had adopted, in accumulating his wealth through a long succession of years, revealed the fact that it was by what is termed "turning corners." Born with an infernal shrewdness which was equalled only by his utter indifference to human misery, he had been in the habit, in connection with several bankers, of buying up at certain seasons such articles as were most necessary for the health and comfort of the community. Quietly storing them in out-of-the-way places, the price would soon advance. It mattered not whether it were fuel or provisions; whether an epidemic, or quarantine, or the holding of the market elsewhere (a part of the combination) prevented the supply which would have otherwise naturally flowed in to meet the demand. The conditions for complete success were brought to bear with unerring skill. Two such operations brought him seventy thousand dollars ($70,000) in three years. What charming self-sacrifice and self-abnegation! Perhaps the people were fools to buy; but they did not like to starve, freeze, or get up a riot!

This benevolent old gentleman was greatly concerned for the safety of my soul. Oblivious to temporal woes, he seemed really distressed to think that the larger portion of humanity were going to spiritual destruction. With tears in his eyes, and voice choked with emotion and tobacco juice, he told me he feared I would go to that place where the fire is not quenched, and so forth (he quoted from a gold-bound book), if I did not join the Baptist Church. This dear old man is quite satisfied with the present distribution of labor and capital; furthermore (and let us all rejoice), he seems happy with his insurance policy against the coming fire.

I am indeed grateful to Mr. Hinckley and "C. M." for agitating this subject, and hope it will not end here.

Let me in conclusion ask "C. M." if he seriously affirms (as he says) that "poverty is entirely due to non-production and non-accumulation?" If so, is it entirely the fault of the poor that they do not accumulate?

That labor must work out its own salvation, and that knowledge is its only savior, is self-evident. How to read aright Nature's laws, discriminating between them and those customs and habits which, from age, have become a second nature, is the problem. Dogmatic assertions will never solve it. By little and little, as the rocks are worn away, in "the reformation of selfishness, and the education of ignorance," will the reconciliation come.

Who can lead the struggling poor to a point in knowledge they have not yet attained, to an intelligent coöperation which shall be indeed the dawn of a new era? P.

NEW ORLEANS.

INDIVIDUAL NATURE AND HUMAN NATURE.

A writer in THE INDEX says: "We are constrained to say with the utmost deliberation that, although we have steadfastly considered Henry Ward Beecher innocent until he should be proved guilty, we must now consider him guilty until he shall be proved innocent." That expresses our mind also; and every lover of fair play, of truth, and of pure and undefiled religion, must, we think, find his thought expressed there. The current statements to date lead to exactly that. But why keep agitating the matter, say some? So long as innocence may be buried under débris, men will work asking no pay. There are times when to "assume a virtue if you have it not" will not answer. The real article is required now; the note is presented for redemption—specie, or bankruptcy.

The "Beecher scandal" may be briefly summed up thus: A story was printed and circulated, which, though undoubtedly false as currently reported, had more or less elements of truth in it. A word from Mr. Beecher, if it could have been spoken, would have settled the matter; that word has been, wisely or unwisely, withheld. Then followed proceedings which need not here be referred to, including the action of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Plymouth Church, and the Congregational Council; and they have all been in the interest of Beecher—to protect his reputation, not to get at the truth.

It is probable that the Council, under the lead of the Rev. Leonard Bacon, had for its object something higher; but it was "euchred" by the action of Plymouth Church. The course pursued by lovers of Beecher, or lovers of that church, rather than lovers of truth, might, under some circumstances, be politic and wise; but when it included injustice or ruin to another, who had certainly the right to suppose himself also worth saving, then the truth, and nothing less than the truth, must be spoken, though the heavens fall. It is not so certain that the heavens would fall, even if Plymouth Church should.

As the matter stands, Tilton winces under their combined pressure—who would not, if innocent and suffering for the guilty?—and he writes a letter, an admirable letter, which speaks for itself. Some have called that letter indefinite; but the tragedy connected with it is so current that his letter may be properly considered a definite one; and it indicated forbearance, moderation, grief, and a reservation of force that may yet find expression. This is briefly as the matter stands at present. Some one writing on this subject says to Mr. Beecher: "Unless you can explain your words, no appeal to your past life, or to an assumed magnanimity, can exempt you from the legitimate construction which we must put upon your written apology to Theodore Tilton;" and we think that this is vox populi.

It is always unpleasant to find clay in any part of the structure of our gods. There are certainly symptoms of it in Mr. Beecher in this connection. We hope for disappointment for the sake of civilization and religion; but the common-sense of mankind is not going into eclipse for the sake of saving a great soul from death, and hiding a multitude of sins. The world will forgive and forget any frailty in Mr. Beecher, if any be proved, and possibly waive repentance; but dodging the issue, or cowardice, will kill him as dead as Colfax.

Suppose the scandal to be more or less true, and that supposition is proper as the case now stands, what a complex thing a human being is! How extremes meet in some men! Is there any correlation, accidental or otherwise, between passional and intellectual vigor? Is the intellect clear and cold; and, to move the hearts of the masses, must there be a power behind it, that is earthly and sensual (not necessarily devilish), to warm it with magnetism, to make it effectual? Can a man be a consistent religious power if corrupt in his life? And then again what is virtue? Shall a man who has transcendent gifts for the elevation of his fellows be speechless, because, like Origen, he finds his spirit willing but his flesh weak? We would like to carry out these thoughts, but content ourselves by quoting a passage from Burns:—

> "One point must still be greatly dark,
> The moving why they do it;
> And just as lamely can ye mark
> How far perhaps they rue it."

Burns was not a minister; but he was a religious teacher, nevertheless, and full of that power that draws hearts upward, and the world still listens to him. Do his life's short-comings detract from his thought? The tenderest truths he so beautifully set in words that they have become signs in the heart's zodiac. I have been made better, and the world has been made better, for Burns' unsurpassed poetry. It is a pity he was morally weak; but could we spare his immortal words? We would have liked them from a pure fountain; but we take them gladly with all their associations. The question will come up, Could he have produced the immortal thoughts that shine in his writings, had his life been other than it was? Is the lily's fragrance necessarily born of miasmatic pools? The Primer based upon the Bible says—

> "Uriah's beauteous wife
> Made David seek his life."

But we forget the king who robbed the Hittite of his wife, and we remember the psalmist who touched his harp and filled the world with songs of piety. Now we like the truth if we can get it. We love the psalms none the less because David had some imperfections in his character. We sympathize with him in his repentance, and feel that we are all more or less human. We think Uriah, or his griefs, would have got a better hearing to-day than then; but we are satisfied as it is, for justice was done.

Now if the facts of the Beecher-Tilton matter are as reported, or supposed, we are glad that the latter has said enough to enable us eventually to find out the value of x. We think society is better when pimples are on the skin than when they are hidden in the blood. We are not prepared yet to do away with our marriage laws, but we can very easily conceive of conditions under them that will apologize for much that is called crime. It is very possible, even if Beecher has stepped aside and been human, that there may be excuse enough to take the curse off in the sight of God and man. But, unless he prove himself immaculate, no popularity, or power, or wealth in individuals or churches, should crush an innocent man for fear that professed godliness shall suffer. We do not intend to intimate that Mr. Beecher is a profligate man. We feel impressed that he is not; we feel also as strongly that he has not been a Joseph, and his church will fail to make him one, and efforts at whitewashing will make his case worse than it really is. He will be whiter when he speaks than he is now.

The mass of the people are averse to seeing churches, or individuals, put on airs, and claiming to be holier and better than the general average, unless they really are. Does any one wonder that so many are indifferent to church institutions, or at least that they mix common-sense with their religion, diluting it so that the sulphurous taste is wholly gone, and hardly now perceptible in the most rigid churches; that religion, like some diseases, is now of a milder character than formerly, and that even the saving of souls is not the object of church associations, which are more for social intercourse and worldly prosperity? Their distinctive features are kept up, but without regard to logic or consistency; no one can tell the difference between saints and sinners, ecclesiastically speaking, in the daily walks of life. If anything, the Young Men's Christian Union is ahead of the Young Men's Christian Association. The men who open libraries on Sundays, and tax churches, are more to be depended upon than those who shut the one, and do not tax the other.

Now comes the Beecher scandal, showing signs that the great preacher was only veneered and not solid mahogany. What if the pine should be exposed in Beecher, just as it was in David, and Burns, and others, dead and living; we shall still respect human nature, and be astonished at the capabilities even of pine. With regard to Beecher and Tilton, may the truth come out, and justice be done; and if the minister proves weak it will only help, like everything else, to narrow the gap between church pretension and the outside world. And we have hopes that even the outside world, with the help of science and rational religion, will eventually be brought on to a higher plane than even the church formerly occupied. And to this end, may Liberal Leagues and Radical Clubs abound! JOHN WETHERBEE.

NOW AND THEN we are reminded of the blackness of superstition which once brooded over the world, but from which civilized nations have now largely escaped. The following, which comes from Mexico, on the 18th inst., sounds as if it had been extracted from the terrible and bloody records of the thirteenth century:—

"Senor Castilla, Alcalde of Jacobo, in the State of Sinaloa, has officially reported to the prefect of his district that on April 4th he arrested, tried, and burned alive Jose Maria Bonilla and his wife Diega for sorcery, it having been proved that they had bewitched one Silvestre Zacarias. The day before the excution citizen Porras, as a final test, made Zacarias take three swallows of the blessed water, whereupon the latter vomited fragments of a blanket and bundles of hair. The Alcalde states that the people were exasperated against the sorcerers, and demanded that they be burned. The sentence was executed with his approval, and he adds that he has his eye on other sorcerers against whom complaints have been made by citizens. The official Diario of this city confirms the report of the outrage, and says several families in the town have compelled the officer to burn another old woman and her son for the same cause."

This comes from a so-called Christian State, where churches and monasteries are numerous, where people look with ill-concealed contempt on the ignorant heathen. But no more unholy deed was ever committed by the most abject pagan.—Liberal Christian.

MOST EVERYBODY will sympathize with the St. Johnsbury (Vt.) boy who lately had some teeth filled by a dentist, and who expressively declared that "it was like driving a crow-bar into frozen ground."

EARLY EGYPTIAN LITERATURE.

(From Bayard Taylor's Correspondence to the New York Tribune.)

CAIRO, EGYPT, April 3, 1874.

I must return once more to Mariette's discoveries. In order to appreciate their importance, the reader must remember that the difficulties in the way of deciphering the hieroglyphic characters have been so nearly overcome, that most of the civic or religious records are now read with almost as much facility as if they had been inscribed in Hebrew or Syriac. Although Champollion's inspired genius and marvellous good fortune only gave him the interpretation of about seven hundred characters, more than four thousand five hundred are now intelligible to the scholars of Germany and France. Moreover, it is settled that Egypt had her written language long before the Pyramids were built, together with all the main features of her religion, and a well-developed, if not an elaborate, political organization.

In proportion as the mysteries of the old Egyptian faith are revealed to us, we discover, in place of a gross and grotesque mythology, the evidences of a symmetrical theological system, based upon a profound philosophical apprehension of the forces of Nature. Mariette says:—

"On the summit of the Egyptian Pantheon hovers a sole God, immortal, increate, invisible, and hidden in the inaccessible depths of his own essence. He is the Creator of Heaven and Earth; he made all that exists, and nothing was made without him. This is the God, the knowledge of whom was reserved for the initiated, in the sanctuaries. But the Egyptian mind could not, or would not, remain at this sublime altitude. It considered the world, its formation, the principles which govern it, man and his earthly destiny, as an immense drama in which the one Being is the only actor. All proceeds from him, and all returns to him. But he has agents who are his own personified attributes, who become deities in visible forms, limited in their activity, yet partaking of his own powers and qualities."

In fact, as in all forms of faith, there is a ladder rising from pure realism to the highest pinnacle of spiritual aspiration; and individual souls, or classes of souls, rest at the height which corresponds to their quality.

We must suppose that a people so far developed as the Egyptians under the Ancient Empire had also a Literature. The character of their art would attest it, if nothing else. Songs, poems, parables, perhaps romances, must have been written, chanted, or recited; and even if the isolated grandeur and awe attached to the rulers prohibited the inscription of such works upon solid tablets, they could hardly have escaped being here and there deposited, on papyrus scrolls, with the bodies of their authors or their admirers. The scribes appear to have been a large and important class, as early as the fourth dynasty; and they, in combination with the priesthood, probably produced the prayers, invocations, and litanies of the Temples, which became Orthodox, and therefore invariable for the later Empire.

I believe no fragments of a purely secular literature have yet been found; but the many translations made by Mariette show the high poetic character of the early religious and historic literature. Certain forms of the faith, in fact, lent themselves as readily to poetry as those of the Greek Mythology. Its basis was strongly spiritual, the leading article being a belief in the immortality of the soul, and its future reward or punishment for the deeds done in the body,—a belief, the earnestness of which, among the Egyptians, is all the more remarkable, because it seems to have been quite weak or imperfect among the ancient Hebrews. Then the myths of Isis and Osiris, typifying the struggle of Light with Darkness; the beautiful attributes of the young god Horus; the rising sun represented by Harpocrates issuing from the lotus-flower, with numberless others, offer images which would kindle the imagination of even a primitive poet. One of the oldest specimens was found at Memphis, on a tablet of the Ancient Empire. It had belonged, according to the inscription, to the tomb of a royal scribe, named Anaoua; and a part of it contains a remarkable invocation to the Sun:—

HYMN TO THE SUN.

"Words pronounced in worshipping the Sun, who rises for the Creation from the solar mountain, and who goeth down in the divine life; by the Osiris, the royal scribe, the chief of the house, Anaoua, proclaimed the just. He speaketh:—

"Hail to thee, when thou risest in the solar mountain under the form of Ra, and when thou goest down under the form of Ma! Thou circlest about the heavens, and men behold and turn toward thee, hiding their faces! Would that I might accompany thy majesty when thou displayest thyself on the morning of each day! Thy beams upon the faces of men could no one describe; gold is as nought, compared to thy beams. The lands divine, they are seen in pictures; the countries of Arabia, they have been numbered; thou alone art concealed! Thy transformations are equal to those of the celestial ocean; it marches as thou marchest. Grant that I reach the land of eternity and the region of them that have been approved; that I be reunited with the fair and wise spirits of Ker-nefer, and that I appear among them to contemplate thy beauty, on the morning of each day!"

A thorough poetic spirit breathes through the mysticism of this chant. The beginning half suggests the invocation of Ossian, but has a freshness and simplicity far beyond the sentimental resonance of the latter. Behind the material sun which is addressed one distinctly feels the principle of good, of light and intelligence, which its orb symbolizes.

The next quotation I shall make is from a tablet celebrating the victories of Thothmes III., which was chiselled for the great temple of Karnak. This monarch, one of the greatest who ruled in Egypt, was the fourth successor of Amosis, who overthrew the Hyksos, and lived in the seventeenth century before Christ. He was a famous conqueror; during his reign, according to an inscription still existing, "Egypt set her frontiers wherever she pleased." He subjected Nubia, Syria, Mesopotamia, and perhaps a part of Asia Minor; and it was apparently toward the close of his reign, on the occasion of some solemn celebration of his victories, that the chant of praise was written. It is a poem, in the true sense of the word, not an historical document, and its author was perhaps some priestly Theban laureate. It represents a period two thousand years later than the Hymn to the Sun, and is consequently cast in a much more symmetrical and artistic form. The opening is a welcome given by the god, Amun-Ra (the Jupiter Ammon of the Greeks), "the lord of the thrones of the world," to King Thothmes, on the return of the latter from his triumphs:—

"Come to me and be rejoiced in beholding my grace, O mine avenger, living forever! I shine through thine adorations; my heart dilates to thy welcome in my temple. I enfold thy limbs with mine arms, to give them health and life. Pleasant are thy favors to me, through the image which thou hast set up for me in my sanctuary. It is I who compensate thee; it is I who give thee power and victory over all the nations; it is I who cause the knowledge and the fear of thee to be upon all countries, and that the terror of thee reaches even unto the four supports of the heavens!"

* * * * * * * * *

It seems to me that the Hebrew literature draws its style and character as directly from the Egyptian as the Latin does from the Greek. If the lofty theism preserved as a mystery in the sanctuaries of the temples struck a far profounder root in Israel, during its free and glorious ages, and blossomed in the highest and divinest forms of spiritual aspiration, the tone and cadence of its expression suggest none the less the language of the Nile. Who shall say, indeed, whether the chief element of Faith, purified by the inspired genius of Moses, was not originally the same?

If a collection were made of similar or equivalent expressions, in Egyptian and Hebrew, it would surely be richer and more striking than is now generally supposed. Beginning with an ancient inscription on the temple of Saïs, "I am who is, has been, and ever shall be," we should doubtless find a long series of reverential phrases, which are already familiar to our ears. Mariette says that the following, from one of the early Egyptian rituals, is repeated so frequently on stelæ and tombs that we are justified in supposing it to be part of a daily prayer: "Through my love have I drawn near to God. I have given bread to him who was hungry, water to him who was athirst, garments to him who was naked, and a place of shelter to the abandoned."

One more passage, in which an historical event is narrated both in a poetic and dramatic fashion, must conclude my specimens of the old Egyptian literature. It is sculptured on the exterior wall of the temple of Karnak, and also on the northern front of the large pylon at Luxor. Some Egyptologists call it the "Poem of Pen-ta-our," but I am unable to say whether that is the author's name. The subject is an exploit of Rameses II. (Sesostris), toward the close of his eighteen years of war with the people of Asia, and therefore between the years 1350 and 1400 B.C. It appears that under Rameses II. a series of rebellions occurred throughout the regions conquered by his predecessors, Sethi and Rameses I. In Nubia, Libya, Asia Minor, and along the borders of Media and Assyria, the tribes rose against the Egyptian rule. One by one they were reconquered, but a people, called in the inscription "the vile race of Khetas," held out stubbornly to the end, and were never thoroughly overcome. They stood at the head of a confederacy of smaller tribes, the names of which (Aradus, Patasa, Kashkash, Cherobe, etc.) may hereafter determine their geographical locality. In the fifth year of his reign, in marching upon the city of Atesch, Rameses II., deceived by the Bedouins, whom the Khetas bribed to act as guides for him, became separated from his army, and suddenly found himself alone, surrounded by the enemy. What then happened is thus related by the poet:—

"His Majesty, in the health and strength of his life, rising like the god Month, put on the panoply of battle. Urging forward his chariot, he entered into the army of the vile Khetas; he was alone, no one else with him. He found himself surrounded by two thousand five hundred chariots, and the most rapid warriors of the vile Khetas and the numerous tribes who accompanied them rushed to stay his course. Each of their chariots held three men, and the king had with him neither his princess, nor his generals, nor the captains of the bowmen and the chariots."

In this perilous strait, Rameses addressed the following prayer to the supreme God of Egypt:—

"My bowmen and my horsemen have abandoned me: not one of them is here to combat beside me! What, then, is the purpose of my father Ammon? Is he a father who denies his son? Have I not gone acccording to thy word? O my father! Thy mouth, has it not guided my marches, and thy counsels, have they not directed me? Have I not celebrated thee with many and splendid festivals, and have I not filled thy mansion with my spoils? The whole world hath assembled to dedicate to thee its offerings. I have enriched thy domain, immolating to thee thirty thousand beeves, with all sweet-smelling herbs, and the most precious perfumes. With blocks of stone have I raised temples for thee, and for thee have I set up the eternal trees. I have brought obelisks from Elephantina, and even I have caused the everlasting stones to be moved. For thee my great ships traverse the sea, and carry to thee the tributes of the nations. I invoke thee, O my father! I am in the midst of throngs of unknown people, and I am alone before thee; no one is beside me. My bowmen and my horsemen abandoned me when I cried to them; not one of them heard me when I called them to my aid. But I choose Ammon rather than thousands of bowmen, than thousands of horsemen, than myriads of young heroes, even were they all assembled together!"

The god answers:—

"Thy words have resounded in Hermonthis, O Rameses! I am near thee, I am thy father, the Sun: my hand is with thee, and I count more to thee than millions of men assembled together! The two thousand five hundred chariots, when I shall be in their midst, shall be broken before thy horses. The hearts of thine enemies shall grow weak within their sides, and all their members shall be relaxed. They shall fail to discharge their arrows, and shall have no courage to hold the lance. I shall cause them to plunge into the waters, even as the crocodile plunges; they shall be thrown one upon the other, and they shall slay one another. Not one will I suffer to look behind him: he that falls shall not rise again."

* * * * * * * * *

Six times Rameses drives his chariot through the hostile ranks, slaying many of their best warriors. Then some of his generals and horsemen come to his assistance, and are greeted with a sharp reproof, which, indeed, they seem to have well deserved. In the evening the whole Egyptian army arrives, and finds the field of combat covered with the bodies of the slain. The generals thus address the king:—

"Good fighter, thou of the dauntless heart, thyself hast done the work of thy bowmen and thy horsemen. Son of the god Tioum, formed out of his own substance, thou hast effaced the country of the Khetas, with thy victorious sword. Thou, O my warrior, art the lord of all strength: never was a king like to thee, who fighteth for thy soldiers on the day of battle. Thou, king of the great heart, art the first in the combat; thou art first of the valiant before thine army, in the face of the whole world risen against thee."

Rameses replies to them:—

"No one of you hath well done in abandoning me thus, alone among mine enemies. The princes and the captains have not joined their hands to mine. I have fought, I have repulsed thousands of the tribes, and I was alone. The horses which carried me were: Power in the Thebaïd and Repose in the Superior Region. They are they which my hand found when I was alone among mine enemies. I order that corn shall be served to them before the god Phra, each day, when I shall again be within my royal pylons."

The exaggerations of the poet and the conventional honors he accords to the king do not prevent us from recognizing some of the features of an actual occurrence. Rameses no doubt fell into an ambuscade, and possessing superior arms, armor, and horses, defended himself gallantly until assistance arrived. The flattery is not much more excessive than in most modern paintings of battles, wherein the crowned head is always represented as halting or riding forward, under the heaviest fire of the enemy.

These fragments belong to the earliest literature of the human race; for the last of them, just quoted, was written while Moses was yet a child.

IT IS VERY CLEAR that now that English people have decided upon compulsory education they mean to carry it out. It is no half measure. It is not a question of sending the children to the public schools. It does not matter where they get their education so long as they do get it. And it must be a good education. Moreover, when we see this sweeping doctrine enforced by a summary proceeding before a police magistrate, there is no room left for doubt as to the vigor and resolution with which the principle is being followed. It will be instructive, then, to watch its progress. A reluctance to interfere in any way with the rights of the citizen has induced many ardent advocates of education in America to pronounce against any system of compulsion. Hitherto the only illustrations of its operation in Europe have been made under conditions which very much lessened their value. But in England, as here, freedom is the privilege of the people, and it remains therefore to be seen how such energetic measures will be received. In a few isolated quarters there have been already some grumblings, hardly amounting, however, to open expressions of discontent. These have arisen, not as antagonistic to education, but on the argument that poor people cannot afford to lose the earnings of their children for so long a period as the law required them to attend school. The force of this has been in a measure destroyed by Mr. Disraeli's government, in the proposal, endorsed by Parliament, to lower the standard of elementary education which is fixed as necessary to be reached by even the poorest children. But the primary principle laid down will still be retained, "that children are not to be sacrificed to the interests of their parents." Education is to be vigorously enforced, and it is easy to see that results of no small magnitude must ensue. The system, in its present development, is one which the friends of popular education everywhere cannot but look upon with lively interest.—N. Y. Times.

CAUTIOUS.—The caution of the New Englander, in giving an answer to a direct question, was illustrated to me, says a correspondent, the other day, when I asked an Eastern friend of mine, whose family were not noted for very active habits, "Was not your father's death very sudden?" Slowly drawing one hand from his pocket, and pulling down his beard, the interrogated cautiously replied, "Waal, rather sudden, for him."—New York Express.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions,		10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c. 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls ..... .75

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (Dr. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (Mrs. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.... 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00
Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, " 'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (Mrs. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms upon Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews..... 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialognes of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.... 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (Prof. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.

The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (Mrs. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.00
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.
Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHAPTERS
FROM
The Bible of the Ages.
FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by
GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

NEW SINGING BOOKS!

THE LEADER!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Choirs, Conventions, and Singing Classes will welcome this new Church Music-Book, filled with new tunes, anthems, chants, etc., etc., all of the best quality.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per Dozen.

The Song Monarch!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Especially for Singing Classes. First 86 pages contain the elementary course, the same as that in the LEADER, which course is followed by more than 100 pages filled with the most interesting Secular and Sacred Music for practice. Equal to the SONG KING in interest.

Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

AMERICAN
School Music Readers.

Three carefully graded Song Books for Common Schools, by L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN.

Book 1st. For Primary Schools. Price 35 cts.
Book 2d. For Lower "Grammar" Classes. Price 50 cts.
Book 3d. For Higher "Grammar" Classes. Price 60 cts.

The Course is easy, progressive, interesting, and has been thoroughly tested in schools near Boston.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.
FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1874. WHOLE NO. 239.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS is nominated by the New York Tribune as United States Senator, from New York, to succeed R. E. Fenton. It is certainly a nomination fit to be made.

WE HAVE HEARD several excellent citizens of Rhode Island express the wish that Col. Higginson might be elected to the United States Senate from that State, in place of Mr. Sprague whose term soon expires.

IN THE CRISIS which is on the Unitarian Denomination, Dr. Bartol's trumpet gives no uncertain sound,—as may be known by reading his communication in another part of this paper.

MR. BEECHER explains that "Christianity takes us out of the leading strings of times, and seasons, and rites, and bids us walk in liberty, using our own faculties." Well, if Christianity does that, we have no quarrel with it. Mr. Beecher's Christianity, no doubt, does; but is he sure that the Christianity of the Christian Church does this?

REV. SAMUEL LONGFELLOW has been preaching for several Sundays in Baraboo, Wisconsin. A correspondent writing from there, says: "We are enjoying Mr. Longfellow's visit here very much, but are at a loss to know what we shall do when he leaves us." We hope some other man, or woman, next as good, may succeed Mr. Longfellow at Baraboo, and give our friends there a living gospel.

WE THINK that many readers of THE INDEX will agree with us, that the essay of Mr. Frothingham, in this number—entitled "Tide Levels"—is a most inspiring one. It breathes a deep spirit of hope of man, of faith in human progress. It inculcates a large patience with the slow process of evolution, a broad charity for every human short-coming and imperfection. We may also say that we find Mr. Frothingham, in his article on "Organization," expressing our own views almost to completion. Another view, however, is expressed by Mr. Holland, in the department of "Communications," which will doubtless better please some others.

OUR NEIGHBORS the Congregationalists, in their handsome building opposite THE INDEX office, on Beacon Street, have some fine show-windows, in which they keep on exhibition their elegant books and pictures. Although disliking some of their doctrines, we do not neglect the opportunity to regale our eyes with the sight of whatever is beautiful which they have to display. The other day we saw a queer combination of prints in their window. The centre piece was the picture of some red-headed, sanguinary-looking game-cocks in the attitude of competing for the field; just above was a gilded card bearing the motto, "Be gentle unto all;" just below was a picture of a woman clinging to the cross; while at the left was another picture of the Christ-child. We could but admire the striking contrasts which the ingenuity of our neighbors contrived to exhibit, albeit we wondered a little if they equally endorsed all the lessons conveyed thereby to the innocent spectator!

THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY of Providence, R. I., recently had a very pleasant Picnic, which, in some sort, was the termination of their season of lectures, that has been so successful. The Picnic was held on the grounds of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Chace, in Valley Falls, near Providence. The "exercises" consisted in luxurious lounging on green grass under shady trees, delightful strolling and chatting, a most appetizing lunch in the green woods, and some capital after-dinner speeches by members of the Society; who proved that they not only can be intelligent auditors of others, but excellent talkers themselves. It was our privilege to be present on this occasion, and we know whereof we speak. The Society has had nineteen lectures during the season; and will resume its meetings next fall. In the meantime, it holds occasional meetings, which are addressed by its own members. We wish many other places might follow the example of Providence, and inaugurate free religious Sunday meetings.

ONE WHO has just been reading Plato's Banquet asks: "Why do we not have such talks now-a-days?" We suppose the chief reason is that we have no Plato now, and no Socrates. And yet we can remember, in the early and palmy days of the First Radical Club, having heard some talks among its members, which at least reminded us of the conversations between the Athenian sage and his friends. Emerson, Alcott, Bartol, Wasson, Weiss, Higginson, Mrs. Cheney, and others were no mean substitutes for the old Greek conversationalists; and we can imagine that, in the circle which Margaret Fuller used to draw around her, there was much high talk on high themes. For a truly great and memorable conversation, it is required, not merely that great minds should be present, but sincere, candid, patient truth-seekers, who shall speak as they are inspired, without prejudice, without fear, without haste, without self-reference. In such a quiet circle, the truth comes oftener and fuller to view than on the platform, or in the public convention.

AMONG the memorable events which occurred in the year 1774, was the discovery of oxygen by Dr. Joseph Priestley. It is well known that Dr. Priestley spent the later years of his eventful life in this country, living, and dying, in the town of Northumberland in Pennsylvania. It is proposed, in commemmoration of the remarkable discovery by Dr. Priestley, as well as of his own not less remarkable character as a man, to have a reunion of American chemists in Northumberland, on the 31st of July, for mutual exchange of ideas and observations, and for fostering a feeling of fraternity among the members of the profession. Addresses and essays will be delivered and read, a "loan exhibition" will be held for the display of apparatus, books, manuscripts, and so forth, belonging to Dr. Priestley, and of objects illustrating the history of chemistry; and a social time generally will be indulged in. Arrangements are already completed for this reunion, and it promises to be a very successful affair.

"NONQUITT" is the name of a new sea-side resort, which is located about six miles below New Bedford. It is reached by land, or by water, from New Bedford, and is one of the most delightfully natural and charmingly beautiful places we ever visited by the sea-coast. Aside from the uncommon natural attractions of the place itself, its social peculiarity is that it is possessed and occupied almost exclusively by radicals, who most numerously hail from Rev. Mr. Potter's Society, in New Bedford. They have bought over five hundred acres of land at Nonquitt, which they have laid out into house-lots, and upon which they have projected many improvements. We do not suppose that this radical summer community would refuse, by any means, to receive good, moral Orthodox people; and yet, in their social character, they cannot help making it, as it really is, especially attractive to radically-inclined persons. We passed a very pleasant Sunday at Nonquitt, quite recently; and our pleasure was so great while there, that it seemed to us that we had found the "promised land" spoken of in Scripture,—which, no doubt, was intended by the Lord to be occupied mainly by radicals!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Tide Levels.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

The old preacher who took such gloomy views of the world, setting down prosperity, ambition, love of learning, search for happiness, as vanity and idle chasing after wind—the melancholy man, who, if he were Solomon, might make one thank heaven that he himself was not a king,—cautions people against seeking the cause why the former days were better than these. That they were better he has not a doubt; of that there can be no question. His times, of course, were times of degeneracy. Thus old is the habit of thinking that none ever suffered or sorrowed as we do. Our sensations are, in fact, the only sensations there are. Feeling is always in the present tense. It is our pain that hurts, our grief that stings, our calamity that crushes, our sins that appal. The past is silent; it utters no cry save the inarticulate one that is breathed in records which only the very few care to read; its iniquities are under ground, buried in archives that only literary grave-diggers can explore; its poor have ceased to moan; its wretched have done with cursing their fates; its ruffians are finally disposed of. It is silent, therefore happy. An hour's pain makes us forget years of cheerful life, makes us imagine that delicious sensations are the lot of all the rest of mankind. The delusion is born of ignorance; it is the offspring of deficient reflection and feeble sympathy.

To this natural source of despondency, arising from temperament and experience, is added another that is due to reflection. A theoretical ground exists for the complaint. The strange doctrine of fall and depravity is worked into our blood, and is felt unconsciously in our casual judgments. This doctrine compels men to take the most discouraging views of themselves, their neighbors, their social affairs, and their immediate future. According to it men in general must be prejudged as selfish, malicious, false, ignoble; the lowest motives are those on which they are presumed to act, and the least noble ends are those they must be presumed to aim at. Personal honor, social sympathy, public spirit, moral faith, spiritual insight and purity, cannot be imputed; rather the reverse is to be predicted, and the result of working with dishonor, indifference, faithlessness, stupidity, and grossness, may be easily imagined. The task of making bricks without straw, and mortar without sand, is trifling as compared with the task of making a sound social state without right-mindedness and moral integrity. Houses cannot be built of ashes; organized anarchy is not civilization; instituted atheism is not religion. On this theory of depravity, despondency will of necessity be chronic; life will seem futile; the course of existence a pilgrimage over wastes of sand.

Except to those who trust in the saving grace of the Church,—that reservation must be borne in mind. From the consequences of the doctrine of depravity there is always this one escape—THE CHURCH. The members of the Church avoid the curse and the doom. They are safe, and they are guided. Their minds are enlightened; their feelings are purified; their deeds are just. They have found in the wilderness the delicious oasis where all grief is forgotten. Theirs was the ripe dates, the sparkling fountains, the grateful shade of the palms, the soft grass, the music of falling water. The blistering sands no longer scorch; the sunbeams, like swords, no longer pierce; the hot simoon no longer blasts. Inside the fold is energy, outside is weakness; inside is faith, outside is deceit; inside is honor, outside is shame; inside is generosity, disinterestedness, heroism, outside is poltroonery, hard-heartedness, avarice; inside is the abundant harvest of goodness, outside are the husks fit for the swine to eat. This is the theory, and a good deal of ingenuity is spent in the effort to bend facts to it. The common ecclesiastical opinion is merciful to the churchman and harsh to the schismatic. The believer is credited with every virtue; the "infidel" is suspected of every vice. It is thought a large, and by some a dangerous, liberality to utter that a sceptic may be a good man; and so it is, for the admission renounces the whole theory which claims that goodness is a supernatural grace, communicated through the sacraments and credences, and, of course, withheld from those by whom the sacraments are neglected, and the credences denied. If a church member commits a fault, it is palliated, excused, explained away. David was not a good man: he was a seducer, a traitor, and an assassin; but, as a pillar of the Jewish church, he was charitably credited with the soul of goodness, and declared to be a man "after God's own heart," in spite of his incidental wickedness. Mr. R. W. Emerson, a man of stainless character and irreproachable life, innocent and humane, is a rationalist. His excellence, therefore, is challenged. A popular Orthodox divine branded him as worse than Judas Iscariot.

This rough, undiscerning, unscrupulous standard of judgment is acted on where the belief in depravity is repudiated. We detect its presence in miscellaneous masses of opinion. As the churchman's hope of society rises and falls with the apparent increase or diminution of his own communion, the safety of the human race being staked on the fortunes of his own ark, which, as the only properly built and duly commissioned vessel, will alone outlive the tempest, and land the children of God on terra firma, or, going down, will carry to the bottom every germ of promise, so the politician, reformer, social theorist, is certain that the elect are in his organization, and that, outside of it, all are simpletons or knaves. The saint becomes a sinner on leaving the camp; the sinner who enters it is sainted. Each party-organ reviles the leaders of the opposing clan—the very same men, perhaps, whom it had accredited with every virtue once,—and extols to the skies the moral qualities of its special fugle-men, whom it had, under different circumstances, overwhelmed with abuse. To be on our side is to be of the regenerate; to be on the other side, or on no side, is to be of the reprobate. All are lost save the few who have succeeded in reaching my deck. The country is ruined, unless my prescription is taken. A gentleman once, with tragic face, announced to me his intention of investing his funds in foreign securities, and living abroad, if Mr. Greeley was chosen President; another said he should do so if he was not. This is the old doctrine of human depravity in a new form; the doctrine of general distrust, discouragement, and despondency. The sanguine people are they that feel confident that their church is to be victorious, their sect to prevail, their party to triumph, their theory to be accepted, their device to be approved; the desponding are they that witness with dismay the rise of other churches, and the spread of other sects, the growth of other parties, and the maturing of theories adverse to their own. The Noahs are legion, and each believes that his is the only saving boat. None believe in the ocean on which all boats float, and in the great winds that blow across the open sea. There are other popes than the one who calls himself so; the seat of infallibility is supposed to be elsewhere than in Rome; and the placard, "Outside of this fold is no salvation," may be read over the gateways of many an office formerly secular. It is plain that this ancient fiction of natural depravity, and of special saving revelation, must be abandoned absolutely, before a fair appreciation of the social condition, or a reasonable estimate of social progress, can be obtained.

Another kind of despondency is due to another theory, the precise opposite of the one just described,—the sentimental theory of human nature, the great modern preacher whereof was the Frenchman, Rousseau. This eloquent enthusiast taught that "deep down in all souls is an innate principle of justice and virtue, by which, in spite of our private views and prejudices, we judge our actions, and the actions of others, to be good or bad." "Conscience!" he cries; "divine instinct, immortal and celestial voice, certain guide to beings ignorant and limited. Yet intelligent and free; infallible judge of good and evil, who renderest man like to God! To thee is due the excellence of his nature, and the morality of his actions; but for thee, I should recognize nothing in myself superior to the beasts, except the sad privilege of straying from error to error by the help of an intellect without regulation, and a reason without principle!" A splendid statement, which seems to exalt man above the angels, and to crown him with honor and immortality; but which, when applied broadly to mankind, suggests hopelessness and dismay. The theoretical doctrine of depravity it sweeps with superb scorn from the number of respectable opinions, and in place of it sets up a doctrine of human potency that emancipates every soul, and throws the weight of every human creature into the scale of the powers that work for good.

But why, then, is not the weight of every human creature thrown? Why so much backwardness? Why so much sloth and indifference? If every human being has within him, the most radical thing in him, a divine faculty to inspire, prompt, guide him; to make him unhappy when he does wrong; to make him happy when he does right; if every human being is gifted with intelligence enough to perceive the wisdom of consulting this faculty, and with freedom enough to obey it, how shall we explain the fact that so few, comparatively, go to it for advice, or honor it with their allegiance? Since men can be good, why should they be evil? Since honesty, veracity, purity, sincerity, high-mindedness are so evidently excellent, so palpably becoming, and so clearly advantageous, why is the average of these fine qualities so low? Since compassion, good-will, friendly feeling, human kindness, are natural, universally commended and manifestly useful, why are they so rare? Why so much vice, so much falsehood, so much injustice, so much hypocrisy; why such crowded travelling on the broad road, why so much room to spare on the narrow, considering whither the two respectively conduct? The theory encourages boundless anticipations which the progress of society fails to justify. We ought to be nearing the millennium; we are just out of the claws of perdition. A terrible sinking of heart takes hold of us when from this glorious race of mankind we turn to contemplate the result of mankind's working for the few thousands of years past. Is this all? Stubborn pauperism, incurable vice, private roguery, public corruption, personal dishonor, open betrayal of trusts, absorbing greed, devouring ambition, moral imbecility on an enormous scale, powerlessness to arrest crime, convict guilt, relieve misery, suppress brutality, general indifference to evils that threaten society with disorganization! Surely, never great theory came to more lame and impotent conclusion. Of all men, the believers in Rousseau's doctrine should be the most dispirited. The truth is that the doctrine must be supplemented with a doctrine of depravity in order to bring it into accord with the facts of life. Either doctrine alone leaves us in despair; the one because it gives us no material to work with, the other because the material it gives us cannot be used. In either case thoughtful persons must entertain very gloomy views of the situation.

To find moral repose we must seek refuge in another faith; and one is found ready made to our hand,—faith in PROGRESS. According to this, man is not an angel fallen, or an angel imprisoned—but a creature who has attained his present stature. Such as it is, by ages of struggle and strife, gaining powers by unceasing effort, wrenching faculty after faculty from the void, coming into possession of qualities one by one, earning this gift and that, and by slow steps advancing towards his promised land. He has gone so far. He could not under the circumstances have gone further; he could not have accomplished the same distance in shorter time. His complement of powers is by no means complete, but it is as complete as the conditions allowed. His state is not paradisiacal; but, such as it is, it has been fairly won. If there is not much room for exultation over it, there is as little room for dissatisfaction with it. It is not heaven, but it is not hell; and if it seem nearer the latter place than the former, it will not so continue, for the relative distance from the two places is changing all the time.

In this view of the case, imperfection, crudeness, error, vice, crime, sin, are inevitable accompaniments of the mortal march, the natural incidents of a condition that is one of transition. Perfection anywhere is impossible. The race, on the whole, has done its best, must have done its best; men, on the whole, have done justice to themselves. There has, of course, been distress, agitation, agony of mind, much wrestling of conscience, much anguish of spirit; but the frightful pictures of remorse, painted by artists of the "Evangelical" and "sentimental" school, were done under the inspiration of theological dogma, rather than at the suggestion of truth. They that would seem to have best causes for remorse—the thieves, robbers, liars, slanderers, assassins, the fomenters of domestic and social strife, the authors of unholy wars, the poisoners of the wells of humanity,—show the smallest evidence of its presence. The ruffian is not pricked in conscience. The fraudulent railway maanger does not pine from an outraged moral sense. The conspirator feels no torment of spirit till he is in danger of detection, and then his suffering is due to the anticipation of punishment, not to the pangs of guilt. The peculator sleeps well and dines comfortably. The pillager of widows houses sips his wine, and talks piously with his minister of the delights of a good conscience. The best man suffers more in an hour for a fault than the worst man suffers in a lifetime for a brutal sin. Men who are capable of remorse for great crimes are incapable of committing them. The moral sense that would scourge an offender would deter him from the offence. The rogues are crude creatures; the knaves and ruffians are but half human; the community abounds in cases of arrested development, which the divine sets down to depravity, which the sentimentalist accounts for by wickedness, but which thoughtful persons ascribe to immaturity.

Of course there are degrees of attainment. Individuals and classes of people are separated from each other by wide gulfs, seemingly impassable. Some lead the van of culture, some bring up the rear; some, with every advantage on their side, present the several aspects of nobleness we all admire, and some, with everything against them, linger on the confines of the brute creation; but all are subject to the same laws, all are submitted to the same conditions, all reach their goal by the same path.

The process of ripening is quicker with some than with others. Now and then a human character starts into life with prodigious force, and reaches by a leap the point which his brethren arrive at in years, if they arrive at it ever. As if touched by a tropical sun, or quickened by some subtle grace in the air, or assisted by some unaccountable concurrence and combination of forces, or pushed on by some roving impulse or chance wave of feeling, falling on some happy time, lifted on some momentary swell, fructified by some passing bird of good omen, they open into full leaf, like the trees on a perfect June day. All of these pass through the same process of unfolding that the rest traverse—only the stages of the progress are infinitely compressed. Sudden conversions are but exceedingiy rapid growths,—the hot-house production of plants, that never would ripen in the open air of a changeable climate. They anticipate, through forcing, the results of gradual improvement.

Jesus was one of these surprising creations, the product of one of humanity's prodigious efforts, or tours de force. Thousands of sweet-souled Hebrews were growing on the same soil, mellowing in the same sun, softening and expanding in the same air with him. The same sap was in their veins; the same intellectual currents flowed through their minds; the same great national emotions throbbed in their hearts; the same tides of conviction rose and fell in their consciences; the same dews of grace fell upon the soil of their souls,—but in his case there was an unknown something that made all these influences singularly operative; a peculiar receptivity, perhaps, a swiftness of apprehension, a facility of retention and combination, a gift at extracting essences, a spiritual reproductiveness as it were, that rendered him a marvel while the others remained no extraordinary men. But such rare combinations are not to be expected, or planned for, or foretold. They are not to be counted in the averages. They show the sudden possibilities of the human elements, but they do not exhibit the normal standard; they do not mark the line of solid attainment. The rising tide will sometimes throw a jet of spray to the green top of a crag fifty feet above the ocean level, but the high-water mark is never overpassed.

In the natural order of development, perfect men and women are not to be looked for. The believers in depravity expect them through miracle, as supernatural creations. The sentimentalist looks for them by effort, as moral achievements, imagining that every man might be perfect, if he would. But those who occupy the new ground recognize the impassable limits. The house cannot spring into full proportions; the boy must pass through the unpleasant middle distance on his way to manhood. Even Jesus was not perfect in the sense of being complete. He had no opportunity for becoming that. In his age and country that perhaps was impossible. He was unmarried, and lacked the peculiar discipline that comes with wife and children. What he might have become as the head of a family who can say? He was exempt from the cares of business. We cannot conjecture what effect might have been produced on him by the necessity of earning a livelihood against fierce competition, by anxiety about his enterprises, eagerness for opportunities, the necessary agitations of gain and loss, the fine involutions of moral casuistry, the disentangling of threads of right and wrong, the strain of virtue in detecting and resisting the protean shapes of temptation. We have no means either of judging how he would have borne himself in the social and political complications of our modern world. Politics in Judea were exceedingly simple. Were you for Jehovah or the Emperor? that was the sole question. And the dividing party lines were broad. With us, politics are a thick bundle of issues; the aspect of important measures changes continually; the same men pass and repass from side to side as interests cross and shift; the desirable objects are altering in proportion with the seasons, and the choice of a constituency requires as much mental discernment as moral rectitude. He might, indeed, have risen superior to all disabilities and trials, and turned into superb victory the battles in which the vast multitude suffer all but inevitable defeat. He might have been as great in New York as he was in Jerusalem; he might have shown humanity at its fullest culmination in the nineteenth century, as he did in the first; he might have led the Western World, as he did the Eastern, and exhibited the spiritual possibilities of the Caucasian as he did of the Semite. He might have done all this; but do we know that he would?

The discipline of character is more comprehensive and formidable now than it was two or three thousand years ago. It becomes more comprehensive and more formidable with the advance of society. Many who triumphed then, would fail now. There are new sets of temptations, new foes, new issues, new standards. Problems are more involved; thoughts and feelings are more intricate; moral elements are more subtly mingled and blended. The necessity of money for all the purposes of life, the difficulty of sustaining life, the call for strenuous efforts to keep a foothold on the planet, the demand for vigilance, sagacity, knowledge, tact, the law of struggle with circumstances, and with our fellow-men, the terrible exigency of competition in every department of existence, the various responsibilities, domestic, friendly, social, political, national, that are laid on individuals, even in small towns, are among the features of our generation. To be good, true, honest, kind, humane, is not only very much more difficult than it used to be, but is in some respects quite a different thing. The qualities of virtue have taken on a new character in the course of time, so that people may really be better though they seem to be worse. They may manifest a power more than adequate to the demands of a simpler society, or a more tranquil existence, and yet quite inadequate to the exigencies in which they live. The temptations of a citizen of Tyre, Antioch, or Athens, would seem trifling to men whom the temptations of Chicago, San Francisco, or New Orleans, completely overturn. Thus society may be really advancing while it seems to be retrograding. The ratio between character and circumstance may be no closer than it was, but the scale of both may have enlarged.

It is much, too, that all are expected to be now what a few only were expected to be once. The demand for virtue is universal. Goodness has become imperative on all conditions of men. Our modern notion of equality implies a spiritual fellowship, too, between the best and the worst, and lays on man as man, without regard to station, birth, or opportunity, the duty of emulating the most advanced excellence. The democracy must be kings, the laity must be priests. The humble are not sheltered by their obscurity; the uncultured and unprivileged can claim no exemption on the score of their lack of advantage. We observe the line of advance not at the point which a single eminent saint has touched, but at the point which the great multitude of ordinary men and women have scarcely reached,—a point of course very much lower, but also very much deeper and more strongly marked. We cannot fairly require that all mankind shall be on a level with some picked and exalted soul; that all professing Christians shall be brethren of Jesus; that all politicians shall be rivals of Washington; that all reformers shall match Garrison; that all radicals in religion shall be peers of Parker and Emerson. We measure the ocean, not some separate wave.

This is the ground of strong and deep satisfaction. It is easy to find fault with things as they are; the ability to find fault shows gain in the perception of virtue. It is easy to dream of things as they ought to be; the power of so dreaming implies a clearer vision. But the real question is: Does the moral tide rise? Is conviction stronger? Is feeling more sensitive? Is sentiment power? There can be no doubt that it is. To argue such a point is superfluous. The moment our immediate sensations cease to tyrannize over us, we become aware of enormous gains. But we are the victims of our immediate sensations.

At the watering-place, where I spent a portion of the summer, nothing indicated a high state of civilization. There were no books; conversation was trivial; pursuits were idle; even amusements were inane. The men lounged the hours away. The women were absorbed in the consideration of dress. The crown of ladyhood there made it the end and aim of her existence to dress four times a day, and present herself to the admiration of her worshippers. It was not elevated; it was hardly worthy of elegant people, the pillars and ornaments of the social world; but they were amiable, affable, pleasant. There was a time when such as these met to plot indecency and mature scandal. Innocence is better than malevolence.

Many admirable minds received a shock when a favorite opera singer chose to be married in Westminster Abbey, and drew thither crowds of festive people, in the brightness of summer array, with flowers and jewels, converting the solemn fane into a fashionable saloon. It seemed a singular triumph of worldliness, a strange audacity of the pleasure-seekers, an appalling want of decorum, almost an impiety, for these gaudy creatures of the sunshine to take possession of the most impressive shrine in London, to break the silence of those awful memories by the twitterings of their curiosity, and trip in their satin slippers over the floors beneath which sleeps the dust of kings and queens, of conquerors and heroes in war, of statesmen, philanthropists, poets, philosophers, who had glorified history, built up society, enlightened and elevated mankind. But all the ashes buried there is not holy. There are monuments there to men and women with whom the pretty songstress and her lovely friends would, were they alive, hold no intercourse, from shame; men and women whose works are a soil on literature, whose lives were a scandal to decency, whose characters were a reproach to goodness. Congreve is there, one of the most corrupt playwrights of a corrupt generation; St. Everemond is there, the wicked French wit; Chiffinch is there, the odious panderer to the licentiousness of Charles II. Here are actors and actresses in whose company our modern players and opera singers would refuse to tread the boards. The grey old Abbey, that opened its doors to the bridal party and the wedding guests, would close them strongly now to such as these. The generation that buried in its most glorious church men like the infamous Villiers, desecrated the fane a thousand times more than did the generation that wedded there an innocent girl, whose aim was to furnish a charming recreation to her fellow-creatures.

The popular playwright boasts of his immense fortune made by supplying theatres with pieces for the stage. Hearing this, one thinks of the English philosopher, Herbert Spencer, unable to proceed with his great work till friends had relieved his poverty; of Mr. Emerson, feeling the cost of repairing a slight damage to the house which his genius has made a house of pilgrimage to visitors from afar. But, when the literature of the stage has mouldered in forgetfulness, Mr. Spencer's works will give instruction to thousands, and Mr. Emerson's writings will feed the choicest minds of his species. That there are friends who are happy to pay Mr. Spencer's debts; that there are lovers who ask the privilege of rebuilding the sage's house; that the highest works of philosophy are prized more and more, and the sage's best word finds hearing across the continent, is the glory of the time.

This most successful playwright laughs at the idea that the stage is an educator, or has any noble call, or important influence. Its place, he says, is not to instruct, or edify, but simply to amuse. And for this purpose the silliest plays are the best. The theatrical world applauds and pays for trash. A terrible confession of decrepitude and decadence, some will say. Not encouraging to those who talk of the high mission of the drama. But it is something that the trash is harmless. It was not always so; it is not now everywhere so. Innocence, though of the weakest and silliest, is a step out of indecency. The people who will not respond to high-flown sentiments, and go to sleep under fine moralities, stay away from the bestialities of a coarser time.

Our politics are cheap and base; the party organs are vulgar; reckless vituperation and abuse seem to characterize them all. Was there ever so much scandal and falsehood? It seems so because we are in the midst of it. As compared with the politics of an earlier day, ours are gentle and humanizing. When Washington and Adams were the candidates—men whose names we honor, whose characters we revere, the like of whom we expect not soon to see again,—personalities reached a pitch of ferocity that would shame our meanest partisan. If our papers tell lies they feel bound to establish them. The war is, after all, a war of words; the mud does not stick; and when the strife is over the great humanities are found to be rather strengthened than impaired.

Intemperance is said to be spreading among the working classes. It is quite likely, for there was never such wear and tear of organization as now, never so much craving of stimulant to repair the waste and keep up the flagging powers; but it is certainly decreasing among the comfortable, intelligent, refined, and responsible. It is doubted whether there was ever a time in the history of the world when there was so much gross intemperance as there is at present. But in the history of the world there was never a time when so many were temperate on principle, when intemperance had so little control over the ruling brain and conscience of communities. The tallest heads are above the surface of that deep.

Pauperism is an awful danger—vice is a fearful peril; crime is as yet an unmanageable power. But these evils are noted and studied, and all the intelligent and moral force there is bends itself with utmost energy to comprehend, limit, and remove them. Atheism was never so wide-spread, but atheism was never so humble, reverential, or kind. Materialism was never so openly and largely professed, but materialism was never so thoughtful, delicate, or sensitive.

It makes all the difference whether we are facing one point or another. Two men may be precisely on a line, but if they are moving in opposite directions their position is by no means the same. The one may be facing the night, the other may be fronting the day. Admit the worst facts, accept the reading of the Calvinist, allow the truth of the pessimist's picture, the question is: How do we face? Are we going into evil, or coming out of it? Are we sinking or ascending? It is our privilege to believe that we are ascending. This single fact of interpretation puts a new aspect on the world. In the mere circumstance of believing that evil is crudeness not depravity; the effect of immaturity, not the result of fall; that we are outgrowing it, not sinking under it,—there is majestic power.

It is a great thing to be sure of what we have, to feel that every good quality we possess has been fairly earned and cannot be taken away from us; to be convinced that we tread on solid moral ground, which cannot be removed; that our safety does not depend on any interposition of angels, any revival of religion, any sudden or gradual spread of churches, sects, or pious organizations, any victory over science or infidelity, any conquest of the world by the saints, but is secured by the tribulation and experience of ages; to know that our ark is sea-worthy, that the waters are subsiding around the bank and shoal of time where we have built our habitation; and that each year a larger area of the Rock of Ages is rescued from the horrid abyss of chaos, this is a transporting consciousness.

There is solid ground of satisfaction in the assurance that we may trust our new order of beliefs; that our paradise is not behind us but before; that our Savior beckons us from the future; that our hell lies where the old Eden was fabled to be, at the beginning not at the end of our career; that our best Scriptures are yet unwritten; that knowledge is our friend; that the law of predestination presses us forward instead of pushing us down; that the law of solidarity in the race, which the theologian used to drag the whole line of mankind into the chasm into which Adam slipped, is a law that makes mankind a unit for deliverance and not a unit for doom.

There is boundless cheer in the conviction that we may have confidence in a new order of moral sentiments; that the heart can open itself to the morning light; that we may have done with sighings over a lost estate, with regrets, remorses, humiliations, penitential confessions of sin, bitter groanings over depravity, frantic cries for mercy and redemption; that we can bravely commit ourselves to the grandest human qualities, self-respect, self-culture, self-reliance, natural truth, justice and kindness; that we can credit our contributions of service to the coming instead of the past generations, not giving all we have in payment of back debts, but seeing it accrue to the benefit of those that are to come after us.

There is endless inspiration in hope. A bright hope makes the dreariest present tolerable. The pilgrim on the way to Jerusalem, passing through the Valley of Baca, found it a well, with pools of rain. The pilgrim to a nobler city hears the wilderness sing, and the solitary place rejoice, as he goes on from strength to strength.

THIRTY-EIGHT years ago, Abner Kneeland, the founder of the Boston Investigator, an infidel paper, still published there, was convicted of blasphemy in a Massachusetts court, and sent to prison for uttering these words: "The Universalists believe in a God which I do not, but I believe that their God (aside from Nature) is only a chimera of their own imagination." Dr. Channing saw clearly, as many men more Orthodox than he did, also, that this attempt to punish a man for uttering his opinions was not only contrary to the fundamental principles of American liberty, but at war with the spirit of Christianity, and adapted to bring it into reproach; and by his efforts and those of other good men, Mr. Kneeland was speedily liberated. For aught that we can remember, the statute under which Mr. Kneeland was convicted remains unrepealed to this day; but any attempt to enforce it against those now holding his views would excite the scorn of the whole community. We have found a better way to oppose infidelity than to fine and imprison its champions. The Protestant world is farther from Rome than it was thirty-eight years ago.—Christian Union.

THE CHRISTIAN PROGRESS OF A GENERATION.

(Extracts from a Discourse by Rev. Rufus Ellis, D.D., printed in the "Unitarian Review and Religious Magazine" for July.)

* * * * * * * * *

Let me recall a delicious summer's evening, thirty-six years ago come July, when I made one of the company which was gathered in the chapel of the Cambridge Divinity Hall to hear an address by Ralph Waldo Emerson to the graduating class of the theological school for the year 1838. My own undergraduate course in Harvard College was just closing; it was my purpose to begin my studies in the theological department of the university with the opening autumn; and, as you may suppose, I was an eager listener to a discourse which was singularly bold, and made no small stir at that time. Hinting very plainly at much which was negative and destructive, it was also rich in moral and spiritual affirmations; and, whilst it awakened grave anxieties in the minds of the elders, the young men were greatly moved by the words of the speaker. Under the first impression of the discourse, it seemed to me that, if I should carry out my purpose of theological study, I should be preparing myself to be one of the last of the New England ministers; for, however I might be fascinated by Mr. Emerson's words, I could not suppose that the old sacred office would long continue to be exercised in a community which had come to be of his mind as to sacred things; the preachers must presently become with him lecturers and essayists. History makes rapidly in our day, but it has not made so rapidly as that; for, as I have said, nearly thirty-six years have come and gone, and I suppose that I am as likely to find a successor in my parochial charge as my predecessor was; indeed, Mr. Emerson, who is still, according to my record, a member of First Church, is reported to have said that my congregation, by their style of church architecture, have put back the cause of liberalism at least forty years, which is considerably more than my time.

And I have recalled this experience of my opening manhood, because the thing which I then feared has not come to pass; but, on the contrary, has been put much farther off by that very transcendental movement, as we called it, which was then assuming such formidable proportions. I have recalled this experience, because I wish to say to you how much more real, positive, and significant our religion has become to me in the light of this very movement. I wish to say, as one who would acknowledge his honest debts, that the positive side of that very transcendentalism was precisely what the Unitarianism of my childhood needed; and that, strange as it may seem to one who looks only at the surface, I owe it to this that, in my small way, I have always lived and labored as a conservative amongst liberals,—not so pleasant a position in any times as a liberal amongst conservatives.

* * * * * * * * *

Let me, in a few words, and only in the way of hints and suggestions, remind you of some of our most modern gains, or recoveries, in the understanding and use of our religion.

I. And I hold it to be an immense gain, that we have come to look upon our religion as a ministry of the Spirit; to understand that, in the beginning, the gospel was not taught from a book, but was committed by faithful lips to faithful men, who might speak as they should be moved by the present God. We have found that Christianity possessed and pervaded the world to which it was given, passing from heart to heart, and from mind to mind, like sparks amongst the stubble; that the Christian body, with its indwelling spirit, is older by a score of years, at least, than any portion of our New Testament records; and that Jesus, whilst he was careful to gather a living society, and to sow in the hearts of men the seed of the word, made no direct provision for those writings which were sure to be in due time a part of the fruit of the Spirit. So far as they relate to any moral and spiritual facts, the Scriptures of our religion have not fallen below the old estimates of them; but the sense which many now cherish of the inspiration of the Christian Church formed no part of the heritage of our generation. We did not see, as we now see, how saturated the world presently became with Christianity. That is the real explanation of the difficulty we find, and always shall find, in making up our New Testament canon. Plainly, the line between the canonical and uncanonical was not so significant in the second century as it is to the modern Protestant. The early Christians could hardly say who wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews, whether Paul or Apollos, or Clement or Barnabas; they were uncertain about the authorship of the letter attributed to James; they have left very little testimony in support of their statement that Peter was the author of even the First Epistle which bears his name, and it is exceedingly difficult to place historically the pastoral epistles of Paul. But what matters it, they seem to have said, the Spirit plainly breathed those words; let them stand instead of some which Paul wrote, but which, unhappily, have perished,—a strange fate, by the way, for a sacred book, if it be, indeed, what a sacred book is commonly held to be! Our earliest Christian literature, as we have been led to study it, has brought before the eyes of this generation, as, somehow, it did not before the eyes of our fathers in these churches, a living, growing, organized, efficient community, of which this literature is not the cause, but the fruit; the faiths, hopes, charities, are already there; the little books, when as tracts for the religious times they come to be written, rather describe these facts, and take them for granted, and refer to them incidentally, than argue for them,—as when Paul, in writing to his Corinthians, assumes the rising of Jesus as a thing notorious, and, by them, unhesitatingly received, and only wonders that with such a persuasion they can say, as so many of them did, that the dead rise not.

And when we pass from the Epistles to the Gospels, and are surprised to discover that writings so weighted with the immortal words of Christ, and with facts of his life so precious, should be at the same time so unmethodical and fragmentary, and only tell the least part where we long to hear the whole—old prophecies where we look for recent facts,—and imply all along a knowledge on the part of the reader which the written page nowhere supplies, the explanation is found in our reviving persuasion of an unwritten word, committed by the living God in Christ to living witnesses, apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers, sons and daughters of consolation, not wanting long in any considerable city or village of that redeemed world. Moreover, what was true in the beginning is true now, and will be forever true, true in the new fruits as in the old; with only this reasonable qualification, that the Scriptures, and other instrumentalities which are needful in the beginning of a great spiritual movement, may not again be demanded for the renewal and guidance of this movement in after times. If we hesitate sometimes about the old affirmations as to one and another book of our New Testament canon, it is only because the authorship is in doubt, and we would put first those who were nearest to the Lord. In the beginning of the new creation, as of the old, God said, "Let there be light! and there was light," and this before the light was gathered into certain particular stars, and shone out from great orbs. The letter was killing us; the spirit came again to give us life. We had our Scriptures, and they were read in our synagogues every Lord's day; but, as George Fox said to Cromwell, we had lost the spirit that wrote them, and were in the condition of certain Eastern communities that are said to possess astronomical tables which they are wholly unable to construct, and scarcely are able to use. It has been a great gain to find that Christianity was never meant to be in the keeping of the collators of manuscripts and the makers of grammars and dictionaries. The word goes forth from the mouth of God, not from any convent on Mount Athos, or monastery on Mount Sinai; it proceeds from hearts never cold, by lips never silent; day uttereth it unto day, and night unto night. The records are not the society. The constitution is not the polity. By one spirit we are all baptized into one body. We all eat the same spiritual meat, and we all drink the same spiritual drink. Of too many of our New England churches of the last generation it might have been said, They have heard of Lardner and Paley, but they have not heard that there is a Holy Ghost; they hear and see through the ears and eyes of a people more believing than they; they have no share in the gospel which is the revelation of the thoughts of many hearts. Thank God, we are again his people.

II. As it has been with the Church, so has it been with him whom we revere as the Head of the Church. There has been a great gain during years which have seemed to some only years of doubt in our conception of the divine in Jesus. As the more thoughtful Trinitarians have been steadily leaving behind the Trinitarianism which set forth as the Savior of the world a God who is simply personating humanity, but is not really human, so the more thoughtful Unitarians have been steadily leaving behind a Unitarianism which set forth as the Savior of the world a superhuman man. We are coming together from all sides in a Christianity which sees God in the man Jesus, and so has faith and hope in God. It has been a surprise and an offence sometimes, when it ought to have been a relief to us, to find that the humanity of Jesus was intensely real; that God took our nature upon him, and not some angelic or preter-nature; that our Master was a veritable man, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, one capable of growing in wisdom as in stature, and in favor with God and man; one whose knowledge was limited; one who learned obedience by the things which he suffered, who was weary at the well, who lifted to God a human heart in piteous human cries for help. The Unitarian of the former generation had lost this reality of Jesus almost as much as the Trinitarian who had lost it altogether. We have been reminded, sometimes very ungraciously, that our Jesus could not be found in the Gospels. We have been compelled by pitiless realists to see him in his human limitations, and to restore to him his proper human personality. We have admitted, somewhat reluctantly, that it is even more reverent to take his own word for what he was than to substitute our own fond imaginations. We see that, however strange it may be, he did love, and fear, and hope, and believe, and rejoice, and mourn as a man. But what may well have seemed to some at first a loss, turns out to be a gain; for this man Jesus will not, though they call it blasphemy, and threaten his life, yes, and take it, withhold from us the mystery of God in him, or bate one iota of the marvellous self-assertion which assures us that, unless we stand in the presence of a madman, God has come at last fully into the light of a human consciousness. This is what we wanted. The light shines clear now from that human face, and the revelation of divinity is the glorification of humanity; we see that what is impossible for man is possible in man when God is with him. Between God and man there is no moral incompatibility. It is according to our highest nature to be sinless. It is according to our highest nature to overcome evil. The hiding-place of divine power for our world is found in a sweet, simple humanity. In creation God impresses us strangely as striving to create, and only at last succeeding. It is so in redemption, and Christ is his success; and since Christ is Son of man, it is success for man. God finds us in him.

* * * * * * * * *

III. I find yet another gain in the necessity which is laid upon us in our religious times to accept our religion chiefly as a new life in our souls and our world. We are coming to a more intelligent and deeper apprehension of the old teaching that God took upon himself, not simply the nature of one man Jesus, but the nature of all men; our nature. It was at least the beginning of the consummation of that deepening purpose which runs through the ages, Jewish and Gentile alike—only in the Jewish dispensation more conspicuously,—so wondrously hidden at times, and then coming into more light, until at last the day dawns and the day-star rises in our hearts, and it is the Lord's day evermore. We understand Christianity not as contained, and in some sort concluded, within a few months of the Lord's ministry, but as a step forward and upward in the education of man, which is never to be retraced, a continuous fatherly act of God. It is a failure save as it goes on, save as it is reproduced; a failure when it becomes memorial and commemorative. It is an abiding Incarnation. What the word was in Jesus, the word is in the Church. Our religion is the mind of Christ in us. It is the spirit which he has given us. As it spake by the prophets, so now it speaks in us. Had he in his transcendent way a consciousness of God? we are to have this consciousness in our humbler way, still seeking to sit down with him in heavenly places, and to be lifted by the Divine Grace into his perfect light. Our Christianity must speak in the present tense. It must create new words, forms, and methods. It must be able to say, "I know." It must keep alive the old sacred dialogue between God and man. Its God must not be the Unknown God. It must find, not seven sacraments only, but seventy times seven. It is, says Novalis, "the capability of everything earthly to become the bread and the wine of a divine life." It is a line of light threading the ages. It makes all things new. It is a treasure which is committed to an earthen vessel; the vessel may suffer harm, but the treasure is safe. God comes to stay. God comes to create.

And it is very satisfactory to note that our Christianity, as it becomes less traditional and more experimental, less theoretic and more living, recognizes afresh its mission as civilizer and humanizer of society. Starting from a higher plane, finding us in a way Christian, it seeks ways more excellent. It is no more content with things as they are than were the missionaries who carried the cross amongst the nations of Northern Europe. It takes up the great Sermon on the Mount as it fell from the lips of the Teacher, and refuses to have it regarded as akin to the dream of a republic which Plato dreamed. It does not despise prophesyings. It has much to say in the spirit of the Master about human affairs. It claims that there may be such a reality as Christian legislation, that business and pleasure are to be consecrated, that Christianity is to be the life of all our living; it does not compliment the next world at the expense of this world, but holds this world to be convertible. What we call church work, a kind of Christian activity scarcely known in my childhood, is the beginning of this new embodiment of Christianity; it is sure to lead on and out, to bring us into contact with labor questions, and amusement questions, and education questions, and all the various problems of every-day life, that are plainly too much for the mere economist, and which can be solved only as we are indeed one body in Christ. St. Chrysostom, St. Jerome, Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury, were hospital builders as well as preachers and theologians. The first artists, artisans, horticulturists were monks. Many of us can remember when a house of worship was of no use save as a weekly gathering place for what was called divine service. Now our chapels and vestries are often open through the entire week, and filled with workers bound in the spirit to finish on earth the work which Christ only began; and to fulfil his promise, "Greater things than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father."

IT CAN SCARCELY be regarded as a part of the "eternal fitness of things" to express approval of what is said in church with "three cheers and a tiger." Yet it happened recently in Ireland. During high mass in the little church at Glentariff, three ladies of the Protestant faith were obliged to take shelter there from a heavy shower. The officiating priest, knowing who they were, and wishing to be respectful to them, stooped down to his attendant, who was on his knees, and whispered, "Three chairs for the Protestant ladies." The man, who was rather ignorant, stood up and shouted, "Three cheers for the Protestant ladies!" which were given with a hearty good will by the congregation, while the poor priest stood dumbfounded. It will happen so sometimes.—Harper's Magazine.

THE LONDON Saturday Review discusses "Singularity" in its customary philosophic spirit, and reaches this rather conventional result: "Any kind of singularity implies of necessity a certain discharge of vital force. The wheels of life run smoothly just in proportion as we are ready to take a large number of things for granted, and to accept established conventions for no other reason than that they are established. As soon as anybody acts on principles peculiar to himself, even in the smallest trifles, a certain amount of friction is set up, and frequently a disproportionate waste of thought and temper."

A GENTLEMAN late one evening met his servant. "Hallo! where are you going at this time of night?—for no good, I'll warrant!" "I was going for you, sir."

THERE IS A vegetarian hymn-book in existence, in which one hymn begins:—

"Meat-eaters, did ye only know
What torments ye inflict."

TRUE AND FALSE CONSCIENCE.

One of our Western contemporaries, the Christian Statesman, of Milwaukee, seems to have been much exercised by a letter which Mr. O. B. Frothingham published a few weeks ago in THE INDEX, and which purported to have been written by a "Catholic priest." In this document, the writer made the assertion that "Conscience, properly understood, must be obeyed in all cases"—a statement with which we have no mind to quarrel. The letter in which it occurred was said, however, to have been written to a gentleman who, having been reared a Catholic, had become an adherent of Mr. Frothingham's "free religious" society; but in order to quiet the scruples of his mother, who, naturally, thought him in the way to perdition, had laid his case before a New York priest in good standing, and received the comfortable assurance that not only was conscience a sufficient guide, but that the Catholic Church, recognizing the "dignified freedom" of the human soul, "does not presume to tell any man whether his conscience is right or wrong. This is individual work." Apparently there was great joy in the liberal camp over this letter, of which its anonymous author permitted the publication. If it were a true statement of Catholic doctrine, evidently the free religious people were as good Catholics as the Pope himself—a conclusion which, under the circumstances, seemed to us not to afford any great cause for gratulation to either party. Evidently, the pill was a little hard to swallow; and a few weeks later Mr. Frothingham followed it up with the statement that the priest in question, having seen his letter (and presumably the comments on it) in THE INDEX, had not only expressed himself as entirely satisfied with it, but had volunteered some further, and, to non-Catholics, very consolatory, views on the extreme tolerance of the Church in matters of faith. Several New York priests, besides the writer, were said to have also seen the letter, and to have expressed their concurrence with its sentiments; although, supposing the statement true, they must have seen that the "dignified freedom of the human soul," in the case of the gentleman who had sought priestly counsel in his difficulties, had led him to absent himself from the Catholic Church, and to attach himself to a society which distinctly denies all the Christian doctrines. At this point, the Christian Statesman, whose professed anxiety on the subject is our only reason for touching so vague an accusation, demands to know whether these anonymous statements are to be taken as correct versions of Catholic doctrine, or whether it shall receive as such the following extract, which it quotes from the Catholic Vindicator, published in its own city, and edited by a Catholic priest, whose name appears in full on its editorial page:—

"A man who pertinaciously and perseveringly maintains his own individual opinion against the positive teaching of the Church . . . . is deprived of the means of acquiring eternal life."

There is one very simple rule in such cases, and we recommend it to the attention of both THE INDEX and the Christian Statesman. No priest who feels himself in conscious conformity with the spirit and doctrines of the Church need hesitate to put his name to his doctrinal teachings. Nor is such a priest likely to word such teachings in so ambiguous a manner, or to publish them in such a place, that every unbeliever, seeing them, will proceed to use them as arguments in favor of his erroneous opinions. Nor will he, while maintaining his own incognito, proceed to slur, by implication, other prominent Catholic priests who hold different views,—as was done in THE INDEX, apparently on the strength of expressions used conversationally by the unknown writer. It is very safe for the Christian Statesman to believe that its neighbor of the Vindicator was uttering the exact truth, and not to trouble itself further about Mr. Frothingham's private chaplain. For while it is perfectly true that "conscience, properly understood, must be obeyed in all cases," yet to quote a passage from the introduction to the newly published life of St. Catherine of Genoa, written over his own signature by Father Hecker, "It is equally false, and at the same time absurd, to suppose for a moment that the Holy Spirit indwelling in the Church, and embodied in her visible authority, and the same Holy Spirit dwelling in and inspiring the Christian souls, should ever contradict each other, or come into collision. Whenever, by supposition, this takes place, be assured it is not the work of the Holy Spirit, but the consequence of ignorance, error, or perversity, on the part of the individual; for it must not be forgotten, or even be lost sight of, that it pleased Christ our Lord to promise to His Church that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against her, and not to each individual Christian."

That is true Catholic doctrine; nor can we bring ourselves to believe very heartily in the existence of a New York priest in good standing, "a learned and sincere man," who would reply to an inquiring parishioner, claiming to deny in good faith the authority of the teaching Church, that he could not, in his capacity as a Catholic teacher, "presume to say that his conscience was wrong," and that, "so long as he loved the supreme good, he could not be lost." Such a teacher would have been much more likely to inquire by what process the voice of that right conscience which speaks to all the baptized, and even to those who, being beyond the reach of the sacraments, have been careful never to disobey the dictates of the law which is written in the hearts of all men, had been overpowered and silenced. Those who have not the law, says the Apostle Paul, "are a law unto themselves." But with such a person, the anonymous priest of THE INDEX had not to do, but with one baptized and reared in the Church, and amenable to her authority. Such a person should have known that to wilfully entertain and yield to doubts concerning the dogmas of the faith is to commit mortal sin; and should have known, also, that it is impossible in the state of mortal sin to "love the supreme good." "Without faith," says St. Paul, "it is impossible to please God," and hence, to love Him.—Catholic Review, June 30.

JOHN STERLING FACING DEATH.

Seeing how it was, then, Sterling earnestly gathered all his strength to do this last act of his tragedy, as he had striven to do the others, in a pious and manful manner. As I believe, we can say he did; few men, in any time, more piously or manfully. For about six months he sat looking steadfastly, at all moments, into the eyes of death; he, too, who had eyes to see death, and the terrors, and eternities; and surely it was with perfect courage and piety, and valiant simplicity of heart, that he bore himself, and did, and thought, and suffered, in this trying predicament, more terrible than the usual death of men. All strength left to him he still employed in working; day by day the end came nearer, but day by day, also, some new portion of his adjustments was completed; by some small stage his task was nearer done. . . . He still even wrote a good deal. To his eldest boy, who had moved to the Maurices since the beginning of this illness, he addressed, every day or two, for eight or nine weeks, a letter. These letters I have lately read; they give, beyond any he has written, a noble image of the intrinsic Sterling. One little excerpt, not the best, but the fittest for its neighborhood here, will be welcome to the reader:—

"My dear Boy,—. . . . It seems as if, in some strange way, London were a part of me, or I of London. I think of it often, not as full of noise, and dust, and confusion, but as something silent, grand, and everlasting.

"When I fancy how you are walking in the same streets, and moving along the same river, that I used to watch so intently, as if in a dream, when younger than you are,—I could gladly burst into tears, not of grief, but with a feeling that there is no name for. Everything is so wonderful, great, and holy, so sad and yet not bitter, so full of death, and so bordering on Heaven. Can you understand anything of this? If you can, you will begin to know what a serious matter our life is; how unworthy and stupid it is to trifle it away without heed; what a wretched, insignificant, worthless creature any one comes to be, who does not as soon as possible bend his whole strength, as in stringing a stiff bow, to doing whatever task lies first before him."

One other letter I must give:—

"My dear Carlyle,—For the first time for many months, it seems possible to send you a few words; merely, however, for remembrance and farewell. On higher matters, there is nothing to say. I tread the common road into the great darkness, without any thought of fear, and with very much of hope. Certainty, indeed, I have none. With regard to you and me I cannot begin to write; having nothing for it but to keep shut the lid of those secrets with all the iron weights that are in my power. Towards me it is still more true than towards England, that no man has been and done like you. Heaven bless you! If I can lend a hand when THERE, that will not be wanting. It is all very strange, but not one hundredth part so sad as it seems to the standers-by.

"Your wife knows my mind towards her, and will believe it without asseverations.

"Yours to the last,

"JOHN STERLING."

It was a bright Sunday morning when this letter came to me; if in the great cathedral of immensity I did no worship that day, the fault surely was my own. Sterling affectionately refused to see me; which also was kind and wise. And four days before his death, there are some stanzas of verse for me—written as if in star-fire and immortal tears,—which are among my sacred possessions, to be kept for myself alone.

His business with the world was done; the one business now to await silently what may lie in other grander worlds. "God is great," he was wont to say: "God is great." The Maurices were now constantly near him; Mrs. Maurice assiduously watching over him. . . . One evening, suddenly, about eleven o'clock, there came a summons and alarm; . . . and, in a short while more, the faint last struggle was ended; and all those struggles and strenuous, often-foiled endeavors of eight-and-thirty years lay hushed in death.—From Carlyle's "Life of John Sterling."

IT IS A CUSTOM with the English House of Lords that the youngest of the prelates offers up prayers. Once an old Bishop of Durham, learned and lazy, lounged into the House, when, being the only member of the episcopate present, he was invited to perform the easy office of chaplain. Disgusted, he retreated and thus explained his injury to an in-going peer: "No young bishops there! Hang 'em! do they think that I am going to do their dirty work for 'em? Not I, sir! not I!" Familiarity had brought contempt with a vengeance. He had come to regard prayer as common, routine work, only fit for inferior parsons.

A DARKEY WAS ONCE attempting to steal a goose, but a dog raised an objection, and Sambo retired. The next night, during a thunder shower, he attempted it again, and just as he was on the point of getting away with the fowl, the lightning struck close by, and the noise nearly frightened the poor fellow to death. Dropping the goose, he started away, muttering, "'Peers to me der am a mighty lot of fuss made 'bout a common goose."

Poetry.

JAMIE'S FABLE.

BY MISS E. N. HATHEWAY.

AUNTY:
Jamie, what has happened to you?
Tell me where you have been so long.
See your apron, so soiled and torn!
I fear my boy has been doing wrong.

JAMIE:
I was only playing out in the yard,
Building some houses all in a row,
And a bear walked through the garden gate,
And said "Good-morning!" growling just so.

He tore this hole with his paw, I guess;
And I struck him then with a great big stick!
I almost broke his back, I s'pect,
For I tell you, Aunty, he went off quick.

AUNTY:
Jamie, look at Maggie's new doll,
With her rosy cheeks and bright blue eyes.
What do you think should be done to her
If she should speak and tell naughty lies?

JAMIE:
If Dolly should ever tell naughty lies,
Her head should be cut right off, I think!
What do you b'lieve it's stuffed with? say.
My knife would do it quick as a wink!

AUNTY:
And what should be done to a little boy
Who tells his aunt a story so wild?
No bear could say "Good-morning!" to you,
Then why do you talk in this way, my child?

JAMIE:
Don't you 'member the other day
You read me a story about some bears?
And they talked together like anything,
And slept in some beds, and sat up in chairs.

AUNTY:
But Jamie, that was a fable I read;
I told you then that it wasn't true.

JAMIE:
Well, Aunty, that's the matter with this:
My bear is a fable story too.

—The Independent.

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 18.

Nina Moore, $3.28; John D. White, $3; Fred. Ebell, $1.50; J. R. Hawley, $3.50; C. A. Day, $3; A. J. Davis, $1.05; J. C. Delano, $3; John Carleton, $2; J. B. Gray, $1.50; R. L. Houghton, $1; J. Peters, $3; L. Adams, $1.75; H. Ledbetter, $3; W. B. Studley, $3; W. B. Sawyer, 75 cts.; Rob't G. Titcomb, $3; Anton Braasch, $1; Wm. Gardner, $3; H. Kindervater, $3; J. Tinney, $1.50; J. F. Müller, $3; J. Brockway, $1; E. D. Schull, $1.50; Wm. Ellis, $10; John E. Miller, $3; C. D. Van Vechten, $3; John W. Stewart, $3; Samuel Cole, $3; American News Co., $6.90; E. F. Blaisdell, $3; Fred. Miller, $3; Carl Doerflinger, $1.65; D. M. Biddle, $1; O. Gillett, $3; T. B. Skinner, $1; F. Clement, $1; B. D. Wallace, $2; Pratt & Co., $3; H. Gregg, $1.05; L. M. Patterson, 50 cts.; N. Littlefield, 20 cts.; A. A. Patrick, 50 cts.; G. H. Foster, $1.20; A. K. Loring, 40 cts.; P. Carkin, 50 cts.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

BOSTON, JULY 23, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of The Index will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

PARAGRAPHS.

BY W. C. G.

The leaders of French Protestantism, Nicholas, Réville, Coquerel, and others, have begun a new monthly, the Revue Progressive. For twenty francs a year one will get a great deal of free religious thought, and historic criticism of the Orthodox thought and of the Bible, besides discussions of literature, and art, and politics.

The Irish Unitarians have lately been in hot debate whether or not their Associations shall fill orders for theistic works, like Theodore Parker's. In the "Society for the Diffusion of Knowledge," the country conservatives carried the day—or rather the night, for the struggle lasted into the small hours. In the Northern Sunday School Association, the Belfast liberals, after a similar struggle, decided the other way; and the defeated party talk about secession.

The country picnic for the poor children of large cities is the way last evolved to love your neighbor as yourself, in July. Already one or two humble experiments betoken what the next variety will be,—the providing of cheap country-homes where at least a few of the overstrained women of the workshop, the convalescents of the tenement-house, the old-faced city babies, can have a longer chance than a single summer's day to test the virtue of green fields and clean, strong air. Some one in the Unitarian Review has just been writing earnestly about it. Let "Wayside Homes of Rest," she urges, be established. A few rich people, or two or three churches, might together buy a roomy, sunny house, a few miles out of town, inland or near the sea, with land attached for garden, and a patch of woods,—the whole, with simple furniture, costing from four to seven thousand dollars. A matron with two or more assistants would be needed, but much of the light work could be done by the inmates. The visits thither should be free to some, and paid for in part by others. This is the season at which to "talk up" the idea against another year, and find the house. Many a girl for herself, many a mother for an ailing child, or a band of relatives for some feeble one of their number, would be able and glad to pay two or three dollars a week for a fortnight or a month of such country freshening. Many a happy, well-to-do family, escaping to the seaside or the mountains for a long vacation, would gladly give up a few of their rides to save the means by which a poorer friend might visit such a "Rest." Promise a country-fortnight as a prize to the best five children in a public school, who would otherwise spend the hot, long season among the bricks, and take their country on the door-step. Or if you object to stirring rivalries, ask the teacher to tell you whom to send. Your family doctor will be only too thankful to name you three or four from among his poorer patients. Persons yet better off would, perhaps, furnish a free-room for the season, or a church might thus look after its unmonied invalids, or a group of neighbors living in a block of "freestone fronts" could combine to do so. Who will start it? Pass the idea round, you friends in the country boarding-houses.

A little book comes to us from some Dutch Liberals, through an English translator—The Bible for Young People,—for which a good word should be spoken in The Index. The Bible holds many self-contradictions, and absurdities, and cruelties, but the very fact that they are so plain makes it hardly worth the while to spend one's time in picking them out and arranging them in lists: "Three hundred contradictions in the Old Testament," etc. Anybody can write those books; and the criticism which ends with that is almost as shallow,—yes, all things considered, probably shallower than the "literal inspiration" at which it scoffs. There are men who, because they are scholars, can count up more of these things than we, and who speak out loud about them as frankly as Tom Paine himself, but whose look goes deeper. They sound, and dredge, and compare widely, where we only sail over the top reef-hunting. Then let a man like Tyndall come, who will put the results of the scientific search in popular form,—he is the man who helps us to know what the Bible truly is. The Bible for Young People is Tyndall-work applied to Bible-criticism. It is no scoffer's book. People never scoff at anything which they come to really know. The authors reverence most heartily that which they treat so freely, and always point to its religious spirit and intent. But they analyze the old legends of creation—Eden, Flood, Babel, and the rest—and compare them with the cognate myths of other races, and show us how they reflect the crude ideas of the time about Nature, and morality, and God. They try to untwist the mixed, contradictory stories which have been woven together by later story-tellers into their present form,—detecting in Genesis, for instance, at least three separate strands of narrative. They show how the patriarchal names and incidents hold hints of tribal fortunes; and how the genealogies are constructed to suit a preconceived system of chronology; and how the history of Israel is the history of a barbaric, polytheistic tribe, slowly consolidating, through a great law-giver's religious impress, and through constant conflict, into a strong-featured nation. We heartily recommend the book to those who care to study the romance of such a history,—for the Bible studied with such help becomes a most romantic chapter in the history of civilization. The book comes out in monthly parts, of which at least the first ten can be obtained of John Kneeland, 7 Tremont Place, Boston; or of J. L. Jones, Janesville, Wisconsin.

To be impressed with the mighty intellectual stir which keeps the brain of the world in active exercise, look over the exchanges of a newspaper for a single week. See the unheard-of papers that turn up from unexpected places. Note the more thoughtful ones, each representing a separate line of ideas, designed to find a special set of readers,—ideas and readers with which, perhaps, you have almost nothing in common. You feel as if you stood on a mountain, and saw the rivers of an unexplored land start forth, each to run through its own tribes, and nourish its own settlements. Or glance through a single one. Here is Nature from London; see the list of society-meetings, with their essay-subjects, naming unknown worlds to you, which the somebodies over there are going to talk about so wisely. Or consider what an amount of brain-food is ground up and made ready for the general public, each week, by such papers as the Independent, the Christian Union, the Golden Age, of New York. We made a study of their issue for the second week in July. The Independent had five editorials, and twelve original contributed articles, six poems, eight pages of paragraphs on all sorts of themes, besides its market, financial, farming, and selected matter. The Christian Union had five editorials, twelve contributed articles, five poems, and over five pages of paragraphs. The Golden Age had five, seven, three, and over six, respectively. Old folks, young folks, sober folks and slight folks, newsy folks, sentimental folks, political and financial folks, all have their taste catered for with special dishes. The paragraphs are the most impressive feature,—notes on literature, science, art, education, religion, politics, persons. To get them, men have gone gleaning through five hundred other papers, and magazines, and books. Yet not mere scissorings. Some of them are little dwarf editorials. But mainly they are borrowings, stamped over with some added thought, or set in fresh relations,—often witty hits, sometimes a little box packed full with a fact, sometimes a single crystal of fancy, sometimes a nugget of argument, often mere gossip, sometimes a mean insult passed on, sometimes a lie. This racy paragraphing is a special art. The fortune of a popular paper depends on it almost as much as on strong editorials. For success at it one must not be over-scrupulous about authorities or feelings. "Je prends mon bien où je le trouve," and "a curse on him who has said my good things before me!" The large proportion of room given to the tit-bits is suggestive. We read magazines, not books, it is said. But we hardly read the magazines. Here they are boned, and compressed, and sliced off for us in single mouthfuls. This suits Americans on the bolt. And it accounts for some of our ailings.

BROAD CHURCHISM.

On another page will be found a reprint of the main portion of an interesting and noteworthy discourse by Rev. Rufus Ellis, minister of the First Church (Unitarian) in Boston. The discourse, which was read recently before a ministerial conference, is interesting because it is the testimony of a sincere man, and a practical preacher of long experience, concerning the effect of the New England transcendental movement on his own views, and on Unitarianism in general. As a young man just on the point of entering the theological school, Mr. Ellis heard the famous address of Ralph Waldo Emerson before the graduating class of the Divinity School at Cambridge, in 1838, which was the first public utterance of note of transcendentalism in America; and the reminiscence he gives of the impression made by that address on himself and other young men of the day, is not only interesting, but valuable. The discourse, too, as coming from one who has been usually reckoned as an extreme conservative among Unitarians, is noteworthy for its breadth and liberality of view. The concessions which it makes to the results of rational criticism of the Bible, and of the traditional Orthodox interpretations of Christianity, are remarkable, and indicate the progress which is taking place in Christian theology, not only among Liberal Christians, but in more Orthodox communions.

The sermon, of course, is not radical; to many readers of The Index it will seem perhaps very conservative, and some may wonder why it should be reprinted in these columns. Mr. Ellis is a believer in the special and miraculous incarnation of the Divine nature in Jesus, and to him Christianity is the crowning culmination of all religious history, ample for all human needs for all time. But the liberal interpretation of these doctrines, from one so conservative as Mr. Ellis has been deemed, is what gives the discourse its note. For, as we have just said, he has been regarded as one of the most conservative of Unitarian preachers. It has been common to classify him with Dr. Peabody and Dr. Robbins, as on the extreme right wing of Unitarianism,—as too conservative, in fact, to act very harmoniously with the denomination, and as just ready to drop into Orthodoxy.

Yet, in our opinion, Mr. Ellis has not been correctly classed there. We have previously found, in his published writings, an element of liberality both in respect to doctrine and spirit which those with whom he has been classed do not appear to possess. This liberality comes from the emphasis which he has been wont to place on the Spirit, as the source and centre of all vital religion. He has habitually subordinated the letter, whether of dogma, or Scripture, or ecclesiastical rite, to the Spirit,—holding a view of the Spirit, not unlike the old Quaker doctrine of the Inner Light. However highly he may value the Bible and the historical Christ, he has yet made it clear that he regards the present Spirit as the sustaining power of the Christian Church. And this doctrine of the supremacy of the Spirit over every form of the letter, which he has expressed very boldly in the discourse under notice, has given a liberal atmosphere to his thought and writings, and made many points of sympathy between his position and that of even quite extreme radicals, whose views he could not conscientiously accept. And, probably, he has held aloof from some of the forms of Unitarian denominational activity quite as much from an aversion to all exclusive sectarian action as from a fear of the radical tendencies of the Unitarian body. He is essentially a Broad Churchman. He represents real Broad Churchism in America much more than do some Episcopal clergymen who are said to do so. In the Episcopal Church in this country there is actually no Broad-Church party like that which is so powerful in England. There are a few individual preachers who may be called Broad-Church, but the two parties in the American Episcopal denomination are High-Church and Low-Church. In America, the Broad Church is made up of portions of many denominations. For in almost all the denominations there are some preachers who care more for the presentation of religion on broad and general grounds, than for any denominational propagandism; and, among Unitarians, Mr. Ellis may be said to be one of these.

And in this discourse he states very well the principles of this Broad-Church party,—its central principle being the superiority of the present power of the Spirit to any ecclesiastical dogma or institution of the past, and even to the Bible. Mr. Ellis states unmistakably—as unmistakably as Mr. Emerson did in 1838—that the power of the Church to-day must be found in a vital power that is within the souls of men and women living to-day,—that it is not to be found in the Bible, or in traditions, or in established ecclesiastical institutions, except so far as these are illustrations and examples of the capability of the Spirit in the past; but is to be looked for in the present activity of the same Divine energy that produced these old results. The pervading doctrine of the discourse is that the Spirit of the Highest has not departed from mankind, nor revealed itself once for all during the few years of the life of one being in Palestine; but is actively revealing itself to-day, in and through the Christian Church especially, but also, now as in the past, to some extent in humanity elsewhere. And this may be said to be the central principle of Broad Churchism in Christendom.

This central principle in Mr. Ellis' discourse takes shape in three subordinate propositions: First, that the New Testament is not the fountain whence the Christian Church draws its inspiration, but only an incidental and necessarily fallible result of that high tide of spiritual life which attended the advent of Jesus,—of precious interest and value to the Church, but not its foundation, and not even necessary to its continued existence. Secondly, that Jesus was an entirely human being, a complete man, and that the incarnation of the Divine nature in him, though perfect in degree, was yet of the same kind as that which takes place to some extent in other men, and that the revelation given in Christianity does not differ in kind, but only in degree from that given in other religions. Thirdly, that Christianity is a progressive revelation,—that it was not all manifested at once even by Jesus, or perhaps to him; but, under the influence of the continued inspiration of the Spirit, is a continuous evolving of new views of spiritual truth, new institutions, new forms of human activity,—hence, that it adapts itself to the improved intelligence of mankind, and the changing exigencies of human affairs in successive generations.

The only narrowness in these statements is, that they are statements of Broad-Church principles, from a Christian point of view, and that the point of view does not quite include the full breadth of a universal church. They are, as we have said, representative statements of the Broad Church of Christendom. The position of Mr. Ellis, and of other Christian Broad Churchmen is that, since Christianity is this progressive revelation of Divine power in human history, it can go on adapting itself to human needs of every age and country; and that, therefore, there is no reason for abandoning it, and no possibility of mankind outgrowing it; and this conclusion Mr. Ellis draws in the closing part of his address, omitted in the reprint, for want of space. But there is a Broad-Church party outside of the churches in nominal Christendom, and a Broad-Church party in other religions besides the Christian; and these people will naturally question whether Christianity so predominatingly and exclusively marks the track of Divine revelation in humanity as this position implies. The course of Mr. Ellis' argument, indeed, and his assertion that the Divine Spirit is continuously active, and has revealed itself to some extent, however feebly, in all religions, suggest the inquiry whether he has himself drawn the logical conclusion from his own premises. If the Spirit has been the inspiring source of all religious history; if one man and one religion, however superior, differ not in kind, but only in degree, from other genuine religious revelations; and if this same Spirit, which has been the creator of religious literatures and institutions, and the inspirer of divine life in the past, is still actively and creatively revealing itself in the thought and life of Christianity to-day, and Christianity under its power is a progressive revelation not yet completed—since all thus depends upon the continuous and ever-present agency of this power called the Spirit,—why may it not be that, in the education of mankind, the guiding Spirit has now brought the race to that point when the authority of all special religions, Christianity with the rest, is to be seen to have been provisional and temporary only; and that now, in this new era of the world, when the religions are being brought more into outward contact, and are coming to understand each other better, they are all to advance to conditions of higher intelligence and closer spiritual fellowship, and that some new form of religious thought, activity, and association, must eventually result, which shall not be Christianity, nor Judaism, nor Hinduism, nor any other specific faith that the past has known, but a new and more universal development of religious life from the vitalizing spirit that is common to them all? Can we not trust the spiritual energy which has been so potent in the past, and which is asserted to be full of power to-day, to do its own work? Shall we seek to limit its activity, or confess our distrust of it by attempting to authenticate it by certain definitions and names?

Every one of the great religions has now a Broad-Church party,—the party of the Spirit rather than the letter. And if the central principle of this party, which is belief, or trust, in the Spirit, were to be consistently followed out, no attempt being made even to define what is the nature or origin of the Spirit, or what its method of operation, we should have a Broad-Church movement and fellowship overlapping and obliterating the boundaries that have separated the religions of the world, and conterminous with at least the progressive and enlightened portions of the human race. It should not be thought necessary either to define this Spirit, on the one hand, as a power distinct from man, or, on the other hand, as the manifestation of man's own highest intelligence, improving and advancing through the ages. It is the sufficient and natural bond of fellowship that religion in all its forms is in itself a confession of man's relation to a Power, whether we call it person, or call it force, which works in the world of matter and the world of man, and which "makes for righteousness." Not even so much statement as this is requisite for the fellowship of the true Broad Church. The bond of association really lies in the fact of a common sentiment and a common movement, with no injunctions upon the intellect limiting inquiry, nor upon the tongue as to pronouncing a shibboleth. When the Broad Churchism of Christendom reaches this ground, there are many religious radicals who now, outside of all churches, are watching its advance with sympathy, who will then gladly join it, and give it their active coöperation.

W. J. P.

ORGANIZATION.

A word about organization. It is true, that no point is ever carried without it; but it is also true that, until there is a point to be carried, it cannot exist. People never organize for the sake of organizing. They never organize except in view of a contingency, and the contingency must be near and urgent for the organization to be effective.

Government is only a group of organizations for a multitude of immediate objects which demand instant attention. As soon as any one of them ceases to demand instant attention—ceases, that is, to be a vital object,—the organization formed to meet it falls asunder; the machinery becomes useless. The Church is an organization for the supply of certain general and permanent wants. Each new want calls for a special mode of organization to supply it. The central organization of the Church is many hundreds, we may say many thousands, of years old, and is good for its purposes; but, when special exigencies arise, it will not serve. We are prone to think of the Christian Church as a compact body, drilled and equipped for all emergencies. It is drilled and equipped for all the general emergencies of religious administration, but it must bring new methods to meet new cases. When Protestantism appeared, Loyola organized the Society of Jesus to oppose it. When Rationalism threatened, Orthodox Protestantism organized Young Men's Christian Associations to put it down. When the free religious spirit showed strength, Unitarianism organized the National Conference to suppress it. The advance of the foe calls into existence the army. Every government keeps up a permanent military organization, even in times of peace; for war is a permanent possibility. But if no war threatens, the military organization exists hardly more than in name. Even in France, a military nation, the army was entirely unprepared for the war of 1870, though Prussia was regarded as a threatening neighbor. How utterly we were unprepared for our own last war all remember. To say that we were unorganized for such an emergency, is to say little. We had lost the idea of organization, and did not know what it meant. The crisis brought the crystallizing force at the very moment of need, but not a moment sooner. For five or six years, war had been predicted. For five or six years, it had seemed to discerning minds inevitable. But the shot at Sumter was needed to rouse and consolidate the apathetic North. Then the emergency was felt, and then the clash of the closing ranks was heard.

It is of no use to preach organization before the need of it is, as men say, realized. Enlighten people in regard to the condition of affairs; point out danger; clear up ideas; throw out warnings; preach the truth as far as it is discernible,—organization will come at the last moment, but not before. It will come when a danger becomes imminent to all men.

It may be that danger threatens distantly from the purpose to protect by more stringent laws the puritan Sabbath, to enforce the reading of the Bible in the public schools, to insert into the preamble of the National Constitution the essential articles of the Christian belief. But the danger is, at present, so remote, that attempts to organize, in view of resisting it, meet with no encouragement. The cloud is hardly as big as a man's hand, and the family umbrellas repose in their cases. To say that while the radicals are unorganized their adversaries are drilled, and massed, and ready for the battle, is not quite true. The Orthodox community is by no means united in purpose, or even in sentiment, on all or either of the above mentioned points. Opinion is much divided. The conspicuous champions are few. The powerful leaders do not lend their aid; and, if the time comes when they do, the persuasion of the people at large must be their first concern. The general, permanent organizations for distributing Bibles and tracts, holding councils, ordaining ministers, maintaining missionaries, conducting seminaries, and so forth, cannot be used to much effect in furthering these new ends. The special exigency will have to be specially provided for, and it may be fairly doubted whether the radicals are not to the full as well prepared as their adversaries. Their minds are as quick of apprehension; their hearts are as hot with feeling; their determination is as clear; they are doing what they can to cast discredit on the proposed innovations. If they do no more, it is because they do not feel the need of doing any more. But let the danger become imminent, and the closing of the ranks will be sudden, and the resistance firm.

It may be unfortunate that people will not so far anticipate perils as to prevent them; but they will not. Ideal perils are none; real perils alone stir the blood. Ought we to regret this? Is it not better, on the whole, that the demonstration of force should be reserved till it is actually required? that power should not be squandered in fruitless anxiety? Let the seers proclaim their vision; let the prophets disclose their presentiments; let the preachers be faithful to their light. Then, if the storm gathers, the elements will be in readiness to combine and beat it back. The age of discussion must terminate before the age of organization opens; and the age of discussion has not yet reached its culmination.

O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

To the Editor of The Index:

Sir,—A little commotion has been made here lately about caricatures, owing to a prosecution for libel brought by Sir William Carroll against an artist who had made cruel sport of his infirmities, and had ridiculed his son.

It does not require much magnanimity to see one-self good-naturedly caricatured; but there is a surprising difference between the various ways in which one's face, or peculiarities, may be made food for laughter. There is a good-natured, and there is a spiteful, way of indulging in this branch of skill. It seems to be a gross outrage on humanity, and on good taste, to make fun of any natural defect—such as a curvature of the spine, or of a limb swollen by gout, or dropsy. The jury in the case alluded to must have felt this in awarding damages.

Another, and still more cruel, form of caricaturing, is where the artist fastens upon some abnormal condition of his subject, and turns it into more than a suggestion of intemperance or vice. During the time that Pellegrine was absent from the office of Vanity Fair, his place was occupied by an artist who, either out of mischievous fun, or from pure ill-nature, inflicted a cruel wrong upon the family and friends of a gentleman who favored him with a sitting. The gentleman was suffering from an eruption in the face, caused entirely by a severe strain upon his nervous system, owing to certain well-known public events in which he was deeply concerned. He was a man of strictly temperate and pure habits; but the caricature represented him as simply a drunkard, with a touch of licentiousness suggestive of even worse vice. He had the good sense, however, to bear the smart without remonstrance; nor would he have cared about it at all, but for the feelings of his family and friends.

It is clear, then, that this art of caricaturing may be frightfully abused; and the subject teaches us a lesson in morals not to be overlooked.

So long as fun is pure fun, it may be freely indulged; but the moment it is sought for at the expense of other people's feelings, it is immoral; and, because it tends to a breach of the peace, the law ought certainly to be enforced against those who would provide entertainment at such a cost.

There is, unfortunately, an immense amount of cruelty—wanton and coarse cruelty—among men of mature age; and I think it is largely due to the great defects in our training of boys. Our public schools, though far more humane than formerly, are still scenes of much wanton cruelty. I deny the necessity for this. All boys are not alike, and the difference between them is more due to their early training at home than to their native characters. On no other ground can we account for many dear, amiable boys, generous and kind at heart, amenable to any judicious remonstrance, taking part along with boys of very inferior characters in tormenting some defenceless animal, or some weak and ungainly schoolfellow. The fact is, that where training for character is most wanted our schools provide none at all. I am no advocate for having a system of police in our play-grounds, or for never leaving children to themselves. This would be an error in the opposite direction; but I strenuously urge that masters should be appointed to take some supervision of our play-grounds, who would be willing to join in the sports, and to exercise, not so much control, as healthy influence in setting a high tone of generosity, and justice, and uniform kindness. The slightest approach to oppression, or to make sport of another's infirmities, should be then and there, not punished, but denounced with stern and righteous indignation. Let boys be taught by daily training how mean and low it is to be cruel and unkind. Let them be impressed, all their youth up, with the manliness of a true chivalry and of especial tenderness towards the weak; and then we should hear no more of cruel sports among men, of the ungenerous ridicule of some unlucky messmate who is unpopular, of rude, practical joking, of the coarse hilarity which breaks out now and then upon the Stock-Exchange, nor of any of the hundred forms in which persons of mature age sink back into the most shameful habits and feelings of their boyhood, and exchange their good manners for pure savagery.

Caricaturing is one of these forms, when done in wanton mischief or in ill-will. Nor is it only with the pencil, but also with the pen, that evil-minded men inflict deep injuries. The "personal sketches," which are growing so popular, abound in the ferocity of illegitimate caricaturing, and perhaps cause deeper wounds than the fulsome cartoon.

Editors cannot always help themselves. They are at the mercy of the agents they employ. But the engagement of such agents ought surely to form one of the sacraments of life. A man who undertakes to report what he sees, or hears, ought to make truthfulness his religion, and to be ready to cut off his right hand rather than let it write down falsehood. The lies and slanders which go up and down the land, blighting fair fames, impeding holy causes, and doing the devil's work of perpetuating evil, will take decades of years to undo. And on the authors of those misrepresentations will lie the heaviest guilt—the guilt of perverting good to evil, of wantonly turning the best instrument of truth to the base service of falsehood, and of betraying the confidence reposed in them, and thus weakening trust between man and man all the world over.

A poor but dishonest woman, having obtained four shillings from a clergyman by false pretences, was brought to a proper sense of her guilt by this reproach: "You have not injured me; you have not injured the generous hearts who were ready to give you ten times as much,—but you have inflicted a fearful injury upon every poor person around you, by exciting suspicion and destroying confidence. Hundreds of them, perhaps deserving and needing relief, will have to go without it—through your fraud."

Let untruthful reporters take this story to heart, and bear in mind that they never depart from veracity without doing irreparable wrong to thousands of their fellow-men.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, June 29, 1874.

TRUTH IS ALWAYS consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, sits on our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware; a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention on the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. It is like building on a false foundation, which continually stands in need of props to shore it up, and proves at last more chargeable than to have raised a substantial building at first on a true and solid foundation.—Addison.

Communications.

THE LATEST SECT.

MR. EDITOR:—

Will you accept a word, without heat, friendly to all?

The Unitarian Denomination, having become the Unitarian Sect—in the name of Christ doing an unchristian thing, cutting off a man by a verbal test,—gives at last distinct warning to every free soul to quit.

For one, I feel the knife that cuts off my brother, and am cut off by it. As the act passes without any protest from the body or community which the Unitarian Association assumed to represent, it so far seems to be final, without repeal, or likelihood of appeal from the decision to any higher court inside the ranks. It is the brute ballot against the truth.

In the blowing of the bugle for "The next National Conference," in the last number of the Liberal Christian, we are informed that "The historical party, in our denomination, have made the last sacrifices to the intuitionalists." This is no individual, but a prevailing, impersonal opinion. The case is clear of arrested development, if this statement is to be received. The cry of "Halt!" resounds along the lines. For truth no more victories!

I do not complain of the order; but I imagine that by many, on the march, it will not be obeyed. It will be curious to watch and see who, of the brave spirits, will mind such a word of command.

Doubtless it is providential, that Unitarian, like other isms, should be thus mechanically consolidated, and left by all the courage, romance, and fresh thought it once created, expressed, and leaned on. The charm is gone. But who shall seize and uplift the banner of progress thus flung down? Whence the next spell of power? It is impossible that the denial or disallowance of fresh inspiration, which is the principal of atheism, should be adopted with slavish content by any who hope for their race.

Who are these "intuitionalists" to whom further sacrifices are to be refused? Who, but they, made the history in whose name it is now proposed to drag them to the executioner's block? Let them, by withdrawal, anticipate the process of being expelled. Could they meet, they might outnumber their judges. Let them proclaim, instead of history, the soul as the foundation of faith. They are a community, and cannot be killed. Let such remain as are satisfied with the so-called Christianity, as in theory or practice the last attainment of man, and with settling questions, that press, by texts and precedents, or other authority than the human mind.

The day of dictation is over. Leaders are lost. When spiritual perception is brought into contempt; when facts or speculations are held as finished, never to be bettered or revised,—then we are duly informed of the decease of the Holy Ghost. We go not to its funeral! It is none of ours.

What form, in art or religion, the divine procession is now to take I know not; only that it will, at no bidding, stop. Every station will rot: it will go on! Nor will it appear on sufferance at a convention, with the axe of a foregone conclusion and condemnation hanging over its head,—being itself creator and creation of the world.

Hail to its second, but never last, coming! Whomsoever the past may suffice for, not for us.

C. A. BARTOL.

CHATTEL SLAVERY AND THE CHURCH.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your word editorial, appended to my last, encourages me to write again. And, not to be tedious, I will begin by saying that the young people where I go, ministers with the rest, if not ministers particularly, appear to know nearly nothing about our former slave-system in two important particulars: first, as to its nature and character; and, secondly, in what ways and how far it was sustained, sanctified, and practised by the American church and pulpit, from Maine to Mexico.

First, then, as to what our slave system really was, under law and constitution.

It is commonly held that no nation is better than its laws. At any rate, no law is enacted until needed, or supposed to be needed. Under the law of slavery, a slave was put completely in the power of the master to whom he or she belonged; was simply "goods and chattels;" bred with and like other plantation "live stock;" could be appraised, attached, devised, bought, sold, leased, mortgaged, raffled, gambled, or given away. Whatever masters or mistresses might do with horses, mules, sheep, swine, or dogs, just that they could do to slaves, or do with or by slaves, except to butcher them. And if any slave, male or female, resisted violently any demand of the master, such slave could be lawfully killed on the spot. I have read of slave girls killed by masters and overseers for defending their chastity. It might have been so.

Again; it was a crime to teach slaves to read any book, or to sell or give them any book—Bible, Testament, or catechism not excepted. Margaret Douglass, a young white woman, was fined and imprisoned under Virginia statute, and that in slavery's last years, for teaching, not slaves, but free colored children, to read. And a colporteur of the Bible Society was once arrested and tried for the stupendous crime of giving a Testament to a slave family in Alabama! Pleading ignorance of the law, and promising solemnly not to offend again in that manner, he was graciously forgiven that time, after suffering some severe sermonizing from the magistrate, whose own name was Black.

Marriage among slaves, or the family relation, was to the statute-book of slavery a thing unknown. Some owners might respect it; but such must die, might fail in business, and then away went their property to auction, or to market,—horses, asses, sheep, swine, slaves, and all; and marriage relation was known or unknown to all, exactly alike! A slave mother had no child in law, more than any brute. As slave, she was a brute, a beast; no more! So the child was but pig or puppy, colt or calf, in the ledger, the appraisal bill, or on the auction block. And in slave-breeding districts the number of female slaves was always much larger than of males.

Such were two or three prominent features of slavery, seen in its own statute books, newspapers, and the records of its courts. Such, too, was slavery, as sanctioned and sanctified by the Bible-interpretations, prayers, sermons, and sacraments of the churches—Southern, Northern, Catholic, and Protestant—seen in their actual, constant practice, and read in the proceedings of almost every great ecclesiastical body throughout the land, for a period of many, I know not how many, years. Such, surely, was Christianity. Are we sure it is any better now?

PARKER PILLSBURY.

[We hope that Mr. Pillsbury, through the columns of THE INDEX, will further inform and instruct its readers in regard to the relation of the Christian Church to American slavery.—A. W. S.]

BELIEF IN HELL AS A MEANS OF SAFETY.

Probably, in the experience of many of the radical readers of THE INDEX, when attempting to show some Orthodox Christian the falsity and absurdity of the doctrine of hell, they have often been met with a plea substantially as follows:—

"It is true, the doctrine of hell does seem to conflict with reason, and our conception of the justice and goodness of God; but we ought not, on that account, to reject it. Is man to be so presumptuous as to call in question God's actions? We must remember that 'God's ways are not our ways;' and acts, that may seem wrong to us fallible, human creatures, may be in strict accordance with divine wisdom and goodness. Even if it be false, I lose nothing by the belief; and since it may be true, how much safer is my condition than yours!"

To many, it may seem idle to give such an argument serious consideration; but, as so many seem to rely upon its cogency for their faith, let us examine it for a moment, and see what the effect will be of thus rejecting our human ideas of justice and morality, as well as the laws of evidence, on grounds of personal safety.

Sometime since, a little tract fell into my hands entitled, "No Salvation without Baptism. Immersion the only true Baptism." Of course, it is useless to consider whether or not the body of the tract proved this cheerful dogma, since in either case it may be true; and safety, of course, demands that we should all be Baptists!

The Church of Rome has declared that, unless we accept entire the faith of the only "true apostolic church," we shall, "without doubt, perish everlastingly." As it may be so, we must, to insure salvation, fly to the arms of the Church!

But, says the Mohammedan: "Infidel Christian dogs! unless you accept our faith, the gates of Paradise shall be closed against you!" So again we must yield; become Mussulmans, profess the unity of God, acknowledge Mohammed as his prophet, pray five times a day, fast one month in the year, go to Mecca once in a lifetime, never partake of wine, etc., etc.,—since it may be true!

Thus, in turn, arise Brahmanism, Mormonism, and many other systems of faith, and demand acceptance under penalty of eternal damnation. And since human reason is deemed impotent to decide the validity of each of these claims, safety requires the acceptance of all of them, however contradictory they may be.

That being done, are we surely safe? Have we a full guarantee of salvation?

"Yes," we are told, "God has so promised!"

But have we any certainty that he will fulfil his promise? What if he chooses not to do so? Who knows what God, in his "inscrutable wisdom," may see fit to do? "God's ways are not our ways," remember! Who can tell but it is a part of the "divine plan" to save the un-believers, and it is the believers, after all, who are to be damned?

Certainly, it is no more in conflict with human justice to thus punish the believer, than the honest unbeliever; and, even if it were, "is man to be so presumptuous as to question God's actions," and hold him to human standards of justice, and human ideas of the moral obligation of pledges?

Alas, we find that rejecting our reason does not, after all, give us any assurance of salvation; and that no greater fallacy exists than that of supposing that belief in a doctrine can do no harm, even though it be false. But what have we but our reason to protect us from false doctrines? Nothing.

Our highest ideas of justice and morality, and our reasoning faculties, may, it is true, be far from perfect; but let us not, on that account, reject the light we have. Our only safety is to be true to that light. And, in proportion as we are true to it, will our standard ever grow higher, and more in accordance with eternal truth and justice.

But when I hear persons rejecting their own standard, and ascribing such moral monstrosities to what they call the Divine Being, I think of the following scathing words of the lamented late John Stuart Mill:—

"To say God's goodness may be different in kind from man's goodness, what is it but saying, with a slight change of phraseology, that God may possibly not be good? To assert in words what we do not think in meaning, is as suitable a definition as can be given of a moral falsehood. . . . If I am informed that the world is ruled by a being whose attributes are infinite, but what they are we cannot learn, nor what are the principles of his government, except that the highest human morality which we are capable of conceiving does not sanction them,—convince me of it, and I will bear my fate as I may. But when I am told that I must believe this, and at the same time call this being by the names which express the highest human morality, I say in plain terms, I will not. Whatever power such a being may have over me, there is one thing he shall not do—he shall not compel me to worship him. I will call no being good, who is not what I mean when I apply that epithet to my fellow-creatures; and if such a being can sentence me to hell for not calling him so, to hell I will go." Q.

WHY WE DO NOT ORGANIZE.

THE INDEX, for July 2, has a very good article, addressed "To the Radicals of the United States;" and beginning: "Will the efforts now being made in this country, in behalf of free thought, be of any permanent use to our people?" It also says: "One hundred years ago, there was as much free thought in this country, in proportion to its population, as there is now, and probably more. . . . Each age had the same old battle to fight over and over again, just as we are now doing. . . . Natural religionists, in all ages, have entirely lost the fruits of their labors because they did not organize. . . . The Radicals are open to the charge of coldness and selfishness. Would to God that, in the holy cause of intellectual and spiritual freedom for all mankind, they had a little of the zeal and missionary spirit which the Church displays in promoting her own ends."

This article is warmly endorsed by the editor, and its truth must be admitted by all who consider how small a share of their means is contributed by the millions of Radicals towards the circulation of THE INDEX, and the activity of the Free Religious Association. No Orthodox body would suffer such champions to be so fettered. The failures of the Radical and the Dial to sustain themselves, the smallness of the contributions made by the hearers of the lectures in Horticultural Hall, and the general difficulty of raising money for preachers and lecturers in behalf of free thought, are well known. The country is full of men like the one who boasted that he "saved one hundred dollars a year by being a Liberal." It would have cost him that much to belong to any sect.

So great is the evil, that it is important to know its causes. One reason is that there is a disorganizing element in the prevalent form of Radicalism. Mr. Weiss expressed it when he said: "The sacredness of the individual is the basis of American Religion." The sacredness of the individual is too narrow a basis for any organization whatever. Such a religion bids each man stand by himself, and let his neighbors do the same.

THE INDEX began by announcing "Fifty Affirmations," one of the principal of which was that "Religion is the conscious effort of man to perfect himself." If my main business in life is to perfect myself, I ought not to associate with people further from perfection than I am; and, on the same principle, I have no right to ask more perfect people than I am to associate with me.

And the most unfortunate thing about this idea is that it is not original with any of the writers in THE INDEX; but rather with their teacher—the founder of American transcendentalism.

Mr. Emerson declares in his first and best book, Miscellanies, in the "Oration on the American Scholar," p. 108: "Another sign of our times, also marked by an analogous political movement, is the new importance given to the single person. Every thing that tends to insulate the individual—to surround him with barriers of natural respect, so that each man shall feel the world is his, and man shall treat with man, as a sovereign State with a sovereign State—tends to true union as well as greatness." What sort of union is meant is shown by the prophecy on the next page but one; that, "If the single man plant himself indomitably on his instincts, and there abide, the huge world will come round to him." Which being true, there is no need of organizations. Indeed we are; a few lines further on in the same essay, shown the true value of organizations, by being told that it is "the chief disgrace in the world not to be a unit, . . . but to be reckoned in the gross, in the hundred, or the thousand, of the party or the section to which we belong."

Radicals will never organize until they are willing to be reckoned in just this way, and until they think more of their neighbors' welfare than of their own individual perfection.

And again, the Address to the Divinity School, otherwise faultless, says: "That is always best which gives me to myself. The sublime is excited in me by the great Stoical doctrine 'Obey thyself!' That which shows God in me fortifies me. That which shows God out of me makes me a wart and a wen." (p. 126 of the same volume.)

Organizations do not give me to myself, but to my neighbors; and they will not take deep hold of me until I can see God in other men who need my help. The precept "Obey thyself" offers to me the teaching, not of ancient Stoicism, which was remarkable for its devotion to general interests, but merely of modern transcendentalism, which is necessarily individualistic and disintegrating.

Rightly does Emerson's lecture on "The Transcendentalist" (p. 324 in the Miscellanies) give as "his whole ethics," "To be self-dependent. The height, the dignity of man is to be self-sustained, to need no gift, no foreign force." The legitimate embodiment of such ideas, which I might go on quoting indefinitely, is not THE INDEX, or the Free Religious Association. It is Thoreau's shanty on Walden Pond.

We must remember gratefully Mr. Emerson's immense services to our cause; but we must look elsewhere for the proper basis on which that cause can be so organized as to endure. We shall find no such basis until we can say with Fénelon: "I prefer my family to myself, my country to my family, and mankind to my country."

It is easy for men whose ideal is not the perfection of the individual, but the salvation of the world, to organize firmly, and pour out money like water for missionary victories. Much as we may blame sectarianism, we have no right to call it narrower or more selfish than individualism.

But it is not necessary to be either a sectarian or an individualist. Fénelon was no sectarian, and it is possible to take as broad a view as his, without looking out from any church. We could adopt the Positivist maxim—"Live for Others"—without the machinery which Comte devised for its promulgation. From such a maxim, success in organizing would come spontaneously. Or, without any help from Positivism, we might learn from Strauss that "All moral action arises from the individual's acting in consonance with the idea of kind. To realize this in the first place, and to bring himself as an individual into abiding concord with the idea and the destiny of mankind, is the essence of the duties which man owes to himself. . . . Man can only come to be a man by the coöperation of men."

If we could realize this, and believe with William von Humboldt that "He is not yet penetrated with the loftiest idea of all morality, so long as he can be content to regard himself and others as distinct and isolated," we should find it easy to organize firmly and contribute freely for the common good. And if any one fears that, by organizing for this end, we in any way imperil our personal liberty and individual development, let him remember that the ablest champion of these great interests—John Stuart Mill—was also a devoted believer in the sacredness of the "greatest happiness of the greatest number," and the importance of attaining this end "by the general cultivation of nobleness of character."

When the new philosophy takes the place of transcendentalism, and radicals become utilitarians instead of individualists, then, and not till then, shall we care enough for the general welfare to form organizations worthy of our cause. THE INDEX has done much of late to promote this transfiguration of radicalism; but more is yet to do.

FRED. MAY HOLLAND.

PRESENT RELIGIOUS VITALITY.

The relations of the soul to the divine spirit are so pure, that it is profane to seek to interpose helps. It must be that when God speaketh he should communicate, not one thing, but all things; should fill the world with his voice; should scatter forth light, nature, time, souls, from the centre of the present thought; and new date and new create the whole. Whenever a mind is simple, and receives a divine wisdom, old things pass away,—means, teachers, texts, temples fall; it lives now, and absorbs past and future into the present hour. All things are made sacred by relation to it,—one as much as another. All things are dissolved to their centre by their cause, and, in the universal miracle, petty and particular miracles disappear. If, therefore, a man claims to know and speak of God, and carries you backward to the phraseology of some old mouldered nation, in another country, in another world, believe him not. Is the acorn better than the oak, which is its fullness and completion? Is the parent better than the child into whom he has cast his ripened being? Whence, then, this worship of the past? The centuries are conspirators against the sanity and authority of the soul. Time and space are but physiological colors which the eye makes, but the soul is light; where it is, is day; where it was, is night; and history is an impertinence and an injury, if it be anything more than a cheerful apologue or parable of my being and becoming.

Man is timid and apologetic; he is no longer upright; he dares not say, "I think," "I am," but quotes some saint or sage. He is ashamed before the blade of grass or the blowing rose. These roses under my window make no reference to former roses or to better ones; they are for what they are; they exist with God to-day. There is no time to them. There is simply the rose; it is perfect in every moment of its existence. Before a leaf bud has burst, its whole life acts,—in the full blown flower there is no more; in the leafless root there is no less. Its nature is satisfied, and it satisfies Nature, in all moments alike. But man postpones or remembers; he does not live in the present, but with reverted eye laments the past, or, heedless of the riches that surround him, stands on tiptoe to foresee the future. He cannot be happy and strong until he too lives with Nature, above time.

This should be plain enough. Yet see what strong intellects dare not yet hear God himself, unless he speak the phraseology of I know not what David, or Jeremiah, or Paul. We shall not always set so great a price on a few texts, or a few lives.

We are like children, who repeat by rote the sentences of grandames and tutors, and, as they grow older, of the men of talents and character they chance to see, painfully recollecting the exact words they spoke; afterwards, when they come into the point of view which those had who uttered these sayings, they understand them and are willing to let the words go; for, at any time, they can use words as good when occasion comes. If we live truly we shall see truly. It is as easy for the strong man to be strong, as it is for the weak to be weak. When we have new perception, we shall gladly disburden the memory of its hoarded treasures as old rubbish. When a man lives with God, his voice shall be as sweet as the murmur of the brook and the rustle of the corn.—Emerson's "Self-Reliance."

THOMAS JEFFERSON ON RELIGION.

The following extract from a letter of Jefferson to a young ward of his, Peter Carr, deserves the consideration of every American youth:—

"RELIGION.—Your reason is now mature enough to examine this subject. In the first place, divest yourself of all bias in favor of novelty and singularity of opinion. Indulge them in any other subject rather than that of religion. It is too important, and the consequences of error may be too serious. On the other hand, shake off all the fears and servile prejudices under which weak minds are servilely crouched. Fix reason firmly in her seat; and call to her tribunal every fact, every opinion. Question with boldness even the existence of a God; because, if there be one, he must more approve the homage of reason than that of blindfolded fear. You will naturally examine, first, the religion of your own country. Read the Bible, then, as you would read Livy or Tacitus. The facts which are within the ordinary course of Nature you will believe on the authority of the writer, as you do those of the same kind in Livy and Tacitus. The testimony of the writer weighs in their favor in one scale, and their not being against the laws of Nature does not weigh against them. But those facts in the Bible which contradict the laws of Nature must be examined with more care, and under a variety of faces. Here you must recur to the pretensions of the writer to inspiration from God. Examine upon what evidence his pretensions are founded, and whether that evidence is so strong as that its falsehood would be more improbable than a change of the laws of Nature in the case he relates. For example, in the book of Joshua we are told the sun stood still several hours. Were we to read that fact in Livy or Tacitus, we should class it with their showers of blood, speaking of statues, beasts, etc. But it is said that the writer of that book was inspired. Examine, therefore, candidly, what evidence there is of his having been inspired. The pretension is entitled to your inquiry, because millions believe it. On the other hand, you are astronomer enough to know how contrary it is to the laws of Nature that a body revolving on its axis, as the earth does, should have stopped; should not, by that sudden stoppage, have prostrated animals, trees, buildings; and should, after a certain time, have resumed its revolution, and that without a second general prostration. Is this arrest of the earth's motion, or the evidence which affirms it, most within the laws of probabilities?

"You will next read the New Testament. It is the history of a personage called Jesus. Keep in your eye the opposite pretensions,—first, of those who say he was begotten by God, born of a virgin, suspended and reversed the laws of Nature at will, and ascended bodily into heaven; and, second, of those who say he was a man of illegitimate birth, of a benevolent heart, enthusiastic mind, who set out without pretensions to divinity, ended in believing them, and was punished capitally for sedition, by being gibbeted, according to the Roman law, which punished the first commission of that offence by whipping, and the second by exile or death in furea. See this law in the Digest, Lib. 48, tit. 19, § 28, 3; and Lipsius, Lib. 2, de cruce. cap. 2.

"These questions are examined in the books I have mentioned, under the head of religion, and several others. They will assist you in your inquiries; but keep your reason firmly on the watch in reading them all. Do not be frightened from this inquiry by any fear of its consequences. If it end in a belief that there is no God, you will find incitements to virtue in the comfort and pleasantness you feel in its exercise, and the love of others which it will procure you. If you find reason to believe there is a God, a consciousness that you are acting under his eye, and that he approves you, will be a vast additional incitement; if that there be a future state, the hope of a happy existence in that increases the appetite to deserve it; if that Jesus was also a God, you will be comforted by a belief of his aid and love. In fine, I repeat, you must lay aside all prejudice on both sides, and neither believe nor reject anything because any other person, or description of persons, have rejected or believed it. Your own reason is the only oracle given you by Heaven; and you are answerable, not for the rightness, but uprightness, of the decision.

"I forgot to observe, when speaking of the New Testament, that you should read all the histories of Christ, as well of those of whom a council of ecclesiastics have decided for us to be pseudo-evangelists, as those they named evangelists. Because those pseudo-evangelists pretended to inspiration, as much as the others, and you are to judge their pretensions by your own reason, and not by the reason of those ecclesiastics. Most of these are lost. There are some, however, still extant, collected by Fabricius, which I will endeavor to get and send you."

MARK TWAIN created no small amusement at a dinner to which he was invited lately. In the course of the proceedings, his health was drunk with enthusiasm. The fact, although he had been notified of it beforehand, appeared to take him utterly by surprise. In response, he rose, and, drawing from his pocket a huge roll of foolscap—some thirty pages—began to read, slowly and with difficulty—reading that he was taken entirely by surprise; that he was wholly unprepared to reply; that, had he known the honor in store for him, he would have come prepared with a suitable speech, etc. Of course, the joke was taken, and the applause was uproarious.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.¶

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions,			10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"		8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"		6	"	"
" 52	"		5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property; as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

Price.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets 1.50
Concord Days 1.50
Records of a School. A new edition 1.50

ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols 3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories 1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl 1.50
Little Men 1.50
My Boys, &c 1.00
Shawl-Straps 1.00
Work; A Story of Experience 1.75

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50

ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism 2.00
New Poems 2.00
Literature and Dogma 1.50

AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine 2.00
Edelweiss 1.00
German Tales 1.00

BACON'S Essays 1.00

BAGEHOT on the English Constitution 2.25
Physics and Politics 1.50

BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy 1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol 1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol 5.00

BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50

BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations 3.00

BARTOL (REV. C. A). Radical Problems ... 2.00
The Rising Faith 2.00

BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols 5.00

BIBLE in the Public Schools.
Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati 2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible ..... .50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible ..... .50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case ..... .25

BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls

BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary 2.25
The World-Priest 2.25
The Tall Student ..... .75

BUECHNER'S Force and Matter 3.25

BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols 6.00

CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol ..... .80

CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions 3.00

CERVANTES' Don Quixote 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing 1.50

CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. 2.00

CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside 1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience 1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated 1.50

CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions 3.00
Common-Sense in Religion 2.00

CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education 1.25

CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World ..... .75

COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays 5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age ..... .20

CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage 1.75

CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol 2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans 2.00

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship 2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies" 1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor" 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols 4.00

Journal of Researches 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals 3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated 6.00

DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England 1.50

DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 8 vols., each 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.
Romola.
The Mill on the Floss.
Felix Holt.
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy 1.50
How Lisa Loved the King ..... .50

EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.. 2.00
Essays. Second Series 2.00
Miscellanies 2.00
Representative Men 2.00
English Traits 2.00
Conduct of Life 2.00
Poems. With Portrait 2.00
May-day and Other Pieces 2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold 1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols 5.00
Society and Solitude 2.00

EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols 5.00

FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion 2.00

FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.. 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity 1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers ..... .20
Child's Book of Religion 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker 3.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol 5.00
Elective Affinities 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols 3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments 2.00
Creed of Christendom 3.25

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait 5.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France 1.50
Thoughts about Art 2.00
The Unknown River 6.00
The Intellectual Life 2.00
Chapters on Animals 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second 1.00
Child World. Part First 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures.
1. Metaphysical Lectures 3.50
2. Logical Lectures 3.50

HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol 2.00
Twice-Told Tales.
Mosses from an Old Manse.
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.
The Marble Faun.
The English Note-Books.
The American Note-Books.
The French and Italian Note-Books.
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers ... 1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment 1.50
Atlantic Essays 2.00
Oldport Days 2.50

HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey 2.00
Suburban Sketches 2.00
Venetian Life 2.00
Italian Journeys 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, " 'Ninety-Three".. 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits 10.50

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life 1.75

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses 1.25
Bits of Travel 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature 1.25
On the Origin of Species 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism ..... .50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen 1.50
Songs of Seven 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs 1.75
Studies for Stories 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours 1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story 1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect ..... .60

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall 1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian 2.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols 12.00

KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols 4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols 6.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham 1.50

LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols 4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed 3.00

LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50

LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols 4.00
Prose Works. Portrait 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series 1.50
Among my Books 2.00
My Study Windows 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children. .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.. 2.00
Pre-historic Times 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols 8.00
Elements of Geology 3.50

MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter 1.50

MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848 ..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol 2.50
The New Affinities of Faith ..... .25

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind ..... .75

MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations 1.50

MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each 2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition 2.50
The Subjection of Women 1.25
Essay on Liberty 1.25
Representative Government 1.50
Autobiography 2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works ... 1.0

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire 2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols 5.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series 2.50
The Same. Second Series 3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion 2.00

NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle 1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy 4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed 2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.. 2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical 4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. .25
Against Hero-Making in Religion ..... .25

PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols 4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols 3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings 1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham... 1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story ..... .60

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite 1.00

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar 1.50
The Trotty Book 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts 1.50
Hedged In 1.50
The Silent Partner 1.50
What to Wear? 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition 2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven 2.00

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante 2.50

SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies 6.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe ..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations ..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth ..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical 1.25
First Principles 2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 5.00
Philosophy of Style ..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.. 2.00
Sociology 2.00

SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ..... .25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics 9.00

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin ..... .00

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols 12.00

TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske 2.50

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.

The Virginians.
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.25

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.

THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals 1.50

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. 2.00
The Maine Woods 2.00
Cape Cod 2.0
Letters 2.00
A Yankee in Canada 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers 2.00

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer 1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People 2.00
Light and Electricity 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion 2.00
On Sound 2.00
Radiant Heat 5.00
Forms of Water 1.50
Lectures on Light 1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall ..... .50

TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each 3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each 3.75
The Voysey Appeal ..... .50
Voysey's Defence at York ..... .50

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden 1.00
Saunterings 1.50
Back-Log Studies 2.00

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life 1.50
Essays and Reviews 3.00
Character and Characteristic Men 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.... 1.50
Success and its Conditions 1.50
Washington and the Revolution ..... .30

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story 1.50
Real Folks 1.50
The Other Girls 2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols 4.00
Child Life 3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHAPTERS

FROM

The Bible of the Ages.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by

GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER,

BY

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

"Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished in plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

PENN MEDICAL UNIVERSITY,

OF PHILADELPHIA.

The regular course of Lectures in this Institution will commence on the first Monday in October, and is open to both sexes. The school is liberal and progressive, and thorough in its teachings. For announcement giving terms and other particulars, address
E. D. BUCKMAN, M.D., DEAN,
No. 1030 Spring Garden St.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,

showing the workings of the

COST PRINCIPLE.

Price 25 cents.

For sale by

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield St., Boston.

NEW SINGING BOOKS!

THE LEADER!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Choirs, Conventions, and Singing Classes will welcome this new Church Music-Book, filled with new tunes, anthems, chants, etc., etc., all of the best quality.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per Dozen.

The Song Monarch!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Especially for Singing Classes. First 86 pages contain the elementary course, the same as that in the LEADER, which course is followed by more than 100 pages filled with the most interesting Secular and Sacred Music for practice. Equal to the SONG KING in interest.

Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

AMERICAN

School Music Readers.

Three carefully graded Song Books for Common Schools, by L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN.

Book 1st. For Primary Schools. Price 35 cts.
Book 2d. For Lower "Grammar" Classes. Price 50 cts.
Book 3d. For Higher "Grammar" Classes. Price 60 cts.

The Course is easy, progressive, interesting, and has been thoroughly tested in schools near Boston.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS,

LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES, paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or

Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,

if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old

Real Estate and Loan Agency

OF

ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.

Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.

Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY

LECTURES

BY

JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1874. WHOLE NO. 240.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

"COLUMBIA is the gem of"—Saratoga Lake.

JOAQUIN MILLER says that "Vesuvius is an incessant smoker." Rev. George Trask ought to send it one of his anti-tobacco tracts.

ANOTHER Indian war is threatening. And who is to blame this time—the Christian, or the savage? Some who know "the savage" best think he is the least savage of the two.

THE BROOKLYN Argus says that "they have a tradition in the Catskill Mountains that, when an Albany deacon goes there for trout, the fish require him to produce a certificate of good character before they will bite." It strikes us that this is a biting sarcasm on Albany deacons.

THE Christian Union says that "the Christian observance of the Lord's day rests on the real excellence and usefulness of the institution,"—which appears to us to be a very good basis. The Second Radical Club, of Boston, found the "Lord's day" "real excellent and useful" for a Picnic. Mr. Beecher, did they do right?

IN THE RECENT Saratoga Regatta there was a row in more senses of the word than one. Between the crews of Harvard and Yale, fair and generous rivalry lapsed into angry and spiteful antagonism. The boys of both colleges should learn and heed the nursery rhyme—

"Let dogs delight
To bark and bite," etc.

IN REPLY to a correspondent in Kansas, Mr. Beecher, in the Christian Union, informs him that "the balance of power in New York City was never in the hands of professed infidels;" and adds: "Our rogues all claim to be good Christians of one sort or other." A candid admission surely. And yet we should not dare to claim that it applied in all cases. We do not believe that all rogues are "Christians," as we most certainly do not that all "Christians" are rogues. Strange as it may seem, it is not likely that all "infidels" are perfect; a little of the "Old Adam" still lurks in a few of them. When shall we learn to disregard the distinctions which sectarian names suggest, and come to have a great, patient, all-charitable faith in human nature?

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN has taken to eating vegetables instead of meat; and, as the result of this more spiritual diet, he has discovered, and now declares, that many deeds of his past life, "which he formerly supposed he was enacting out of some grand principle for the benefit of humanity, had no higher motive than that thing they call fame, ambition, popularity, self, or a morbid love of notoriety." And he now appeals to the press to drop his name into the gulf of oblivion, promising never again to speak in public, print another book, or write another letter to a newspaper. Sensible Train, at last! We apologize to him for mentioning his name now; and do hereby and henceforth let it drop, as he desires. Would that many more might eat vegetables, who are inflicting, or proposing to inflict, upon the public books, essays, and writings that are eminently entitled to that oblivion which the above unnamable gentleman courts!

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, through the Address of its Congressional Committee, has asked of the people of this nation a continued and indefinite lease of power. It does so on the ground of its assumed ability to manage the affairs of the country better than the Democratic Party can. Now, we do not care to discuss this heroic pretension here; but content ourselves with saying, that, so long as we must have "politics,"—so long as we must have the "ins" and "outs" of political parties and administrations,—it seems to us desirable that these "ins" and "outs" should change places often, and that no party should be allowed very long to monopolize power. For it is matter of history that any party which retains possession of the Government for any great length of time invariably becomes corrupt, and an offence to the intelligence and virtue of the nation. Therefore, as one of "the people," we respectfully ask for a "new deal."

THE Nation, of July 16, closes an excellent article on "Why people like to live Abroad," with these words: "The colleges of the country, and the railroads, and, indeed, everything that depends on private enterprise, are rapidly becoming objects of pride; but a good deal needs to be done by the Government, to prevent its being a source of shame." The query which naturally arises from this is, if the Government succeeds so poorly, and private enterprise so well, in producing the desirable results of civilization, would it not be better to detach more and more of our interests and our affairs from the Government, and commit them directly into the hands of private enterprise? What is called "the Government" is fast coming to be, not a source of benefit, but of actual demoralization, to the people, and a burden on American society, occasioning the gravest anxiety to all thoughtful persons. It would seem that either we must commit more interests to Government, and make it more absolute, or that we must much circumscribe its power, and reduce it to its lowest terms.

IT IS SAID that the musical concert-pitch has been gradually rising, until it is now nearly a full tone higher than it was one hundred years ago; but recently, at Drury-Lane Theatre, London, the pitch was lowered, by the musical director, a half tone. Now, the pitch of our social life has been rising rapidly, for a good many years; that is, the life of society has been growing faster and faster, becoming more and more intense and excited. The result is that a great majority of our people are living, to-day, for mere pleasure, for fame, or for fortune. We are, indeed, "on the bolt." We bolt everything,—food, education, literature, politics, religion. Consequently, we digest comparatively nothing. Consequently, the social man is dyspeptic to-day,—in body, mind, and spirit. We need to learn how to live slowly, calmly, quietly. We must live less in public, and more in private. We must mind our own business more, and other people's less. We must cultivate the genius of character, and let other geniuses take care of themselves. Let us heed the beautiful text of the old Scripture: "BE STILL, and know that I am God."

WHEN MEN do wrong, or commit some great sin against their moral nature, why should we be so surprised, so angry, so disgusted? Is it not human to err? Does it not belong to our finite state to be short-coming and transgressing in many things? Who is so good that he is not sometimes bad? Who is so righteous that he is not sometimes unrighteous? Who is so strong that he is not sometimes weak? What one man is able or fit to judge another, or all the rest, and make due allowance for circumstances? Where is the man without sin, that the office becomes him to cast stones at his fellow-men? The law of evolution teaches us—even as history does—that we are all becoming, that none of us has yet arrived at the infallible state. While we are growing, and learning to grow,—while we are getting out of the animal into the spiritual, out of the earth into the heavens,—we must expect every condition that is incident to the process of development. We should be surprised at nothing; neither should we be impatient nor condemnatory. The race, and every individual in it, is bound to succeed in the effort after perfection—for the perfection of all is the destiny of all. We can afford to wait; we can afford to be patient; we can afford to be charitable. Then let us be

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND' N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Relations of Moral and Æsthetic Life.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

The relation of art to morals, art to religion, art to life, has latterly been scrutinized by many different writers; and many different conclusions have been reached, two of which have attained an evil prominence.

One of these is the conclusion that between art and morals there is no natural relation. The artist, we are told, must never be a preacher. When he becomes a preacher, he either ceases to be an artist, or fatally mars his work. Beauty must be sought for its own sake, with no ulterior purpose. The distinguished apostle of this theory is Henri Taine, the great French critic; so great that his works, though vitiated, cannot be spoiled, by any theory that he may cherish. Others have carried his theories one step further, and have arrived at the conclusion that beauty is so far from being the ally and servant of virtue that it is its actual enemy; so that no one can choose them both. To choose virtue is to surrender beauty. To choose beauty is to bid virtue a respectful, sometimes a very disrespectful, adieu.

Should this turn out to be so, it would be the more the pity, seeing that every form of art was originally the offspring of religion. Go back far enough, and we find that the various arts had no existence on their own account; that they were all subordinate to religion; that they were all her children, and her willing servants,—as were many children of their parents in the former times. The earliest poems everywhere were sacred hymns and songs conceived and executed in recognition and honor of the Deity. Grecian sculpture, in all its primitive and progressive stages, was for the sole purpose of making statues of the gods. The Greek architecture also had its force, motive, and laws, in the work of building temples in which to house the statues of the gods, and shrines in which they stood. That the Greek drama had a religious origin is well known to every student of dramatic art. The modern drama, too, originated with the Church,—a fact which the Church is apt to forget in her virulent attacks upon it. The "Passion-Play," of which we have all heard so much, is not any new thing, but an instance of "survival in culture," something left over from the miracle-plays of the Middle Ages. The same truth holds in regard to our modern music; it all sprang and grew in the service of religion. "I have often thought," says an earnest writer, "that the right use of music could not be better illustrated than in 'the sweet singer of Israel,' who, when the evil spirit got into King Saul, took heart and voice, and with his music charmed it out of him. Probably, if David had undertaken to argue the evil spirit, he would have just strengthened the possession; for the Devil was then, as now, an expert logician. But he could not withstand the power of a divine song."

Seeing, therefore, that it was the power of religion that called the arts into existence; seeing that their first labors were all performed, their first victories all gained, in her service,—it would seem like the basest ingratitude to divorce them from her utterly, or make them antithetical and inimical to her. It is generally agreed that the highest perfection of anything is in a line with original development; so that, even if the arts can be and should be no longer confined to the service of religion, it would seem that their greatest victories must be on her side, and by the fulness of her inspiration.

That it has been so, thus far in the world's history, would be easy to determine from the most casual review of it. Shakspeare, the greatest of all artists, would at first glance seem the most independent of religion; but "himself from God he could not free," any more than Phidias, or Angelico. His dramas are related to Gothic architecture, just exactly as the dramas of Eschylus and Sophocles are related to the Parthenon. In Greece, temple and drama were alike expressions of religion—finished expressions, without vastness, without mystery, statuesque and cold. Hamlet, on the contrary, impresses us precisely as does a Gothic cathedral. Its grandeur and its gloom are there; its infinite suggestiveness, its divine longing and dissatisfaction, its music sweet and sad, deep chants and solemn misereres, its pictured windows all aglow with saintly and angelic companies. We cannot allow that Gothic architecture is an expression of religious sentiment, without allowing Hamlet to have been the same.

As for his moral sentiments, Shakspeare had no right, as a dramatic writer, to express them in his plays; but they are not, therefore, unmoral, or immoral, productions. He is not careful to have all good people turn out prosperous and happy, because they do not do so in life; and his object was to hold a mirror up to Nature. But he does a great deal better. He always gives to virtue an inherent beauty, and an authoritative charm, quite independent of all consequences. Iago, though triumphant and exulting, would be just as hateful to us as if utterly disgraced and ruined. Ophelia's virtue shines the brighter for the clouds it pierces with its wondrous ray. The crowning glory of Shakspeare is the silent homage which he always pays to truth and righteousness, and always wins from us.

The dramatic poet cannot be formally didactic; but many other artists may be, and without prejudicing their power and influence. They can be teachers and preachers without being a whit less artists. "The perfection of beauty" is reached only by expressing or suggesting moral height or purity.

Emerson says: "I find the antique sculpture as ethical as Marcus Antonnius." If antique sculpture is ethical, Gothic architecture is preëminently religious. It arouses in the worshipper, in the beholder, the very sentiments that inspired its architects to lay its deep foundations and to lift its tapering spires into the silent and astonished air. That "frozen music" lures the heart to deeps compared with which the ocean's deepest bed is shallowness; to heights whereto the highest mountains have not climbed—no, nor the stars, that seem more distant seen from their domes and pinnacles. All beauty, whether of God's or man's creation, in its essential quality has a religious or an ethical attraction. In its very nature it is infinite, relatively, at least, to human apprehension. As yet, no man has laid the line upon it. No man can tell us the why and wherefore of the beautiful. If your friend cannot, looking straight through his own eyes, see that the picture, or the statue, or the landscape, is beautiful, you will hardly convince him by the most cogent arguments. They will be more apt to prove to him your own unloveliness, than the beauty of the object in dispute. Goethe says: "The beautiful is a manifestation of secret laws of Nature, which, but for this appearance, would be forever concealed." But this explains nothing. It is only a confession of the mystery. And because beauty is thus fathomless, thus infinite, it leads the soul into the presence of the infinite One. It is essentially religious.

"The light that never was on sea or land" is reflected from all beautiful objects; and this it is that makes our eyes swim with such happy, healing tears when we are gazing on any picture, or landscape, or living face and form, that has this nameless honor; this it is that lifts our hearts above the treetops and the mountains into more peerless altitudes, causing in us motions of the Spirit, which no prayer-test yet devised would think of contravening, but which have in them the finest essence of prayer.

That beauty is no absolute quality is asserted on the ground that things considered beautiful at one time, and by one people, are not considered so at another time, and by another people. The same argument is used to prove that goodness is a crotchet of our imperfect understanding, not something that inheres in the inmost quality of actions, and characters, and dispositions. We are referred to Paul, who verily thought he did God service when he was slaughtering the early Christians; and to the savages, who strangle their grandmothers to free them from the inevitable discomforts of old age. But the absolute character of right and wrong is not impeached by these examples. What is right, it is for judgment to decide; and judgment is conditioned by our intellectual development. Conscience is judge, not jury. It says that what is right to us must be done, and what is wrong to us must be avoided. And so it vindicates the absolute character of that Goodness whose voice and messenger it is. There is certainly a sliding scale for beauty, as well as for virtue. Our changing fashions are sufficient proof of this. I would not slander human nature or feminine taste so much, as to suppose that all fashions carry with them the effect of beauty. To be "in fashion" is often-times felt to be more important than to be beautifully dressed; and many a woman wears, for "fashion's" sake, a garniture that her sense of beauty aches to think of. Nor does variety of taste disprove the absolute quality of beauty. Beauty is not one, but manifold. Bichat was doubtless right, when he said that, if every one were cast in the same mould, there would be no such thing as beauty. And Darwin is doubtless right in saying that, if all women were copies of the Venus di Medici, we should soon tire of their monotony, and welcome the first aspect of variety. And still, that beauty is a quality relative to our apprehension is self-evident. Oertel's "Rock of Ages," and Boughton's "Flight of the Birds," cannot both be absolutely beautiful, though they both have admirers. The sense of beauty which delights in Oertel's lank and feeble symbolism is a sense inoculated with insanity by the vagaries of a cruciform theology. The sense of beauty that delights in Boughton is a sense which has had living intercourse with Nature, and "brought its eye up to the style and manners of the sky." The Anglo-Saxon associates beauty with a fair complexion; but, in Africa, the blacker the better. We read of an unfortunate man among the Kaffres, who was so fair-complexioned that no girl would marry him. The natives of the Upper Nile knock out the four front teeth to heighten their attractions. Sir Henry Baker was advised by an African queen to improve his wife's appearance in this manner.

Can beauty be so much of a contention, and still be an absolute quality? In the fifteenth century, one Pauline de Viguirere, a virtuous and noble maiden, was regarded by her townspeople as so beautiful that the civil authorities obliged her to appear twice a week upon her balcony; and when she showed herself the crowd was dangerous to life. In the last century, in England, such was the fame of Elizabeth Gunning's beauty, that seven hundred persons sat up all night about the inn where she was staying, to see her get into her post-chaise in the morning. Was there no real difference between these beauties and the beauties of Central Africa? Was the difference all in the beholder's eye? Excuse me from believing anything so atheistic, monstrous, and absurd. As easily could I believe that the self-sacrifice of Jesus was a subjective illusion; that there was no absolute difference between him and the cannibals of Oceanica. As hypocrisy is the homage which vice pays to virtue, so is the savage love of ornament the homage which the savage pays to beauty. But hypocrisy is not virtue, and the deforming tricks of savages have not the warrant of the beautiful. That is reserved for civilized and cultured races, who have put them themselves to school with Nature, who have learned moderation, who have attained to the perception that—

> "Nature is made better by no mean,
> But Nature makes that mean. Over that art
> Which you say adds to Nature is an art
> That Nature makes."

When Jesus said to his disciples, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in Heaven is perfect," he adopted art into the Christian family. For art is an attempt to reproduce, and to perpetuate, the beauty of the outward universe, and the inward life of man. It is the soul's cry for permanence; its hunger for the bread of immortality. No single form of art is competent to the reproduction of the multiformity of Nature and of life. Architecture is called "frozen music," and painting is called "silent poetry," and poetry "speaking painting;" but these figures of speech tend to mislead us. Tyndall could express sound in terms of color, but only to a limited extent; enough, however, to lead us to imagine what a symphony, or rather symchromy, of color we should have if Beethoven's seventh symphony, for example, could be thus translated. But, like sound and color, the different arts are only to a slight degree convertible. They are not duplicates, but complements. Sculpture can only represent the moment; the epic poem may be crammed with years of joy, and pain, and victory. The painter dares not attempt to float off upon the palette the fine gold of the stars; but the poet's verses are a clearer atmosphere, through which they shine with brighter and more spiritual rays. These are the exquisite revenges with which the sister arts repay their special limitations. When all the rest have done their best, music becomes the vehicle of our inexpressible thought, of our emotion deeper than all thought, and bears us on its tides of harmony into the havens of ineffable delight and glory. Music is man's best gift to God of all things beautiful. The landscape is more beautiful than any painting; the human form than any statue; the Alps than any cathedral. But music is a new creation, where only the first hint is taken from the external school of Nature. No bird that flies is master of the simplest melody. Did not God work in us, and all our work and joy revert at last to him, it would seem that here, for once, the creature had "surpassed the creator, the end that began."

In a book called Music and Morals, the author tries to show the mutual relation of these two commanding facts. Of course, he sees that music cannot be didactic, in the sense of formulating rules of conduct. It can do no thinking. It can express no thought. When it is set to certain words, it can by itself suggest the thought embodied in those words; but this suggestion is not expression. Music is the vehicle of emotion, and, as such, the same music is capable of holding many varieties of emotion. But music is also the creator of emotion; and it can create emotion of a great many different kinds,—now dreamy and languid, now vague and restless, now vigorous and inspired, now yearning and aspiring, now deep and calm. The odes with which Tyrtæus fired the Spartan heart to courage and resolve, depended much upon the words for their effect, no doubt; but had they been sung to dreamy, sensuous music, the music would have neutralized the words, and the Spartans would have been enervated by the singing, rather than inspired. Do you suppose the dance-music of Strauss ever awakened a generous emotion in any human breast; that any one ever found it a fit vehicle for any generous emotion that already stirred within him; that it ever made a listener even happy with a noble and invigorating happiness? Do you suppose that, if the German people had been largely fed upon such music for the last half century, they would have been able to roll back the tide of French invasion, and turn it into utter rout, and ruin, and dismay?

And if music, which, alone of all the arts, is limited to the sphere of emotion, which cannot think, which cannot express thought, or directly suggest it,—if this can have such ethical and spiritual significance,—how much more can those arts, which can not only express emotion, but definite ideas and continuous processes of thought! I would not stretch the artist on the Procrustes bed of the particular "calling wherein I am called." I would not make his teaching and his preaching the only measure of his worth. Is it nothing to be rested, nothing to be entertained, nothing to be amused, nothing to have the artist smooth the care-worn wrinkles from our foreheads, and untie for us the knotted convolutions of our brains? Is it nothing that the artist helps us to forget our failures and disgusts; that he strikes the rock whereto our feet have wandered through a desert way, and it gushes with the stream of pure and simple joy? All of these things the artist can do for us, be he painter or poet, sculptor or musician. And, if he could do nothing more, his place in the divine economy would be well assured; he would rule by a diviner right than ever king could claim over the feelings and the lives of men.

But he could do all this and be simply *un*moral—not *im*moral, in the least. Most precious to an anxious, weary, overburdened race of men is even this *un*moral function of the artist. There are plenty of occasions when we do not need preaching, or teaching, but only to be comforted, and sweetened, and consoled, and to have the burden of our care lifted a little from our shoulders, and to have our mouths filled with laughter, and our tongues with singing. And, to those who are forever making beauty the antithesis of use, I would say that here also is use,—a higher and a better use than many of those uses which the average utilitarian makes "the be all and the end all" of his hard philosophy. Because he is virtuous, shall there be no more cakes and ale? Because it is useful to make money, and to get shelter, and clothing, and food, shall there be nothing useful but these things? Be it far from us, such a narrow, joyless, juiceless theory of life! Like the woman in the Bible story, who brought the box of precious ointment, and anointed the feet of Jesus—tired, no doubt, with many leagues of travel over the stony ways,—the artist comes to us weary and travel-stained; comes with the precious ointment of his music or his painting, his sculpture or his poetry, and anoints our feet with it,—and the odor of the ointment fills the house with its refreshing exhalations. "Let her alone; she hath done a good work upon me," said Jesus, when they rebuked the woman for her prodigality. "Let him alone," say we of the artist: "he hath wrought a good work upon us; he hath cleansed the dust of travel from our feet; he hath perfumed all the rooms of our imagination with his music and his thought; he hath reconciled us to our labor and our lot; the planet swims in his pure element with finer motion, and our pulse keeps evener and more rhythmic time to the strong beats of his unfevered heart."

But the moral is the measure of the finest health to which the artist can attain. That is the greatest picture, or statue, or poem, which does not merely rest us from our weariness, does not only quicken in us an ecstasy of pure and simple joy, but which sends us back upon our deepest thought and holiest intuition; which summons us to a more natural and elevated disposition; which rebukes our mean ambitions and our paltry aims, and awakens us to a sense of grand and awful possibility. There are artists who have done this, and who can do it still; who, being dead, yet speak to us; who, still alive, address us from their spiritual thrones with words of loftiest encouragement. Taine may argue, and Swinburne and his crew may rave, against them; but they are seated all too firmly on their thrones to be thus easily dismounted. Their thrones are the affections of humanity, which is so grateful for no other service as for that which broadens its horizon, and makes its moral sense more stern and exigent.

"Blessed are the eyes that see the things that ye see," well may the preacher say, in these last days, to a people, the province of whose æsthetic life has been so suddenly and so generously enlarged. Since the sun has turned copyist for us, men of the most moderate income can afford to grace their walls with better pictures than a king could purchase fifty years ago. With the help of the photographer, we can make our houses temples, and worship may become to us an hourly exercise of inward need and satisfaction. Close to my house, the church bells ever and anon clang out, during the Lenten days, their invitation to devout and earnest thought and meditation. I do not need to go beyond my threshold to obey that invitation. My pictures are my psalm, my prayer, my litany, my glad Te Deum, and my Gloria in Excelcis. I rise from my books, and go about and look at them. I wonder if the liturgy in the church yonder keeps as fresh, and yields new meanings with such prodigality! I go back to my books again, impressed anew with the tenderness and glory of our mortal life.

> "How fair a lot to fill
> Is left to each man still."

The mysteries of Nature and of life, of beauty and of love, of self-devotion and self-sacrifice, have been borne in upon my heart with healing, sanctifying power.

> "Heard are the voices,
> Heard are the sages,
> The worlds and the ages;
> Choose well,—your choice is
> Brief and yet endless.
>
> "Here eyes do regard you
> In eternity's stillness,
> Here is all fullness,
> Ye brave, to reward you:
> Work, and despair not."

Out of the perfection of beauty God hath shined.

Is it not well worth while, think you, to build in all our homes an altar to the beautiful, and to serve it with a tender assiduity from day to day? Shall we talk of uses, and forget the spiritual uses of such joys as art can quicken? Are there not many other things that we can better afford to live without, than without music, and pictures, and poetry, and such high things as these? Are we wise to let the butcher, and the grocer, and the tailor, and the milliner, have always the first chance at our resources, and give only what is left after their raiding to the painter and musician? Are we wise to spend so much money upon merely pretty things—things merely ornamental, things which really interfere with use, as beauty never should—when we might spend the same money for something really beautiful, something that would be a perpetual friend and monitor? It is well for us that the most beautiful things of all are so free to all; that > "There is no price set on the lavish summer,

> And June may be had by the poorest comer."

But the love of art reacts upon the love of Nature, and our books and pictures are gateways which invite us to the boundless hospitality of the sea or sky. And the best of all the beauty man has made has, also, it would seem, the lowest market value. There is a story of "the man who stole a meeting-house;" but if a man could steal the Cathedral of Strasbourg, or Milan, and have it all to himself, it would be a lesser value than the copy of Shakspeare which he could buy for a few dollars. But this market price is superficial and misleading. We can buy Shakspeare's Works for a few dollars—aye, as low as fifty cents; but to enter into Shakspeare's secret,—that is another matter. That costs more, a good deal more, than "the Works," though they were in the first folio edition, and were bound like those old Missals that were heavy with the weight of good and precious stones, as well as with their spiritual contents. That costs time, and study, and patience, and most long and loving fellowship.

The love of beauty, the feeling about art, that marks the present age, is very feeble in comparison with this love and feeling as it existed in the age of Pericles, when the people sat in their great, roofless amphitheatre from sun-rise till sun-set, witnessing dramatic representations; when a hundred years produced three hundred dramatic poets, who produced nearly four thousand plays; when the inhabitants of Athens were outnumbered by the statues of their gods and heroes. Then the love of art was neither a convention nor an affectation. Now it is very often both of these; and so the way is barred where otherwise a true love of the beautiful might enter,—for no true thing can enter into communion with a lie; and all affectation is an acting, living lie. There are people who really enjoy music and pictures; there are people who try to, because their wives do, or their husbands; and there are people who pretend to, because it is respectable and fashionable to do so. This is to grieve the Holy Spirit. It is hardly to be expected, yet, that there should be a highly-developed art-sentiment in America. We have been too busy taming the continent, establishing a government, fighting with slavery. But already there appears to be another day on the horizon. Let every man who would enjoy its brightness put all pretence and falsehood underneath his feet. Let him admire those things which seem beautiful to him; but let him do no violence to his own sentiments, however they may contradict the talk of books and connoisseurs. His very inability to jump with the received opinions about art may be the sign that God has some better things in store for us than we have ever yet achieved.

If only America could cry out to God for beauty, as now she cries to him for wealth; if only Pluto would abdicate, and Apollo would ascend his throne,—things would be very different from what they are. But we have much to learn between that time and now. One may fill his house with pictures by great artists, and have less enjoyment of beauty than the child whose colored picture-books demand the tribute of his unaffected admiration. "Verily, I say unto you, Unless ye be converted and become as little children, ye can in nowise enter the kingdom of" the beautiful. If there is any future for this kingdom in America, its promise must be looked for, not in the vulgar patronage of the devotees of fashion, but in the honest aspirations of the whole community.

In short, we must be a great people before we can produce a beauty that shall have enduring grace and power. There must be a deeper faith, a holier life, among us. Now, everything is transitional. The popular theology, though shorn of all its former dignity and glory, still lags superfluous on the stage. Its speech, that was so strong and epical, grows maudlin and inane. Meanwhile, behind the tottering scenes are heard the sounds of preparation for an ampler demonstration, and, now and then, a voice that shall enliven with its rounded utterance this "passion play" which is to be a spectacle for men and angels. To-day, the great majority are in a state of doubt or half-belief. From such a state can come no glorious achievement. The great ages always have been, and always must be, ages of faith. But the faith of the future cannot be the faith of the past, resuscitated by the help of tepid baths of sentiment, or apostolical manipulation. It must be a new faith in God, in man, in the life which now is, in character, in labor and sincerity. And when this faith arrives, and is the order of the day, there will be a corresponding art, the form of which no man can prophesy.

Till then, and always, the supreme beauty is that of the sincere and loving soul. Where this is present, it will light up any face, behind which it resides, with a bewitching splendor. It could make the puffy face of Socrates appear to the young men of Athens more beautiful than their carved Apollos, or their living Theodotas. It could make Sidney's face, for all its want of comeliness, the resting place of the Eternal. This is the perfection of beauty, and God shines out of it forever. "Fear God," says Emerson, "and where you go men shall think they walk in hallowed cathedrals."

> "Largess, from seven-fold heavens, I pray descend
> On all who toil for beauty! Never feet
> Grow weary, that have done her bidding sweet
> About the careless world! For she is friend
> And darling of the universe; and day by day
> She comes and goes, but never dies,
> So precious is she in the eternal eyes.
> Oh, dost thou scorn her seeing, what fine way
> She doth avenge! For heaven, because of her,
> Shall one day find thee fitter. How old hours
> Of star-rapt night about thy heart had curled—
> And thou hadst felt the morning's golden stir,
> And the appealing loveliness of flowers,
> Yea all the saving beauty of the world!"

THE TOMBS OF THEBES.

(Extracts from a Letter of Rev. J. E. Carpenter to the "Unitarian Herald," England.)

We are now on our return voyage, after having spent a week full of the deepest interest at Thebes; and I will ask you to communicate, to any friends who may care to hear, some of the impressions which sank so profoundly into our minds at that wonderful spot. We reached Thebes on the sixteenth day after leaving Cairo. Our voyage was a tolerably speedy one; and we hastened past various places of interest that we might take advantage of favorable winds. They bore us swiftly along, through this great valley, past innumerable traces of ancient cities; past the long ranges of cliffs that rise east and west, all caverned with the grottoes of the dead; past plains of wheat and barley, clover and beans, dotted with villages that make the homes of the living, up to the ruins of the hundred-gated Thebes. Nothing remains of the once mighty city but its temples and palaces, and, above all, its tombs. Covering with its houses and shops, its marts of trade, its villas and gardens, the whole width of the valley, on either side of the river, there is nothing now but its sacred edifices to mark where it once stood. It was strange to look upon this smiling plain, and think that here had been the seat of a monarchy which, when Moses was born, was more venerable than our own is now. Here, when he was a young man, Rameses the Great built his splendid palace temple, and over the library of it inscribed the famous motto, "The medicine of the mind." Here, for a thousand years, they have kept an annual record of the rising of the Nile, and here they gathered the memorials of their law and history, which they could carry back for more than a millennium! What power they possessed over mechanical difficulties may be imagined when one looks at their great colossi; there is the statue of the great conqueror in the court adjoining, which was hewn out of one solid block of granite, and brought from quarries more than a hundred and fifty miles away. It is upwards of fifty feet in height; it is nearly nine hundred tons in weight! What were their architectural conceptions may be gathered in the great hall at Karnak, on the other side of the river, into which you might put bodily an English cathedral, and of which the smallest among its hundred columns is twenty-eight feet round. The ruins of this stupendous edifice and its associated buildings are only embraced within a circuit of a mile and a half; the royal street, at the end of which stood one of its principal entrances, was nearly two miles long, and was bordered by sphinxes on either hand, four feet apart all the way along. The walls of these great temples are covered with sculptured history: the wars of the conqueror, his triumphs, and his religion, are presented in acres of carving. There are sea-fights and sieges, coronations and domestic scenes, in the midst of offerings to the various deities that were but the personified attributes of the One Supreme. It is an oppressive thought in the midst of all this grandeur, that the lives of thousands, and the labor of thousands more, were its heavy price. No one can look at the rows of captives following the victorious king without thinking that it was their hapless fate which made the erection of these enormous structures possible. The two great colossi which stand upon the plain beyond are memorials of a like kind; touching as they now are in their solitary grandeur, they too are memorials of past oppression; for how could these gigantic figures, nearly sixty feet high, have been set up on their massive thrones but by the forced toil of ten thousand slaves. Nevertheless, in a valley so wonderfully productive as this, life was simple and easily sustained. There seems now to be no destitution, and there was doubtless none then. A country which produces three crops in a year might support a nation which could raise an army of seven hundred thousand men, and yet have enough corn left to serve as the granary of the world. The pictures of Egyptian social life, so far as it can be traced, are not gloomy or severe. A monarchy which lasted more than two thousand years was clearly based on something more than force; it was rooted deeply in law and order, and its moral standard was assuredly high for the time at which it existed. There are not, indeed, any traces of popular government, as we understand it; but the final appeal to the people, which hung over every king, invested them with some amount of restraining power, at any rate, and tended to ameliorate what might otherwise have proved a too rigid despotism. After his death, before he could be buried, the deceased king was obliged, like the humblest citizen, to undergo that judgment which was but the type and preliminary of a more awful trial elsewhere. There still remain traces of the lake across which there passed the funeral train to the judges, who awaited it upon the further shore. Before this tribunal whoever would might make his charge. If his accusation was substantiated, the body was turned back, and was not permitted to be laid in the tomb. There are still to be seen in the valley of the tombs of the kings catacombs from which the royal name has been carefully erased. The monarch was not allowed to rest among the noble dead; he had been proved unworthy, and was dismissed to wander an unburied ghost, elsewhere.

What immense importance was attached to the next life, and how deep and firm the faith in it then was, may be seen from the sculptures which everywhere adorn the tombs at Thebes, as well as gathered from the venerable book of the dead. Among the mountains that rise above the plain there are silent valleys, where for three thousand years the rich and poor have slept side by side. Royalty, indeed, claimed its sepulchres apart; but in the spirit world, according to the ancient doctrine, all were noble, and as such their remains might rest together, whatever diversities of lot had sundered them in life. I know nothing more wonderful than this city of the dead. Hollowed in the hills are porticos and passages, corridors and courts, some of them longer than York Minster. There are vaulted halls, there are pillared chambers, fit rather for a palace than a tomb. The walls are covered with painted sculpture; the ceiling is decorated with patterns we should call Greek, but that they are a thousand years older than Pericles and Phidias. Over the doorway is an image of the setting sun; so does the just man sink to the underworld. By its side is the scarabœus, symbol of the resurrection, to denote that death is but the entry on to larger, higher, life. Beyond, is the hawk with outspread wings, representative of the aspiring soul, clasping the rings, emblems of immortality, in its claws. Within the door, or further down the passage, sit on either side Justice and Truth. None can pass them who have not satisfied the dreaded judges of the grave. Upon the walls are mysterious pictures, illustrative of Egyptian religion, and in particular of their ideas of the origin of things. There are the boats of Kneph, the creative spirit, who, it is said, "moved on the face of the waters," and there are the land and water separating. There is the symbol of Phthah, the active energy of the Supreme, who thus with mind and will mingles in every change of earth or heaven. Then come representations of the scenes through which the deceased will pass. Before he can arrive at his final goal, he must undergo all manner of strange trials. Creatures of the most terrible aspect beset him; happy is he if with pure heart he can repel or baffle their attack. The fate of the lost is not hard to discern. They are depicted in various ways; sometimes they are head downwards, as befits those whose lives have not been upright. Sometimes they are black, for they inhabit regions where the sun never shines. Sometimes they are bound, and, up to their necks in water, hold out helpless hands for succor that never comes; or, again, they are in cavities of flame; or, once more, fastened to the stake, the headsman of the underworld decapitates them. Those who were successful in avoiding these perils entered the hall of the Two Truths. There they were presented before the forty-two assessors, who each received the denial of the deceased with respect to some particular sin. To these assessors the soul made his solemn confession: "O ye lords of truth, let me know ye; I have brought ye truth. Rub ye away my faults. I have not privily done evil against mankind; I have not afflicted persons or men. I have not told falsehoods in the tribunal of truth. I have not made the laboring man do more than his task daily. I have not calumniated the slave to his master. I have not murdered. I have not falsified measures. I have not been idle. I have not stolen. I have not boasted. I have not played the hypocrite. I have not made others to weep. I have not been inattentive to the words of truth, etc." When this was done, the soul was brought before Osiris, the supreme judge of all the living and the dead. Osiris was the Goodness of the Unnamed. In human form he went about the world, doing good to men. In conflict with the power of evil he was for a time overcome; but his death was only the preliminary to a more glorious resurrection, after which he was made judge of the Underworld, while he still continued to scatter blessings over this. He was known as the "Manifestor of Grace," the "Revealer of Truth;" he was said, in the ancient language, to be "full of grace and truth." The spirit dead lived only through their communion with him; as such, they to some extent shared his nature, and bore his name. And all this represents a doctrine incalculably old, for the book which contains it was becoming unintelligible four thousand years ago. One of the most striking pictures that we saw represented this judgment of the soul. On the throne of Amenti (i.e., the underworld) sat Osiris; his mitred head is adorned with the symbols of justice and truth, which repose also in the tablet on his breast. In front of him stands Thoth, the secretary of the gods, tablet in hand, to register the decision; and at his feet, on a stool, is the mysterious dog that guards the entrance to Amenti. The soul is introduced by the goddesses of Justice and of Truth (the latter is touchingly said to have been the daughter of light); he advances to the fatal balance; in one scale is a clay vessel, symbolic of the frailty of life, in the other is the emblem of justice. Alas, his good deeds are too few; he is convicted of gluttony, and two apes drive him off, transformed into a pig, to perform in this course of three thousand years his "orbit of necessity," after which he may present himself again.

Such were some of the pictures that we saw in these marvellous tombs; and such, in brief, were the ideas which they conveyed. Not all the decorations, however, were of this sacred character. By some strange fancy, the mummied dead were surrounded by representations of the scenes and objects they had delighted in whilst alive. One of the tombs we visited contained a number of chambers, on the walls of which were portrayed the furniture and decorations of the palace,—scenes from the kitchen and the farm, from the armory and the ship. There were couches and chairs inlaid with ebony or ivory, and covered with tissue of gold or silver; there were vases of flowers, and leopard-skin rugs; there were ploughing, sowing, and reaping; cabinet making, with its connected arts; the carving of a colossus, glass blowing, hunting and fishing, goldsmith's work, social pictures of festive scenes,—are all among the subjects selected by which to adorn the tombs. Their preparation must have occupied many years. Not the least interesting parts of some of the royal sepulchres were the unfinished, to which their occupant was brought ere they were complete. In some the walls were merely rough hewn, and made ready for the plaster on which the design was drawn. Elsewhere the draughtsman had been there with his red pencil, and the master had come and corrected in black his faulty outlines. And then come the tidings that the royal owner is dead; and when once he is laid in his "everlasting habitation" he must not be disturbed by the intrusion of the painter, or the noise of the sculptor's chisel. There is something inexpressibly affecting in the care thus bestowed upon the dead. Strange is it, too, by the side of conceptions so spiritual as those which seem to underlie the symbolism by which they were expressed. Doubtless, the vast proportion of the people knew little of the profound ideas which were wrapped up in the Egyptian system. But at least the faith of immortality was strong with them, however incomprehensible their sublime monotheism may have been to the masses. How Moses could have been brought up in the midst of it without sharing it, or how, sharing it, he could refrain from communicating it to his countrymen, is one of the historical difficulties which must remain forever unsolved. But, looking at the great works which so early distinguished the Egyptians—their canals, their pyramids, their colossal statues, their temples, which reveal so much command of material wealth and resource; looking at their monarchy which lasted two millenniums and a half, and was so rooted in the hearts of the people that the sovereign might be away in foreign lands nine years, and come back and find everything the same; looking at their works of art and the remains of their once noble literature,—one must admit that they were the most wonderful people of antiquity, and laid deep and strong the foundations of our modern civilization. Only imagine what it would be, if Greece could have been blotted out of history. But Athens was said to have been an Egyptian colony; and the wisest of her children were content to learn from the priests of Sais and of On.

We left Thebes with regret,—who, indeed, could part from such memorials of the past without a sigh? The rising Nile now floods the temples which three thousand years ago stood above its reach; the two colossi in the plain are slowly being surrounded by its mud. Seven feet thick it has accumulated already; how long off is the day when wheat will grow on the top of the great obelisk at Karnak, and the hall of columns lie beneath the beans! The old contest is continually going on between the river and the desert; but it is the river that gains ground, and slowly extends the blessings of its soil upon the sand that bounds the plain on either hand. Unique in its natural features, it was not surprising that Egypt should also enjoy a singular eminence for its social system. If it was rigid, so were the rocks that bound the valley; if its lines of demarcation between class and class were strongly marked, so were those which parted the desert and the meadow. How much influence the conformation and the climate of the country exerted on the gradual development of Egyptian civilization, it is impossible now to trace with minuteness. But, at any rate, it was not inconsiderable, and it appears in their architecture and their art, as well as in their government and their religion.

MACMILLAN & Co. have published a new and enlarged edition of Dr. Maudsley's Body and Mind; a work of special interest and value, as presenting the latest results of physiological and psychological investigations. The new volume contains Dr. Maudsley's lecture on "Conscience and its Organization," and essays on "Hamlet" and "Swedenborg." The former presents novel views, from which most ethical writers will dissent. But the papers on Hamlet and Swedenborg deserve careful reading for their learned and able handling of the nice and profound questions involved, and for the light of medical and psychological science they throw back over characters which have been microscopically, but are still variously, explained. He thinks the insanity that Hamlet exhibits is not of a simple character. There is actual feigning, as he himself confesses; but there is beneath it all a real melancholic mood of mind, a genuine morbid subjectivity. Even in his feigned exhibitions of madness there are sincere outbreaks of this excitable disposition. When he would feign, he is so genuinely moved that he falls out of his character, and speaks with such sincerity and significance that the king rightly suspects the plot. He spoils the part he should play, because he is too much interested in the events, and cannot lay aside his personality. In many important respects, Dr. Maudsley thinks Hamlet represents Shakspeare's own thoughts and feelings. He finds that poetic justice does not get done on earth, and he does not degrade his art to represent it. He thinks that all Swedenborg's revelations together do not show so much intellectual power as one of Shakspeare's great dramas, and the heaven with which he professes to have been so familiar does not compare, in point of vividness and ideal representation, with Dante's hell. One was the creation of a mind under hallucination, the other of a mind in a state of health, working according to law. But because a man's mind is unsound all that he says is not necessarily folly. It is a vulgar and mischievous error to suppose that a person who speaks rationally and behaves with propriety cannot be mad, as it is also to suppose madmen necessarily incapable of rational intellectual exertion.—Golden Age.

BIBLE-READINGS.

GOD AS CREATOR, PERVADER, ALL-SUSTAINER.

(1.)

There is an Infinite Being which existed before heaven and earth.
How calm it is! How free!
It lives alone. It changeth not. It moveth everywhere but never suffers.
We may look on it as the Mother of the Universe.

I,—I know not its name.
To give it a title, I call it the Way.
When I try to give it a name, I call it Great.
After calling it Great, I call it Fugitive.
After calling it Fugitive, I call it Distant.
After calling it Distant, I say, It comes back to me.

The reason which can be reasoned is not the Eternal Reason.
The name which can be named is not the Eternal Name.
Would you go before it, you cannot see its face:
Would you go behind it, you cannot see its back.
If you look at it, there is nothing to fill the eye:
If you listen to it, there is nothing to fill the ear:
But if you use it, it is inexhaustible!
For Great Reason is all-pervading. It can be on the right hand, and at the same time on the left. It may be named with the greatest: it may be named with the smallest.
In love it nourisheth all things. All wait upon it for life, and it refuseth none. All things return home to it, but it does not lord it over them.
This Spirit I call the Abyss-Mother.
—Lao-Tsze.

(2.)

Know that that which does not see by the eye, but by which the eyes see, is Brahma.
Know that that which does not hear by the ear, but by which the ears hear, is Brahma.
Know that that which does not breathe by breath, but by which the breath is breathed, is Brahma.
By him who thinks that Brahma is not comprehended, by him he is comprehended. He who thinks Brahma is comprehended,—he does not know him.
—The Talavakara Upanishad.

(3.)

Varuna, the Lord of these worlds, sees as if he were near.
If a man stands, or walks, or rides, if he goes to lie down or get up,—what two people sitting together whisper,—King Varuna knows it; he is there as a third.
The two seas (sky and ocean) are the loins of Varuna: he is also contained in this small drop of water.
He who should flee far beyond the sky, even he would not be rid of Varuna the king. And he has counted the twinklings of our eyes.
—Atharva-Veda. (cf. Ps. cxxxix.)

(4.)

I ask thee, tell me the truth, O Ahura! Who was, from the beginning, the Father of the pure creature? Who has made a path for the sun and the stars? Who but thou makes the moon to wax and to wane?
I ask thee, tell me the truth, O Ahura! Who holds the earth and the clouds that they do not fall? Who holds the sea and the trees? Who has given swiftness to the wind and the clouds? Who is the Creator of the good spirit?
I ask thee, tell me the truth, O Ahura! Who has made the kindly light and the darkness? Who has made the kindly sleep and the awaking? Who has made the mornings, the noons, and the nights? Who has made him who ponders on the measure of the laws?
—Zendavesta (cf. Job xxxvii–xxxviii, Is. xl; Ps. civ.)

(5.)

I am that which has been, which is, which will be: and no one yet has lifted the veil that covers me.
—Egyptian.

(6.)

When they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?
And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: And he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.
Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations.
Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.
Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands.
They shall perish, but thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed:
But thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end.
Canst thou, by searching, find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?
It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?
Behold, I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him:
On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him:
But he knoweth the way that I take.
—Old Testament.

(7.)
Full of Zeus are all the streets, all the markets of men; full of him is the sea and the harbors,—and we also are his offspring.
—Aratus. (cf. Acts xvii–28.)

(8.)
Has Deity any throne besides earth, sea, air, heavens, and virtue? Why do we seek the gods beyond? Jupiter is all you see, is all you have moved.
—Lucau.

(9.)
Jupiter, the guardian and ruler of the universe, the soul and spirit, the Lord and Master of this earthly sphere, the cause of causes, upon whom all things hang; whose wisdom oversees the world, that it may move uncontrolled in its course; from whom all things proceed, by whose spirit we live, who comprises all we see.
—Seneca.

(10.)
This motionless cause of motion is a necessary being; and, by virtue of such necessity, is the all-perfect being. This all-pervading principle penetrates heaven and all Nature. It possesses eternal, perfect happiness, and its happiness is in action. The mood of the divine existence is essential energy, and as such it is a life most excellent, blessed, everlasting. It is thought thinking itself, the activity of pure intelligence,—such is the perfect, eternal life of God. The primal cause of change, this absolute perfection, moves the world by the universal desire for the absolute good; by the attraction exercised upon it by the eternal mind.
—Aristotle.

(11.)
The paths to God are more in number than the breathings of created beings. Whatever road I take joins the highway that leads to thee.
Ride thou on for eternity through the empyrean, mounted on thy ideal,—thou shalt not stride beyond his threshold! Soar thou beyond all limit to the roof of the universe, thou shalt behold one tile of his dwelling,—one tile, no more.
Yet God hath made all atoms in space mirrors, and printeth each one with his perfect face.
Would'st know where I found the Supreme? One step beyond myself. Behind the veil of self shines unseen the beauty of the Loved One.
Which is the great name of God? Communicate to me his least name, and I will return to thee his greatest. All nations and languages repeat the name of God; even infancy lisps it, Allah, Taugarí, Yezdáu, Elohim. Yet cannot his praise be duly expressed by mortal till the dumb man shall be eloquent, and stocks and stones find voice; till the silent universe rejoices in language —Mediæval Persian Poets.

(12.)
Him who dare name
And yet proclaim—
"Yes,—I believe"?
Who that can feel
His heart can steel
To say—"I disbelieve"?
The All-Embracer,
All-Sustainer,
Doth he not embrace, sustain,
Thee, me, Himself?
Lifts not the Heaven his dome above?
Doth not the firm-set earth beneath us lie?
And, beaming tenderly with looks of love,
Climb not the everlasting stars on high?
Are we not gazing in each other's eyes?
Nature's impenetrable agencies,
Are they not thronging on thy heart and brain,
Viewless, or visible, to mortal ken,
Around thee weaving their mysterious reign?
Fill thence thy heart, how large soe'er it be,—
And in the feeling, when thou art wholly blest,
Then call it what thou wilt,—Bliss! Heart! Love! God!
I have no name for it,—'tis feeling all.
Name is but sound and smoke
Shrouding the glow of Heaven.
—Goethe.

(13.)
I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of men:
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.
—Wordsworth.

(14.)
The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills, and the plains—
Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns?

Is not the Vision He? though He be not that which He seems?
Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams?

Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb,
Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him?
Dark is the world to thee: thyself art the reason why;
For is he not all but thou, that hast power to feel "I am I!"

Glory about thee, without thee: and thou fulfillest thy doom,
Making Him broken gleams, and a stifled splendor and gloom.

Speak to Him thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet—
Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

God is law, say the wise, O Soul, and let us rejoice,
For if He thunder by law, the thunder is yet His voice.

Law is God, say some: no God at all, says the fool;
For all we have power to see is a straight staff bent in a pool;

And the ear of man cannot hear, and the eye of man cannot see;
But if we could see and hear, this Vision—were it not He?
—Alfred Tennyson.

GERMAN NOTIONS IN REGARD TO TEMPERANCE AND THE SABBATH.

Mohammed was the first prohibitionist. The recent attempt to take a text from the Koran, and force it into the creed of Christendom, is regarded by our German citizens as a blunder from the sanitary point of view, and as tyrannical from that of politics. They feel no call to become Mohammedans; and why should they? Beer, cider, ale, and wine, are positively healthful, if pure and not heavy. That is simply a settled fact, that ought no longer to be in dispute. Wine, even the lightest, should be taken only at table, or with food, never upon an empty stomach; beer or ale is wholesome also as a beverage to quench thirst, strengthening to the stomach, soothing to the nerves, and yet a tonic. It should never be drunk standing and at a gulp; one should sit and sip it as he would a cup of coffee. Taken thus, these light, cool, invigorating drinks are out of all question healthful, and the substitution of them among the Americans for some part of that ocean of hot tea and coffee which the nation imbibes, would do much to prevent indigestion, and thereby to prevent that morbid craving of the stomach for which so many seek a relief in fiery stimulants. The digestion of these Germans is amazing. They eat often at late hours, and of food that would defy all the powers of an American stomach; yet dyspepsia is almost an unknown evil. The secret is an open one for him who has an open eye. The same means, again, which invigorates their health, making them from age to age heirs of strong stomachs and steady nerves, is worth more as a preventive of drunkenness than any possible prohibitory law would be, though there were forty thousand constables to a State, a Dr. Miner in every pulpit, and a Wendell Phillips on every platform. The Germans in America, then, see a systematic attempt to deprive them by legal violence of what is at once a wholesome food, a customary enjoyment, and a safeguard against drunkenness; and if they think such action oppressive, who could expect them to think otherwise?

Secondly, the Germans in America complain that they are compelled by law to observe the Sunday in the American way. They have their doctrine of the day, which is that of the Christian Church in their native country; they land upon our shores, find a church with a different doctrine, and find, moreover, that they are compelled to conform to it by the civil law. Assume, now, that the American doctrine is theologically the right one; that the Sunday is in our sense holy time; that its observance as such is matter of religious duty; and that those who fail at this point commit a sin, for which they will surely be punished hereafter,—is it, however, the business of the State to enforce religious duties as such? Is it the business of the State to decide between different theological conceptions, espouse one as against another, and bring the strong arm of the law to its support? Here is a distinction between what is right as theological doctrine, and what is right as an exercise of civil authority, which our people too commonly overlook. So long as the Germans rest from labor, do not disturb the civil order, do nothing but what is innocent from the purely civil point of view, the Commonwealth should hold them as citizens guiltless, however heretical otherwise their conception and use of the day may be. Undoubtedly our laws go further, and contemplate the legal enforcement of the Sunday as a religious day. The German citizens cannot understand this. What they have been taught from youth up, and by Christian teachers, to regard as innocent before God and man, is found to be prohibited by law, and prohibited beyond dispute on theological grounds; and this, too, in the very country they have come to expecting to find a perfect separation of Church and State. They are offended, irritated,—quite without grounds, shall we say?—D. A. Wasson's Stuttgart Correspondence to the "Boston Daily Advertiser."

AT SHREWSBURY, ENGLAND, a poor old man, when dying, made use of an extraordinary figure of speech to express his gratitude to a Mr. Polehampton, the clergyman who attended him: "Ah! sir, I'm going first, but we shall meet again; and won't I jump up and flap my old wings when I see you a coming through them chrystial gates!" He had the Orthodox expectation, described by Coleridge, of becoming "a sort of celestial poultry."

Poetry.

"THE FIVE KNAVES."

AN ORIENTAL TALE. BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Once on a time, in Indostan,
A thief conceived a cunning plan
(So potent is the voice of Hope)
To save his throttle from the rope,
Though now the day was drawing nigh
When he by law was doomed to die.
He bade the jailer tell the King
He fain would show a wondrous thing—
A precious secret fairly worth
The ear of any prince on earth.
And now the culprit, being led
Into the royal presence, said:
"This golden coin which here you see,
If planted, will become a tree
Whose fruit—increased a hundred fold—
Will be, like this, the purest gold.
I pray your majesty to try
If this be true before I die."
With this the King and courtiers went
Into the garden with intent
To plant the curious coin of gold.
But now, when all was ready, "Hold!"
Exclaimed the thief, "this hand of mind
Would surely spoil our whole design;
The hand that plants the gold must be (Else all is naught) entirely free
From stain of fraud; and so I pray
Your gracious majesty will lay
The seed in earth." "Yes—no—in sooth,"
The King replied, "for in my youth
I pilfered from my sire; some stain,
For all my sorrow, may remain.
My good prime minister is here;
His hand, no doubt, is wholly clear
Of any taint." "Nay," he replied,
"That's more than I can well decide;
As tax-receiver—now—I may
Have kept a trifle. So I pray
To be excused, for prudence' sake;
And let our commissary take
The coin in hand. Sure that were best,
For he, no doubt, can stand the test."
"Faith," said the commissary, "I
Would rather not. I can't deny
My good intent; but since I pay
Large sums of money every day
For soldiers, sailors, and a herd
Of spies—I wouldn't give my word
I have not kept a small amount
Not entered in my book account.
Since then an error—e'en the least—
Would spoil the charm, pray let the priest
Proceed to plant the coin of gold."
"Nay, that I fear would be o'er bold," Replied his reverence; "I deal
In tithes and sacrificial dues;
And so I beg you will excuse
My sharing in a work like this,
Where nothing must be done amiss."
"Then," said the thief, "since no man here,
As we have learned, is wholly clear
Of knavish tricks, I ask you whether
We should not all be hung together?"
The monarch, laughing, made reply:
"Why, yes, if every rogue must die!
Well, since we are five knaves confessed,
I pardon you, and spare the rest!"

NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS TO INDEX STOCK.

Mrs. F. W. Christern,	New York City,	One	share,	$100
Richard B. Westbrook,	Sonman, Pa.	"	"	100
R. C. Spencer,	Milwaukee, Wis.	Two	"	200
R. W. Howes,	Boston, Mass.	One	"	100
Chas. W. Story,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
E. W. Meddaugh,	Detroit, Mich.	Five	"	500
Jacob Hoffner,	Cumminsville, O.	One	"	100
John Weiss,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
W. C. Russel,	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	"	100
A. W. Leggett,	Detroit, Mich.	"	"	100
B. F. Dyer,	Boston, Mass.	"	"	100
James Purinton,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
F. A. Nichols,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
J. S. Palmer,	Portland, Me.	"	"	100
Robt. Ormiston,	Brooklyn, N.Y.	"	"	100
Mrs. A. L. Richmond,	Lowell, Mass.	"	"	100
Mrs. Benj. Ireson,	Lynn, Mass.	"	"	100
J. E. Oliver,	Ithaca, N.Y.	"	"	100
E. H. Aldrich,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
Geo. L. Clark,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100
W. M. Jackson,	Providence, R.I.	Two	"	200
Mrs. E. B. Chase,	Valley Falls, R.I.	"	"	100
L. F. Garvin,	Lonsdale, R.I.	One	"	100
James Damon,	Ipswich, Mass.	"	"	100
Joseph A. Barker,	Providence, R.I.	"	"	100

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 25.

David Tenney, $3; J. A. J. Wilcox, $3; J. W. Scott, $1.50; Wm. Rotch, $3; Geo. Allen, $3; T. Lees, $1.05; J. Lamborn, $3; F. H. Buchanan, $1; R. D. Israel, $3.20; Hugo Leonhard, $3; J. H. Howland, $3; B. F. Underwood, $3; K. W. Frazer, $3; C. H. Chace, $1.50; W. C. Kelly, $1; Geo. Plummer, $1.50; M. O'Connell, $1; W. A. Lombard, $3; J. G. Dodge, $1; John Bentley, $3; A. A. Bell, $4; R. Humphrey, $1.50; R. G. Fell, 50 cts.; Lizzie Martin, 50 cts.; J. E. Laundon, $5; Joseph E. Peck, $1.25; A. Bate, $22; Geo. Swasey, 75 cts.; H. H. Chase, 20 cts.; A. K. Loring, 40 cts.; G. H. Foster, $1.30.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY
BY
THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, ... Editor.
Abram Walter Stevens, ... Associate Editor.
Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, William J. Potter, Richard P. Hallowell, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey (England), Prof. Francis W. Newman (England), Rev. Moncure D. Conway (England), Editorial Contributors.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

BOSTON, JULY 30, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

PARAGRAPHS.

BY W. J. P.

THE QUESTION of allowing entire liberty of worship is agitated in Chili. A large number of members of the Chilian Congress have signed a motion for that object. Like other South American States, Chili is not much more than nominally a republic; else it would have found out before now that in a republic there can be no State-religion.

IT IS REPORTED that the aggregate of "religious charities" in England last year amounted to more than $8,000,000 in gold. It would be well if the statistics would also tell us what proportion of this sum had been given for purely humane and philanthropic objects, and what for ecclesiastical propagandism. It is becoming a question whether the bestowing of money to build up any form of sectarianism can rightly be reckoned as a charity.

DEAN STANLEY'S latest heresy is his saying at the Bunyan Festival in England, that "the Nonconformists have a splendid literature of their own, and we must remember that literature may be a channel of grace no less spiritual than sacraments or doctrines, chapels or churches." Good literature is indeed the good news of this age to thousands of souls—the only gospel that reaches them. Some of it bears the stamp of an inspiration genuinely divine, and will go into the Bible of coming ages. And that a dean should come so near saying this, shows that this literature is doing its good work in the church, too.

BISHOP CUMMINS has at length been formally deposed from the ministry of the Episcopal Church, by an official council of bishops; but, having once had the sacred hands laid upon him, he will still claim the office of bishop in his Reformed Church. One of the Episcopal churches of Louisville, Ky., has withdrawn from its old fellowship, and given its adhesion to the Reform movement. But the reform does not appear to have as yet much strength. It is neither broad nor deep enough. To change a few phrases in the Service-Book is not a reformation that can incite a large, popular following, nor does it meet the problems that demand the attention of scholars.

AN EVANGELICAL Almanac has been published, under the auspices of Dr. Cullis and his "Work of Faith," which contains some passage of Scripture for each day in the year. Dr. Cullis recommends the book to the public by citing the following illustration of its usefulness:—

"A beloved brother was troubled about a payment demanded of him, it being much larger than he expected, and repeated calls had somewhat embarrassed him. He prayed about it, and then remembered that he had a little stock in a machine, which he might perhaps sell for about what he gave for it. He committed it all to God, and then taking up the little Almanac, read: 'I have heard thy prayer.' He went on his way rejoicing, and at his first trial sold the stock for three times what he gave for it."

Conversions of sinful debtors to what Dr. Cullis calls gospel faith may be expected in large numbers, if it can be utilized by Yankee shrewdness in this way.

REV. JAMES MARTINEAU, who for thirty-three years has been President of Manchester New College, London, has resigned that position. A year ago he gave up the pastorate of his chapel in London; and it is now announced that he will devote his remaining years to the preparation of his writings for publication. Mr. Martineau has been in some respects the Channing of English Unitarianism, though his views approach very nearly those of Theodore Parker. He has been, however, less of a religious propagandist than either Channing or Parker. His temperament and studies have rather characterized him as a religious philosopher. And as one of the most liberal, able, and cultivated defenders of the intuitional philosophy as applied to religion, all theological scholars must hail the announcement of his collected writings with satisfaction. One of his latest pieces of work is an elaborate article, just published in the August number of Old and New, against the common traditional opinion that the Fourth Gospel is the production of the disciple John. It is a lucid and strong array of the arguments which show, in our opinion conclusively, that this remarkable book appeared in the second century, and is the bigoraphy of an ideal rather than an actual personage.

DR. EWALD, the eminent German scholar, and author of the History of Israel, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for an alleged libel on Prince Bismarck, in comparing him, in a magazine article, to Frederick II. and Napoleon III. The learned doctor, as a Hanoverian, has probably never cordially accepted the reconstruction of Germany under the leadership of Prussia; but it is more than doubtful whether German unity more than German freedom is to be permanently helped by such forcible repression of free speech. Another Catholic clergyman, too, has been imprisoned in Prussia for obeying his Church rather than his government. In a contest between Catholicism and Protestantism, every lover of free thought would naturally side with the latter; yet when the contest goes so far that Catholics are sent to prison for conscience' sake, there is danger of awakening a reactionary sympathy for them as representing a persecuted cause. If Bismarck is great and far-seeing in his sagacity, he will bring this contest as soon as possible where it will be seen to be a conflict, not between two kinds of ecclesiastic authority, but between ecclesiastical repression of individual liberty as represented by the Roman Catholic Church on the one side, and the State standing for freedom of thought and conscience on the other.

THE Liberal Christian has begun editorially to prepare its readers for the next National Conference of Unitarians, to be held at Saratoga in September. Although it has latterly taken decided ground against the action of the Unitarian Association in the "Year-Book controversy," yet it deprecates any attempt to reopen that controversy at the Conference; and having heard a rumor that a proposition might be made for dropping the objectionable theological phrases from the preamble to the constitution of the Conference, and so getting rid of that long controversy, it puts itself beforehand into an attitude of energetic resistance to any such attempt. It says: "The historical party in our denomination have made the last sacrifices to the intuitionalists," and proposes as the only practical way of settling the denominational differences in the Conference this rather novel plan: that those who object to the theology of the preamble, yet "know that they sympathize fully with the spirit and general purposes of the Unitarian body," shall attend the Conference not as delegates but as friends, and perhaps be permitted, within certain defined limits, to take part in its proceedings—"as Jews and Catholic priests might be." The "practical" objection to this ingenious plan will probably be, that it is a "practical way" of putting those who attend simply in the capacity of "friends" outside of "the Unitarian body" in the category of another denomination.

A WRITER in the July number of the Unitarian Review and Religious Magazine, Mr. J. E. Walton, in an article on "Spiritual Gifts," takes up again with great earnestness and a good deal of vigor the question of the Prayer-Test as, not first raised, but introduced to the public, by Prof. Tyndall. Mr. Walton thinks that the Christian Church has shown great weakness and timidity by not accepting this challenge from science. He believes that the Bible is explicit on the subject, distinctly declaring that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick," giving numerous illustrations of such healing-power, and setting no limit in time for the cessation of the power; and he thinks that the proposed test was substantially, though perhaps not in form, a perfectly legitimate one. His theory, which has a Swedenborgian flavor, is that the divine forces act through the human mental organism, and that genuine prayer so changes the conditions of this organism that the divine energy can flow into it and work through it more freely. The Church, he says, has lost ground by giving up its faith in, and its practice of, this kind of miracle; and since the form of Prof. Tyndall's test, the selection of one ward at some hospital for the prayer-remedy, may be objectionable because of the difficulty of thus making a real application of it, he proposes as a fairer, and, it must be admitted, a severer form of test,—the establishment of a Prayer-Hospital for patients who have been pronounced by competent medical authority to be incurable by the ordinary medical treatment. He would have this hospital put under the charge of persons who believe in the prayer-cure, and no other remedy should be permitted; then, if in such circumstances the patients should get well, as he believes, under a perfect fulfilment of the conditions, they would, to prayer must the credit be given. He admits that where science can cure, it may be the divine method; but man's extremity is God's opportunity: so, he says, where science confesses its impotence there let prayer be tried. This does seem a better test than that endorsed by Prof. Tyndall. But even if it should succeed, the question might arise, how much physical magnetism and the power of the patient's will had to do with the cure; for that these forces operate medicinally is a well-attested fact. Still, if the prayer-remedy can cure well-authenticated cases of cancer, and consumption, and other diseases declared medically incurable by a board of scientific physicians, the result (aside from its immediate humaneness) would furnish new and most interesting facts for physiological and psychological science to deal with, even though possible mental conditions of the patient might vitiate the experiment as a test of the efficacy of prayer. Why should not the Christian Church establish such an institution?

"THE OLD GIANT INTOLERANCE."

Dean Stanley has given several pointed lessons in religious charity to the ecclesiastic mind of England. His last was to go down to Bedford, and make the speech at the unveiling of the statue of John Bunyan,—Baptist tinker, preacher, "prisoner of the Lord," and author of Pilgrim's Progress, two hundred years ago; and he used the occasion, as well he might, to note that the world was a gentler world than when John made lace, and wrote his book in Bedford Jail. In Pilgrim-phrase he said: The old Giant Intolerance, at that time so stout and hearty, now sits at the mouth of his cave with joints stiff and crazy, and can only grin at the heretics as they pass by. "But let us not rejoice prematurely," he adds; "the old giant is still alive. He may be seen in many shapes, on all sides, with many voices." As if to echo the warning, the same papers that report the speech bring word of some poor creatures just the other day burnt to death as witches in Catholic Mexico, and tell us of the Catholic bishops fined and imprisoned by Bismarck, who would forestall Church-intolerance aiming at the State by State-intolerance aimed at the Church.

But the Christian world, especially the Anglo-Saxon portion of it, has indeed made progress in religious freedom since Bunyan's day; and while we still protest against our light afflictions which remain, it is worth while now and then to look back through even the Protestant centuries, and count the far more exceeding glory of our gains.

The great chiefs of Protestantism were by no means identical with the early advocates of "Free Religion." These latter were oftener exiles whom those chiefs had chased away, or recluse idealists and scholars housed in some rich protector's mansion, or obscure fanatics. When their book of praise is written, it will pass by Luther, and Calvin, and Knox, to honor less familiar names, — the Swiss Zwingli; Castellio, the Frenchman, who denounced the murder of Servetus at the time, and, first in modern Christendom, preached the innocence of intellectual error, and the duty of absolute toleration; Acontio, the Italian, perhaps the earliest to emphasize the principle of "few fundamentals in religion," through which, as through a gate, Reason has so often won its way into the strongholds of Christian bigotry; the two Socini, whose name was fastened revilingly to "toleration," and lifted up in literature upon it like blasphemers on a shameful cross,—"Toleration, that Socinian dogma;" that noble line, stretching a whole century, of Dutch Arminian teachers, whose light-bearing words went out through all the lands around them; some humble Baptists, too, and Quakers, will claim place, and John Goodwin, the Arminian Independent of London, who, isolated from all parties, took the open field against the Parliament and the ministers, in behalf of salvation even for pagans, and of toleration even for Jews, and Turks, and Papists, and prophesied to his enemies that he one day should be "had in honor for those very opinions" for which they threatened to make the name of Goodwin "an abhorring to the generations;" and among the rest to take high rank will stand those primitive Broad-Churchmen of England, of whom Tulloch has lately written, the men who first used our English tongue to expound broadly and systematically this principle of religious toleration.

The common-place of to-day, that religion is one thing and the theologies another, was the rare vision in the century of the Reformation, and a very slowly dawning vision in the century after that. Men could cease to be Roman Catholics, but could not give up the Catholic idea that uniformity of doctrine, and of worship, a unified State-Church, in short, was essential to religion. The duty of stamping out papacy on the one hand, and heresy on the other, was believed in by all the principal reformers except Zwingli and Socinus, was enrolled in several of the new Confessions, was practised by every one of the Protestant governments. "Intolerance was the deadly original sin of the Reformed churches,"—inherited from its mother: "At the end of the sixteenth century the simple proposition that men for holding or declaring heterodox opinions in religion should not be burned alive, or otherwise put to death, was itself little else than a sort of heterodoxy,"—so Hallam writes. In the Church of England, Henry VIII. burned Baptists, Edward VI. burned Baptists, Elizabeth banished Baptists, and imprisoned Presbyterians wholesale, and hung some Brownists; even James I. burned two men for denying Christ's divinity. When the Presbyterians came to power, they not only put down prelacy, but passed their Draconic ordinance, bristling with death-penalties and life-imprisonments, against what they regarded as the most impious of the swarming sects and schisms. The ordinance was too savage to be executed. The "old Giant" had already lost his teeth, and could only snap his gums, and fill his dungeons. Then the Independents took their turn at rule. Even as exiles they had shown their quality. Browne and Barrowe, hounded forth from the English Church as damnable heretics, as soon as they found breathing-space abroad, mounted—these gentle Comeouters!—the little platform of their own infallibility, to proclaim the right of compulsory conformity; and the first Independent Confession, published by a church of English exiles in Holland, 1596, maintained, "It is the duty of magistrates to root out all false ministries, voluntary religions, and counterfeit worships of God." As rulers, although they were the first party to grant anything like religious liberty, it was largely forced from them by the indignant spurring of Cromwell, to whom they voted the right to veto bills touching liberty of conscience, but not those suppressing heresies! As it was, three thousand Quakers went to prison while they held the power of the keys. And of alleged witches, Lecky says, there is reason to think more perished in England during the few years of the Commonwealth than in the whole period before or since; but witches lay outside of all men's tolerance, and Puritan theology only brought the belief and panic to the climax. When the Bishop's church returned with the Restoration, and the Dissenters were again prostrate under "Uniformity," "Conventicle," and "Five-Mile Acts," not a few among them actually preferred the persecution to any indulgence that would ease the hated Papists as well as themselves.

How slowly the idea of complete toleration won its way in men's minds is seen still more signally in the exceptions which the most advanced emancipators made in their schemes of toleration. Harrington, author of the Oceana, would exclude Papists, Jews, and Idolaters from his ideal State. Milton would exclude Papists as idolaters; and for a better reason even William Penn and Locke were against tolerating them—for Bismarck's reason,—because the Papists were themselves professed and principled intolerants. No wonder they felt so, for the Vaudois massacres had been renewed, and the London streets were paced by many a French Huguenot just driven from his home by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Jeremy Taylor, who contributed so much to the cause of freedom by his Liberty of Prophesying, is said to have found out, as Irish bishop, that certain Presbyterian parsons could be too troublesome to be allowed his neighborhood. Baxter and Bunyan himself, at least in his younger days, heartily hated the Quakers,—"in whom," our brave John Goodwin wrote, "there is little question that the devil dwelleth bodily." Finally, when William's Toleration Act was passed in 1689, Catholics and Unitarians were wholly excluded from its benefits, while Corporation and Test Acts still remained to disable from civil rights the members of the four tolerated sects,—disabilities that lingered, growing milder, till within our own memory.

Such was English toleration in Bunyan's day! But what advance is this from that pictured in Hallam's sentence for the sixteenth century, when men had just escaped from Rome! Still in England the Established Church carries privilege, and Dissent carries burdens; still Established Churches are the rule among the lands; still in Massachusetts the Statute-book has Sunday-laws whose ghosts can be "materialized" on mean occasion; still we have much freedom to work out in thought and life, while "religion" hinders us as well as helps us; but what great advance is ours beyond that seventeenth century, when men were just escaping from the little Romes of Protestantism! Save in special local cases, the only martyrdom for religious opinion a man can suffer now, among ourselves, is social martyrdom. His penalties are a church-trial, or the losing of a school or a parish, or being dropped from a Year Book, or bearing slurs and misrepresentations. What improvement in New England, even, since the Unitarian controversy fifty years ago! Indeed, the party of the heterodox and the indifferent are so strong, and so disposed to use their strength, that the most resounding word-blows are quite as likely to be those they give, not take,—illustrating the fact that liberty and equality abound long before fraternity.

To-day, no pilgrim who dares come out and pass by is greatly hurt by "the old Giant." They who do not dare are the ones who suffer most from him,—they who still live in old communions where he sits grinning at the mouth of his empty caves, and where, half-unconsciously, the old feeling of subjection is still strong; as the negroes still said "Massa" to the white man after emancipation. Not among the heterodox, but among the Orthodox, we find his victims. Like the Pope, he has lost temporal sovereignty, but he keeps spiritual sovereignty over the faithful. His fetters now are on the mind and tongue; on the mind narrowing its range of thought and doubt, on the tongue muffling clear expression. Who strains a new meaning into an old creed rather than speak the fresh, strong meaning out; who uses an old form dead to the user though not to others; who clings to an old name for the comfort of its wonted sound; men who sacrifice distinctness of mental perception, and lower their standard of ethics from all sorts of half-good motives which sum up in this—that the consequence of their clearest thought and their exactest utterance would be too disastrous, perhaps to others even more than to themselves, in the present state of society,—these are the Giant's real victims to-day. A spiritual tyranny. He hurts only those who fear him, and hurts them inwardly.

Many influences are helping to break down even this rule. Among others an influence very strong will be the theory of evolution which science has been urging so impressively of late. When that theory is still better understood, still more widely impressed and trusted, when it is organized into our mental processes so as to become part of the way in which we look at things, then the day, not of this or that radical theology, indeed, but of Free Religion, will be at hand. For to one party it will give the courage of their thought as a natural growth; to the other it will give sympathy with traditions as natural roots; and to both a better understanding of each other, and more charity. Again a scientific idea doing good to religion. W. C. G.

THE FOURTH GOSPEL.

The following paragraphs are the conclusion of Rev. James Martineau's essay on the Fourth Gospel, published in Old and New, and referred to in another column:—

From all quarters, then, does evidence flow in, that the only gospel which is composed and not merely compiled and edited, and for which, therefore, a single writer is responsible, has its birthday in the middle of the second century, and is not the work of a witness at all. Nor, in the moulding of it, does the author proceed, under the control of an historical purpose, to tell objective facts in the order and the form of the best accredited tradition. His animating motive is doctrinal, as he himself declares,—to convince his readers that Jesus is "the Son of God," in the transcendent sense which this phrase bore to his own thought; and he had so long looked at the evangelical biographies through the glorifying haze of that idea, that whatever would not take its richer light dropped into the shade and disappeared, and those elements alone stood out on which the heavenly tints would lie. As the story had transfigured itself to him, so did he present it transfigured to his readers; in a form true, as he held, with a deeper truth than that of outward circumstance; rendering, if not the very words as they were heard, the inner meaning that they carried; and comprising nothing but that which might have been, and the equivalent of which could hardly fail to be, when such a nature was moving on such a scene. This kind of historical drama is full of interest as an exponent of its own time, but is not a new witness for the time of which it speaks.

For our knowledge, then, of the life of Jesus, except so far as certain features of it are assumed in some of the Epistles and the Apocalypse, we are thrown upon the remains of popular tradition collected by our synoptists,—remains which are doubtless rich in fragments original and true; but which are assuredly of mixed character and worth, and cannot pretend to carry the guaranty of known and namable eye-witnesses. Priceless as sources of probable history, they are unserviceable for a theory of documentary authority.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS is threatened with eclipse at our centennial, just when his fame should shine the brightest. It is said that on July 4, 1876, the Scandinavians of the United States are going to erect a statue in Madison, Wis., to Leif Erikson, as the discoverer of the American continent. Erikson is the sea-king credited with having spent the winter of A.D. 1000 at Fall River, Mass. It is also rumored that at Rome they mean to canonize Columbus because, "by an act little less than that of inspiration," he enlarged the boundaries of the Christian world. Which is to say, according to the knowing ones, the Pope is thinking—

> "Religion stands a-tiptoe in our land,
> And soon will pass to the American strand."

(We suspect that, infallible as he is, he has quoted that wrongly.) But it is hard for Columbus. The discoverer's ship was worth more to him than the saintship will be. The Norwegians even claim his inspiration, too; for they say that he visited Iceland in 1447, and borrowed it there from the Sagas and traditions about Erikson's voyage. W. C. G.

DR. DEEMS, a Methodist, speaks of "the two Methodisms of the United States,"—the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Not so, says the Methodist Protestant; these two are one, but besides that one there are four others. Not right yet, says the Methodist Recorder; there are at least three more in the United States, all organized bodies,—and there may be still others. The Catholics and Mr. Alcott were right; you can choose between one church of so many million members, or Mr. Alcott's so many million churches of one member each. We are used to the rubric Y. M. C. A. The Convention last month reported nine hundred and forty-five associations on the roll. Now, New York is going to have a Y. M. H. A. The H stands for Hebrew; but there are to be a reading-room, a library, lectures, entertainments, and free classes, just as if they were good Christians. Perhaps, sometime, we shall be rich enough to have a Y. M. F. R. A., and there will be again a reading-room, and library, lectures, entertainments, and free classes. The thirst is the same, the water is the same; but the syrup is the all-important thing, and makes the difference. So we must all have separate cups. Well, perhaps no one is to blame. But it will not always be so; and the paradox is that Mr. Alcott's kind of church will bring the brotherhood. W. C. G.

IT IS GENERALLY pretty well understood that the Patrons of Husbandry, or Grangers, of the West are, like the Internationals of the East, opposed to what they call "middlemen," and propose to dispense with their services as fast as possible. A few days ago, a man prostrated by disease, and with little hopes of recovery, was asked by his friends if they should not send for a minister of the gospel. He promptly answered: "No, I am a Granger, and opposed to middlemen; and if I go to heaven, I propose to go direct, without the intervention of any sleek-coated middleman who makes his living off of the hard-working producer."

A RELIGIOUS WASHERWOMAN, who always abstained from work on Sundays, by industry contrived to earn enough money to build a snug little house and barn. There occurred a terrible storm which destroyed the latter and smashed part of the former. Her indignation was at first unspeakable, but at last she sobbed out, "Never mind! I'll pay for this! I'll wash on Sundays!" Providence is supposed to have met its match.

AN IRISHMAN was once taken to see the wonders of Niagara Falls. He did not seem to think it tremendous after all. His friend asked him, "Don't you think it is a wonderful thing?" "Why is it a wonderful thing?" asked the Irishman. "Don't you see," said his friend, "that immense body of water rolling down this precipice?" Says he, "What's to hinder it?"—N. Y. Observer.

Communications.

WHAT IS ATHEISM?

"Be not frightened by names. There is no atheist, save he who disbelieves in cause and effect. To believe in a cause of all things, is to believe in a God. Respecting the nature of that cause, it is not only lawful, but necessary, to differ, until determined by positive evidence, derived from a due comprehension of its effects; that is, of Nature. The real atheists, now-a-days, are those who would banish God from the living present to a dead past." (From "By-and-By," by Edward Maitland; author of "The Pilgrim and the Shrine," etc.)

"Atheism professed is only rejection of some definition." (C. A. Bartol.)

"The proof of the existence of a God, derived from the external universe as perceived through the senses, is impossible and contradictory." (Fichte.)

"The absurdity of the a posteriori argument for a God consists in the assumption that what we call order, harmony, and adaptation, are evidence of design; when it is evident that, whether there be a God or not, order, harmony, and adaptation must have existed from all eternity, and are not, therefore, necessary proof of a designing cause." (B. F. Underwood.)

"If what I have been saying is of real value, it will appear that the two great discoveries of modern science—the conservation of force, and the law of evolution—must eventually give to it a vast impulse in the direction of religious inquiry. The one establishes the unity of the universe in respect to force; the other establishes the unity of the universe in respect to law. One force rules throughout space; one law rules throughout time,—and the force and the law are themselves explicable, as one, only as mind. To this conclusion I believe that modern science is cautiously but surely approaching.

"But I shall be met at once with the rebuff that these two discoveries, and especially the evolutional theory as applied to biology, have forever disposed of the old argument from design. Prof. Huxley, in his Lay Sermons (pp. 301–304), argues that 'teleology, as commonly understood, had received its death-blow at Mr. Darwin's hands.' I admit it; for the argument from design is usually limited to the special adaptations of organ to function, for which a non-teleological cause is found in the law of natural selection. But the adaptation of the universal environment to the evolution of universal organic life admits of no such explanation. No cause has ever been assigned why the net result of all events, taken as a whole, should be what it is—why all influences should so wonderfully conspire to develop a cosmos out of chaos, and a magnificent fauna and flora out of protoplasmic sameness,—why the system of Nature should work thus undeviatingly in one continuous direction. If it is said that this must have been, and could not have been otherwise, I reply that this must is the very thing to be explained. Nature might have been forever, for aught we know, a huge, seething cauldron of warring elements, tending to no peace, and productive of no result. Why must it have been what it is, rather than that? Scientific men cheat themselves if they swallow that must as an antidote to the discomfort of puzzling queries. The queries cannot be thus quieted." (Extract from Index Tract, No. 11.)

From no desire to escape from the epithet of atheist have I asked the question at the head of this article. Considering the fact that most, if not all, of those who bear this name have been so knighted by a class of their fellow-men who have thrust upon the world (under the pretext of authority) pictures and ideas of deity revolting in every sense, some discriminating title became really necessary. But it does not follow that the correct name has been applied by the one side, or accepted by the other. For it must be evident to all, that the rejection of some conception of deity is very different from a total disbelief in the existence of God.

In the foregoing quotations it is noticeable that while methods which would lead some to theism are rejected by others, yet no positive denial is made of the existence of God.

It has been said that "science knows but three states of mind,—denial, conviction, and the vast interval between the two, which is not belief, but the suspension of judgment." The suspension of judgment is not atheism.

In a recent lecture before the Free Religious Society of Chicago, Mr. Underwood well illustrates the state of mind between denial and conviction, by a quotation from Goethe's Faust, as follows:—

Margaret.—"Do you believe in God?"

Faust.—"My dear, who can say, 'I believe in a God'? Ask priest or philosopher, and the answer is like mockery."

Margaret.—"Then you do not believe Him?"

Faust.—"Mistake me not, you angel; who dare name Him? And who can say, 'I believe in Him'? Who that feels dare say, 'I have no God'? The All-embracer, the All-sustainer, does He not surround you, me, himself? Is not the earth firm beneath us? Do we not see each other eye to eye, and does not all existence rise to your head and heart, and float in infinite majesty before you? Let your heart, big as it is, be full of the great idea; and when you are perfectly happy in the thought, name it what you will,—good, heart, love, god. I have no name for it. The feeling is all-in-all; the name is but noise and smoke, clouding celestial glory."

If the rejection of some definition constitutes atheism, then are all the sects atheists to each other; for it is notorious that no two of them have precisely the same ideas or conceptions of deity. What a babel of confusion would we then have in the use of the word! It would straightway lose all its distinctive meaning, if it has not already.

I see no way in which to reclaim the word for any legitimate or intelligible use, except by adopting the meaning given by the author of By-and-By; namely: "There is no atheist, save he who disbelieves in cause and effect;" and that "to believe in a cause of all things, is to believe in a God."

It is not what the so-called atheists like to be called (some of whom glory in that very vague title), nor is it what priest or clergy would like to call them; but, how far have their negations actually carried them? Have they, any one of them, yet denied, for intelligent effects, an intelligent cause? If so, their philosophy must be of that easy, good-natured, lazy sort, which animated the immortal Topsy in Uncle Tom's Cabin, who, when asked, "Who made you?" replied, "Dunno; I 'spect I growed."

Herbert Spencer condemns atheism as "an absurd and unthinkable view of the universe." I suppose he means by that expression, that he cannot think of effects without causes, even though the Infinite Cause seems to him the "unknowable."

I prefer to say, the Reality known in part. To expect to analyze fully the Infinite Cause, when we cannot yet analyze our finite selves, were folly.

We can daily learn something more of the nature of that cause from its effects in universal Nature. Shall our inability to grasp the whole lead us to blank negation? Surely, that were as unreasonable as to assert that we know all. Enough is already known to suggest far more; and I, for one, can wait. The whys of the known have yet to be disposed of. The "musts" of the unknown will then take care of themselves.

In the light of scientific theism, all atheism, real or supposed, must fade away. The contest is rapidly taking new shape. At least, let the readers of THE INDEX understand something of the nature of their powerful weapons for attack and defence,—the claims of the scientific method so forcibly shown in the Index tract from which I have quoted. The ground there taken is broad enough for all new light which science will add. No longer limited to the purely physical, all questions relating even to man's spiritual nature must pass in review before that ordeal which recognizes no authority but universally established truth.

W. F. P.

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 9, 1874.

INITIATORY FORCES.

In Nature we may often note vast potentialities lying dormant for long periods, until some force, insignificant in amount, but of the proper kind or intensity, suddenly initiates action on an immense scale.

Thus a prairie or forest may be dried up by drought, until leaves and twigs are brittle and nearly dead; but all is quiet until a chance spark from a locomotive, or a tobacco-pipe, inaugurates a conflagration devastating square miles.

And this necessity for an outside initiatory force is generally associated with great power of maintaining action once begun.

The element carbon is a striking illustration of this. The processes of crystallization are much facilitated by the entrance of crystals, ready made, and sometimes cannot be formed without this impulse. And, very curiously, a new surgical method for covering a wound with skin employs as nucleus a tiny morsel supplied from elsewhere. In photography it has been discovered that blue light may begin an impression which red or yellow may finish, but finish only. The magneto-electric machines must always have magnets as an essential, in the production of an electric current from mechanical motion. The force of the magnet may be a trifle, and the results of the apparatus gigantic; but still the little initiatory magnet cannot be dispensed with.

A fallacy has often led men to suppose that effects exceeded causes in amount, because they looked at initiatory forces, and not at the much greater reserved forces they liberated.

So, in working for a result, mechanical, sociological, or otherwise, an indispensable provision is the proper initiatory force, without which great power may lie idle and useless.

J. G. H.

DUTY, NOT SENTIMENT.

To do our plain, simple duty, day by day; to help one another with deeds, not mere words; to be honest, sincere, and free,—this is the veritable greatness of human life, and the extreme difficulty of it.

Feeling does not always accompany duty. We must do our duty, whether we feel like it or not; and do it continuously, not by fits and starts. Duty is beyond our mere preference, higher and deeper than sentiment. It comes in darkness and stillness at times, now wonderfully radiant, then a cold and beckoning hand; but one always to be followed. It is the imperial light of the soul, that hangs over it with a vaster sublimity than the starry heavens. It is man's best gospel, sweet even in exceeding bitterness, and bearing a wreath of glory in its most piercing thorns.

Sentiment that ministers to duty, and makes it more vivid and imperative, and is the kindling radiance of sincere obedience, is right. But sentiment that subverts duty, or makes it a secondary thing, is fatally wrong.

There is too much of that false religious sentiment, which puts ecstatic visions and loud prayers in the place of hard and honorable work; which lifts one so high that he forgets that he owes his neighbor this or that; which makes honesty, and purity, and justice, of comparatively little account. Sentiment, like "the baseless fabric of a dream," too often takes the place of real duty in the experience of many. They think if the heart glows, and the brain burns, all is right. They neglect to choose and act. How seldom does the Orthodox revivalist appeal to the sense of duty; almost always to the passions,—to hope, fear, and the desire of reward!

But the golden colors of sentiment are beautiful only when they spring from the expanding character, the varied and noble activities of the soul. We cannot be flung into heaven on any tide of feeling. We must climb, before the intense vision will burst upon us.

S. P. PUTNAM.

WHAT IS PRAYER, AND WHAT ITS OBJECT?

EDITOR INDEX:—

Mr. Frothingham, in THE INDEX of July 2, in his essay "Why go to Church?" says: "I propose to discuss the claims of our Sunday services on intelligent people who are outside the sects." This is the class to which I claim to belong, if he means, by "the sects," the Christian denominations.

Of the question, "Why go to Church?" Mr. Frothingham says: "To technical Christians such a question would have no meaning." So I conclude he is speaking especially to non-Christians, and therefore accept his discourse as spoken to me. There are many things I would like to say of it, but will confine myself to his definition and object of prayer. He says:—

"There is no religion without prayer. Religion without prayer is inconceivable. To prayer we restore its original meaning; for prayer is the heart's desire for unattained, and, by ordinary means, unattainable, good; it is hunger and thirst for divine things. Of course, no one is to suppose that we employ it, as religious people generally do, as a means of propitiating higher powers; of obtaining favors of a divine being; of establishing private relations with a patron deity; no such thought enters our mind. We offer no petition; we supplicate no boon, not even a spiritual one; we address ourselves to no person who dwells in another sphere, and we expect nothing in return for the act—not so much as an ethereal influence shed upon our mind. The desire is its own satisfaction; the petition its own answer. Prayer, with us, is the breathing forth of an emotion of longing for heavenly gifts. It is a conscious entertainment of such longing; a declaration of it when it exists; an uttered wish for it when it does not exist. It is a deliberate effort to call up and hold in view, for an instant, as supremely desirable and beautiful, qualities of goodness, nobility, purity, and loveliness, which are remote from our daily experience; which we do not possess, doubt, perhaps, whether we ever shall possess, despair, possibly, of ever possessing; can only dream of, admire, long for; but which, nevertheless, seem to us sweetly and gloriously human—the mere occasional thought whereof gladdens, elevates, and consoles."

It would seem, then, that Mr. Frothingham's idea of prayer is that it consists in the indulgence in certain pleasant wishes, desires, aspirations, longings, reveries, fancies, dreams, imaginations, and so forth,—to indulge in which, even for an instant, elevates and consoles our feelings, even though we never expect to have any of these wishes realized. I can well understand the pleasure and the exaltation of mind which an imaginative person experiences in thus revelling in the fields of fancy, and indulging in dreamy woods; for—

> "I love, at evening's mild and tranquil hour,
> To rove in silence by some crystal streams,
> There to indulge in fancy's pleasing power,
> Where ripples dance beneath the moon's pale beams."

But I am opposed to all shams, and therefore I object to this kind of pleasant musing being called prayer. Let us call things by their proper names. There is a disposition among Christians generally, at this time, to soften down the old repulsive doctrines, and even to deny that they ever existed in their most repulsive forms. Christianity has its definite doctrines, and one of them is prayer; and its idea is that prayer is petition addressed to some power for favors, with expectation of receiving gifts in consequence of the prayers. I do not object to Mr. Frothingham's indulging in the kind of dreaming which he describes, either in private or public. No doubt I should enjoy listening to him, as I do reading much that he says through THE INDEX; but do not let us anti-Christians call this pleasant indulgence in emotions—which is "no petition," "no supplication for a boon," which is "addressed to no person," and for which no favors are expected in return,—do not let us call this prayer; as surely Christians would not.

Somebody has said that "prayer is a convenient way of preaching to ourselves." This would seem to be Mr. Frothingham's idea of it. Practically, I have no doubt, this is true; but, just so far as it is true, prayer becomes a false pretence, and, by Mr. Frothingham's explanation of it, an admitted sham. In one case, we pretend to be addressing God, when we are really addressing ourselves, or a congregation; in the other, we preach to ourselves, and pretend we are praying to God. Mr. Frothingham sees this first pretence, and in dodging it he runs squarely into another. He addresses nobody, makes "no petition," asks "no boon," "expects nothing;" but, nevertheless, goes on wishing, and dreaming, and holding up the beautiful, the good, the noble, the pure, and the lovely, to himself or his audience, and calls this "prayer." He gets his definition more from Dr. Watts' lines—

> "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, > Unuttered or expressed,"— than from any true use of language. But desire is not prayer until it is expressed in some way in the form of petition. Prayer is petition to some being for some favor, and nothing else. All the devotional sentiment, so frequently expressed with the prayers of Christians, is simply sentiment and devotion, but no part of prayer itself. For this is always petition—the craving of a favor from some power, the begging for something which we expect or hope to get in return for the "act" of praying; and any other kind of prayer is sham prayer—is no prayer at all.

But Mr. Frothingham says: "To prayer we restore its original meaning." Let me ask, When did prayer not mean petition for favors, but the holding up to view of beautiful ideas to gladden, elevate, and console? But even if it did originally mean what he says it does, and which original meaning he now "restores," it is not the meaning accepted by anybody now, except a few quasi Christians, who have abandoned the substance of the Christian religion, but who yet strangely try to hold on to its name and its outgrown forms, by so modifying them that they certainly look like new creations. And here is just the point I wish to make; namely, to show the foolishness of the effort, which some are making, to so sugar-coat the repulsive and absurd doctrines of Christianity that they may be swallowed without making up faces. We who are not "Christians" in any true sense, but anti-Christians, believe Christianity to be a vast, organized system of error; and yet some of us would seem to be giving it countenance and support, by our conformity to its rites and customs while we know they have no real significance for truth.

Those Christians who believe that whatsoever they ask of God in faith they will surely receive, thus far act consistently with the Scriptures they profess to take as their guide; which Scriptures teach that whatever they ask in the name of Jesus, believing, it shall be done for them, even to the removing of mountains. But for those of us who are able to see that it is impossible for any thing of the kind to take place; to see that if God were to grant the petitions of finite beings, it must necessarily produce the greatest confusion, and that no rational and consistent mind could ever place full confidence in him or his laws afterwards,—it would be the sheerest pretending and hypocrisy to offer any such petitions. And, to me, it seems that those who see what the truth is, and yet "cook up" definitions by which they make a show of clinging to the old forms of Christian worship, while they virtually deny, as much as anybody, the truth of the whole system called Christianity,—I say, to me, such do not seem to be doing the best possible service to the truth.

And it seems to me, further, that, if anti-Christians go to church at all, they should go for the same reason that some Christians occasionally risk themselves inside a free-thought hall; that is, to learn what is being done and taught there, to be the better able to meet and expose what to them seems error: or, as a sanitary commission visits the dens of vice and squalor in cities, to study the desperate case, and learn how the better to apply suitable remedies.

D. K. BOUTELLE.

LAKE CITY, Minn., July 11, 1874.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE UNKNOWN.

"My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God," says the Psalmist. How true an expression that is of some of the deepest longings of mankind! For it is not merely the desire after a familiar shrine—not only a craving for some avenging strength—that speaks in these words; but the hunger after an assurance that the inmost reality of existence is something not utterly foreign to the affections of the heart. This is not the place for enlarging on the position which this desire has held in the history of mankind. But, certainly, they delude themselves who suppose that the power of the mystical element in religion can ever be accounted for, apart from some conscious relationship between our souls and the enduring substance in which all things are one. Our ignorance has been fully admitted; while we have insisted upon the positive element which it implies. And the result of our whole argument is that this ignorance is not such as to make the consciousness of such a relationship impossible or unmeaning. My enjoyment of Nature is raised beyond mere sensuous gratification, is touched with the intenser, though more solemn, delight of reverence, just in proportion as I feel the beautiful vision to be forever arising from a mystery of Being which involves all possible grace, and energy, and life in itself.

"Lo, these are a part of His ways, but how little a portion is known of Him!" The soul that realizes the world thus, finds reverence to be the highest result of knowledge; and that not sentimentally only, but practically; because in reverence are contained the subordination of self to purposes grander than ambition, the simple susceptibility, the self-forgetful charity and sympathy, which coördinate our energies, and sanctify them as tributaries to a universal divine work. And since not only without, but also and more directly within, we feel the nearness of eternal Being, the universal tendency to worship will be found to have a significance which neither irrational dogma on the one hand, nor plausible materialism on the other, can ever utterly degrade, or completely explain away. The words of the great master, "God is a Spirit," are far from being inconsistent with the humble acknowledgment of our mortal ignorance; while, at the same time, they keep before our minds the truth that this ignorance is itself the assertion of a majesty behind the veil. For the word "Spirit"—and the same remark would apply to its Greek original—does not at all necessarily imply the contradictory conception of a personality at once infinite and defined, or an omniscience susceptible to successions of thought. The word "Spirit" may rather be taken as an abstraction of all phenomenal definition, including, of course, molecular vibrations. But that abstraction leaves still the vast, dim, yet unconquerable, assurance of an essential substance, which is not, cannot, be dead, though the life we instinctively attribute to it is inconceivable. And that Life is inconceivable just because it comprehends all modes of being, all possibilities of spontaneous energy in one, and is, as it were, the apotheosis of modes in the modeless Infinite at which they hint.

As in a narrow isle whatever path we follow it soon ends in the pathless sea, and all movements have one destiny, so in our narrow life thought never travels far before it looks out on that which it cannot measure or define; which was, and is, and is to come. This, the Everlasting, is the only Substance, of which all things are phenomena. This is the abiding Power of which the recurrent sequences of natural law are fragmentary manifestations.

This is the all-pervading life, which makes the heavens to smile, and the twinkling leaves to dance, and the clouds to frown, and the winds and the waves to sing their "song which is wild and slow." In any scientific sense, nay, in any but the vaguest intellectual sense, that Being is in itself unknown, unknowable. Yet the inevitable fascination with which it draws the dumb, pleading desire of all noblest souls, is a burning fact that shines through all the history of man, and which, were there no adequate significance within it, would convict the universe of vanity and lies. As to the nature of that significance, we have given some suggestions; but it is a matter that is best treated by itself. Meanwhile, when we acknowledge that unspeakable majesty as in itself unknown, unknowable, we have insisted that this ignorance should not, cannot be interpreted as describing absolute nonentity of perception or apprehension; for that cannot with any reason be affirmed of anything that is an essential element in all rational thought, and the inspiration of the purest passion. It is no mere paradox to affirm that this very ignorance is itself knowledge, in so far as it implies the existence of an incomprehensible object. For we cannot think far in any direction without coming upon that which is more than all our knowledge,—something that is and must be in itself unknown, not because it is uncertain, but because it is far too real for our superficial faculties.

We cannot mark phenomena without thinking of substance.

We cannot admire the ordered system of the universe without aspiring in imagination to law above law, until, at the topmost height, one inconceivable stream of force springs into a myriad channels of harmonious action. We cannot feel the world's heart beat in the ceaseless energy of living things without adoring an all-pervading life.

Yet substance, law, power, and life, are only names of the unutterable; the last murmurs upon the lip when different paths of knowledge open on those measureless contemplations which command the worship of silence.—J. Allanson Picton.

THE INFORMING POWER OF THE SOUL.

BY MRS. S. C. HALLOWELL.

Some timid people are much disturbed of late at the rapid strides of the new philosophy of science. "Will they leave nothing untouched?" is the cry. "They have set back creation's dawn, the creation of our early lessons, for such eons of years that the mind aches in the retrospect. They question the very dust of which we are made, and force it to give up its reluctant secrets of the tiger and the gorilla. And now they would assail our strong tower of prayer with the battery of statistics—so many hospital-wards prayed for; so many not prayed for; result, Q.E.D."

Shall we join these alarmists, and hide our heads in the sands of Egypt? Are we so afraid to trust God with his world? Or must we still insist that it be shaped after our preconceived patterns?

Why not reverently admit that, to every age and to every time, God grants some revelation of his mysteries? To one age, a deep, spiritual insight, and strong-winged aspirations; to another, a kindling vision of material truth; until a patient reading of rocks and rainbows makes a grand, harmonious symphony, ready to burst upon our ear.

It seems so easy now with Galileo to stamp one's foot, and say, "It does move, after all." And yet in the movement of to-day, are we, or are we not, of the Galileo party?

But the distress manifested is not entirely because of the removal of the old landmarks, and the substitution of floating buoys, which rise with the tides of thought. It is something deeper than the mere horror of change. It is the dread of the materialism which the new theories seem to bring in their wake.

If we are to be proven to be not only of "such stuff as dreams are made of," but akin to the oak and the cuttle-fish, rising above them by our superior and more complex organization; if humanity be, as Huxley once reverently hinted, "but the cunningest of Nature's clocks, after all,"—what becomes of our faith in the undying soul of man?

Has the oak a soul which impels it to toss its lofty arms in the strong west wind, and to drink into each fibre of its bright leaves, and tiny acorn-cups, the full life of the universe?

Is there any consciousness in the graceful shell that anchors itself to the ocean-floor, and lives a life of many-colored mystery beneath the waves? Where are we, then, if once we open our minds to these new thoughts? Swept away and lost in the torrent of material force that pervades the world from highest creature to lowest organism! Or floating securely on an infinite sea of faith—faith in the all-creating, all-upholding power of God.

And here comes the physician to tell us that this man's desponding views of life, his gloomy theories of the hereafter, are but the pressure of a blood-clot upon his brain. Or the philanthropist, who warns us that this drunkard, or that murderer, is not a wholly responsible being; that in his veins, in his nerves, lies the fatal force that impels him on the downward road. Or, again, that this man of magnetic power, this orator, or statesman, or general, is different from other men by a grain of iron, more or less, in his blood.

It is well to remember, at moments when our light burns low, the thunder of Fuseli's reply to the inquisitive being who asked him about the soul. With a mighty oath, "I don't know whether you have a soul; but"—another forcible affirmation—"I know that I have!"

There may be men and women who have never felt within them the strong upswelling of a power which we can call by no other name. After a moment of awful sacrifice, in which self has been trampled under foot; or a season of patient fulfilment of some painful duty; after a struggle which has called forth the two grand powers of humanity, heroism, and humility, the flood-tide comes; we are pervaded, lifted, and folded in—there is no other name for it—the near presence of God in our souls.

If it be yet to come to those waiting men and women, rest assured that it will come, when the soul's gates open unto it in some sacrificial hour.

And this presence—this pervading and informing power—is there no record of it, save in the hallowed memory of such a time, and the testimony of devout witnesses throughout all ages and many lands. Not more sincerely is "the dyer's hand subdued to what it works in," than is the human countenance a graven record of experience and thought. If mind and thought be but the working of electric wires, material in their substance, here we see mind and thought reacting upon matter, and shaping it to its own likeness.

Meet, after the passing of years, a friend whom you knew in boyhood; while he scans life's story cut on your countenance, you set yourself to read his own. Has he led a little life, of sordid care and ignoble aims, see how his face has kept the record! It is written all over it. The frank brow of boyhood is narrowed and furrowed; the eyes are contracted as the man's thought; self and cunning are in their sharp gleam; and around the mouth the tell-tale years have set their sensual lines.

With that loyal tenderness with which Thackeray regards all good women, he speaks once of the transfiguration which comes into the face of women-watchers by a painful, dying bed. A light shines from them which is not of this world, which comes of the completest sacrifice and devotion; of resignation to the awful mystery drawing near; while with untiring hands their help and sympathy enfold the sufferer, who rests securely there.

If the soul, thus working from within, can stamp itself so true and surely, ennobling and enlightening the harshest outlines and rudest features of the human countenance, until they shine with a great light; if it can so set its seal on the flesh, why shall we not have faith in it, this conscious, hidden soul,—trust it for the divine spark, and seek its mysteries as reverently, and patiently, and devotedly, as men seek for material truth?

In the limitations of ancient creeds, men had come to regard their souls as something to be brought out on Sabbath or holy-days; as precious jewels worn on high occasions; something for which consecrated mysteries had built a casket which shut it out from the working-world.

When we come to know that this soul, this living moral force in us, cannot be shut up, but works as it is fed—grows and expands, or shrivels and dwindles, in the space we leave for it in our lives; that it photographs itself, lofty and noble, or pinched and starving, on our daily deeds and our daily looks,—shall we not give it reverent heed?

Shall we not have faith in it, as in our eyes for seeing, and our ears for hearing, to apprehend spiritual truth?

It is not an embalmed mystery, laid up for us against our death, and removed in its sanctity from the wear and tear of business and the world, but the breath of our inner lives, kindling and quickening the outer man.

Let Science, with advancing stride, displace this ancient landmark, or efface, with honest finger, that time-honored inscription on the wall; humanity remains with its grand central truth of the in-dwelling soul in man.

Traditions may go,—creeds may be swept away as creeds have been; but before the divine in man, Science must pause in listening reverence.

Withhold not thyself, O Soul, from her glance! She has taught thee to climb to the stars; show her, in return, of thy essence, which itself outshines the stars.—Christian Union.

"HOW MUCH BETTER it would have been to have shaken hands, and allowed it was all a mistake," said a Detroit judge. "Then the lion and the lamb would have lain down together, and white-robed Peace would have fanned you with her wings and elevated you with her smiles of approbation. But, no; you went to clawing and biting and rolling in the mud, and here you are. It's $5 apiece."

"BE BRIEF, GENTLEMEN," is the good advice given to clergymen by the Congregationalist, the editor of which tells of a minister who prayed forty minutes at a funeral. "Forty minutes," says the editor, "is a long while. Not Solomon in all his glory would have prayed at this length, had he dedicated a hundred temples."

HORSE-THIEVES in Texas, now-a-days, go in gangs, headed by a pretended clergyman, who gets up protracted meetings, and while the people are at the houses of worship, the rank and file of the gang go for the stables,

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions,	10c per line.
" 13 " 25	"	8	"	"
" 26 " 51	"	6	"	"
" 52	"	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

CIRCULATE! Circulate!! Circulate THOSE PETITIONS. Don't feel satisfied when your petition is a yard long, unless you have asked every one to sign it. Get good, influential names.

GET EVERYBODY.

Don't neglect to show the petition to any one, because he is a stockholder in some church, or other exempted property, as many such persons admit the justice of the demand; and those who will not should be made to take the responsibility of refusing to sign it.

Don't delay! We want the petitions returned early.

Per order of EXEC. COMM. of the BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 4.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R.I.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS,

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potier on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Sympathy of Religions, by T. W. Higginson. 25 cents.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M). Little Women. Two vols	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	1.50
Edelweiss	2.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (Rev. C. A). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols	5.00
BIBLE in the Public Schools. Records, Arguments, and Decision in the case of John D. Minor et al. vs. the Board of Education of the city of Cincinnati: et al. in the Supreme Court of the City of Cincinnati	2.00
Arguments of Ramsey, Sage and King in favor of the use of the Bible	.50
Arguments of Stallo, Hoadley and Mathews against the use of the Bible	.50
The Opinion and Decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the above case	.25
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols	3.50
Miscellanies. 2 vols	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	3.25
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter s Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "'Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.60
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (Rev. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man	2.00
Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol	2.50
The New Affinities of Faith	.25
MAURICE (Rev. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART.) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women	1.25
Essay on Liberty	1.25
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Cirkle	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans,—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Æsthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hoggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.0
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.00
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (Rev. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voysey Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone, Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDGEBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SAVE FIFTY DOLLARS!

THE NEW FLORENCE.

PRICE, $20 below } any other First-
VALUE, $30 above } class Sew'g Mach.

SAVED, $50 by buying the Florence.

Every machine warranted.

Special terms to clubs and dealers.

Send for circulars to the

Florence S. M. Co., Florence, Mass.,

or 778 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which r. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHAPTERS
FROM
The Bible of the Ages.
FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Zoroaster, Talmuds, Bible, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Luther, Scandinavian Eddas, Renan, Taliesin, Milton, Penn, Adam Clarke, Mary Fletcher, F. W. Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, H. C. Wright, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, T. Starr King, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Emerson, Denton, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others.

Gospels and Inspirations from many Centuries and Peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it."

Edited and Compiled by
GILES B. STEBBINS.

Four hundred pages; bound in cloth; price $1.50. No Extra Charge for Postage.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER,
BY
SIDNEY H. MORSE.

Dignity, reverence, sweetness, vigor, equipoise, breathe through the clay; the artist has so filled his own heart with appreciation of that noble life that he has been able cunningly to mould it into those delicate lines which the character had wrought on the living fibre. We are tempted to exclaim, as we stand beside it, as the old artist did to his perfected work, "Speak then!"—Hannah E. Stevenson.

All the characteristics of my husband are in the bust,—his greatness, his goodness, his tenderness, his love. You cannot give life to clay or marble; but you can represent it, and this Mr. Morse has done.—Lydia D. Parker to Hannah E. Stevenson.

The eyes, though but of clay, are gleaming with possible indignation, with possible tears; the lips are set firm with the resolution of him who, like Paul, could "fight a good fight" as well as "give a reason."—Samuel Longfellow.

The first time I have seen Theodore Parker since he died.—Wm. Sparrell.

The best representation of Mr. Parker ever executed in clay.—Boston Daily Globe.

The face is strong and noble as it should be. The likeness is good.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Nothing appears for beauty alone, or finish, or to show the vanity of the artist. All is forgotten in the man—the true, real, Yankee man, Theodore Parker.—L. S. H. in the Golden Age.

Copies of this Bust, finely finished n plaster, $10 each. Boxing for transportation, $1 extra. Freight or expressage paid by party sending order. Weight of box about fifty pounds. Orders may be sent to
S. H. MORSE,
Room 13, 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

STUDENTS FITTED for any College.
Please address
EMILY J. LEONARD,
Meriden, Conn.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALLER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaller Hall.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL.—The twenty-first school year of this Family and Day School, FOR BOTH SEXES, will begin Wednesday, September 16, 1874.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN, Principal,
West Newton, Mass.
At home Saturdays.

TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS.

Having conveniences for doing the best of newspaper printing at reasonable prices, I should like to contract for composition alone, or for composition, press-work, and mailing, for one or more weekly papers.
Best of references given, and satisfactory work guaranteed. GEO. H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WARREN'S
TRUE CIVILIZATION.
Price 50 cents.

PRACTICAL DETAILS,
showing the workings of the
COST PRINCIPLE.
Price 25 cents.
For sale by
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield St., Boston.

NEW SINGING BOOKS!
THE LEADER!!
By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Choirs, Conventions, and Singing Classes will welcome this new Church Music-Book, filled with new tunes, anthems, chants, etc., etc., all of the best quality.

Price $1.38, or $12.00 per Dozen.

The Song Monarch!!
By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Especially for Singing Classes. First 86 pages contain the elementary course, the same as that in the LEADER, which course is followed by more than 100 pages filled with the most interesting Secular and Sacred Music for practice. Equal to the SONG KING in interest.

Price 75 cts., or $7.50 per dozen.

AMERICAN
School Music Readers.

Three carefully graded Song Books for Common Schools, by L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN.

Book 1st. For Primary Schools. Price 35 cts.
Book 2d. For Lower "Grammar" Classes. Price 50 cts.
Book 3d. For Higher "Grammar" Classes. Price 60 cts.

The Course is easy, progressive, interesting, and has been thoroughly tested in schools near Boston.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our organization some time since decided to direct its efforts for the present towards securing the

Repeal of the Laws

whereby church and other corporate property is unjustly exempted from its share of the burden of taxation.

As a means to this end, we have published for general circulation several thousand copies of a

TRACT

on Church Exemption, being the article by Mr. Abbot which appeared in THE INDEX of Nov. 27.

The edition was made as large as our funds would allow; but, so great has been the demand, it is already nearly exhausted.

Our next edition ought to be large enough to place a copy in the hands of

EVERY VOTER IN THE STATE,

and generously to supply the calls for them in other States.

To do this, we need funds; for, although we have made arrangements for printing the Tract at very low cost, it is impossible for the Boston League, with its various other expenses, to bear the entire expense alone.

Will not, then,

All Friends of the Movement

come forward and help us with liberal donations?

We frequently receive communications from parties wishing tracts to distribute, asking how much they shall pay. To such we reply that the cost to us is about $2.50 per thousand, and we shall be pleased to furnish them at this price per thousand, or 30 cents per hundred, to all who will circulate them. But all additional donations will be gratefully received for the purpose of circulating them gratuitously throughout the country.

To many of the subscribers of THE INDEX and others whose names have been furnished us as probable friends of the movement, copies of the Tract, together with Petitions asking the repeal of the Exemption Laws, have been sent,

With the Hope

that such friends will try to secure as many signatures to the petition as possible in their locality

We respectfully ask those who are unable to attend to the matter themselves to place the petitions in the hands of those who will.

Let us

ROLL UP THE LIST!

Let our united voices be heard! And let it be done NOW!

We would say, also that we feel deeply the need of

Other Organizations

in this State, to coöperate with us in securing equality and justice, by pressing the "Demands of Liberalism." If, in any locality, there are those who are inclined to

Form a Liberal League,

we are ready to render such assistance as lies in our power.

LIBERALS!

If all will unite and work, the results sought can be accomplished

Address

BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE,

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Per order of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS,
LEROY, MINN.

Money invested on short time, or for a term of years, on unincumbered improved farms, at 12 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually. Perfect title and ample security guaranteed. All expenses for abstract of title and recording mortgage paid by borrower. We collect and remit to any part of the United States free of charge.

REFERENCES.—First National Bank, McGregor, Iowa; First National Bank, Austin Minn.; Milwaukee National Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.; City National Bank, Chicago, Ill.; Allen, Stevens & Co., Bankers, New York City; Morris Altman.

REAL ESTATE SECURITIES,
paying 8 to 10 per cent. interest, or
Investments in Real Estate in Chicago and vicinity,
if judiciously made, are the best and safest modes of employing capital. The old
Real Estate and Loan Agency
OF
ERNST PRUSSING, 143 RANDOLPH STREET,
Chicago (Established 1853),

Guarantees perfect title and ample security in all its Real Estate Loans.
Firstclass securities always on hand. Interest and principal collected without charge. Real Estate Investments made on commission or on shares; taxes paid, &c.
Orders of capitalists and real estate owners respectfully solicited.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

RADICAL AND LITERARY LECTURES
BY JOHN WEISS,

RADICAL LECTURES.

The Idea of Hereafter.
An Act of Faith.
Intelligence in Religion.
Religion and Science.
Heart in Religion.

SHAKSPEARIAN LECTURES.

FIRST SERIES.

1. Cause of Laughter.
2. Irony and Humor.
3. Dogberry, Malvolio, Bottom, Touchstone.
4. Ajax in Troilus and Cressida: The Porter in Macbeth: The Fool in Lear.
5. Falstaff.
6. Hamlet.

SECOND SERIES.

1. The Women of Shakspeare.
2. Portia.
3. Ophelia.
4. Macbeth and Lady Macbeth.
5. " " " "
6. Contrast in Shakspeare's Characters.

Address JOHN WEISS,
32 E. Brookline St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year. LIBERTY AND LIGHT. Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 5. BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1874. WHOLE NO. 241.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ——.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ——:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

So far as I am concerned, the above is the platform of THE INDEX. I believe in it without reserve; I believe that it will yet be accepted universally by the American people, as the only platform consistent with religious liberty. A Liberal League ought to be formed to carry out its principles wherever half a dozen earnest and resolute Liberals can be got together. Being convinced that the movement to secure compliance with these just "Demands" must surely, even if slowly, spread, I hope to make THE INDEX a means of furthering it; and I ask the assistance and active co-operation of every man and every woman who believes in it. Multiply Liberal Leagues everywhere, and report promptly the names of their Presidents and Secretaries. Intolerance and bigotry will tremble in proportion as that list grows. If freedom, justice, and reason are right, let their organized voice be heard like the sound of many waters.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

BOSTON, Sept. 1, 1873.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY A. W. S.

THE "GOVERNMENT" of this nation is scattered "all along shore," from Long Branch to Rye Beach.

EIGHTEEN THOUSAND women, in England, have just petitioned Mr. Disraeli for Woman Suffrage. How can he resist such a winsome appeal!

THERE is an "Independent Tract Society" in Clinton, Massachusetts, which issues some cheap liberal documents pertaining to reform in politics and religion. A. Briggs Davis is the manager of it.

WE ARE GLAD to learn that Prof. F. W. Clarke, late of Howard University, Washington, D. C., has been appointed to the chair of Chemistry in the Cincinnati University. Mr. Clarke is a member of the Parker Fraternity, and carries his principles with him wherever he goes.

WENDELL PHILLIPS is one of the Commissioners of lunacy in this State,—having recently been appointed by Gov. Talbot. His long experience as a "fanatic" may be of some use to him in this new position; for fanaticism and lunacy have, by all conservatives, been considered to mean pretty much the same thing.

IT IS ASTONISHING how near hearts may come together, even when the heads above them widely differ! We met, the other day, a venerable Doctor of Divinity, of the Unitarian persuasion, whom we had not seen for a long time; and his cordial "God bless you!" was as sweet to us as it could have been were we not an "awful heretic."

THE "centennial of chemistry," or the celebration of Joseph Priestley's discovery of oxygen one hundred years ago, was held in Northumberland, Pa., last Friday. A large number of the most prominent chemists in America were present. On the following day, in Birmingham, England, a marble statue representing Priestley discovering oxygen was unveiled and presented to the town by Professor Huxley.

REV. DR. BARTOL has his summer residence in Manchester, in this State. And it would seem that he has some theatrical neighbors; for Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Conway, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. John Gilbert, Mrs. D. P. Bowers, and others, have also summer residences in the same place. We have no doubt that liberal religion and the drama are able to live amicably together.

REV. W. M. BAKER writes to the Independent about "Peculiar Boston;" and he says: "The exact trouble in Boston, as in every other camp of unbelief, lies in this: that not a soul therein has anything to suggest as a substitute for Christianity; no, not the ghost of an available suggestion." We are much afraid that Mr. Baker does not improve his mind by reading THE INDEX. If he did, he would know that natural religion is modestly suggested as a substitute for Christianity.

THE POPE has got a new private chaplain, his former one having recently died. But what need at all has the pope of a private chaplain? Is he not a priest himself, and can he not say his own prayers? Or is the job of doing his private praying so enormous, that his holiness requires an assistant therein? The pope is the vicar of God, the representative of the second person in the Trinity,—and yet he must have a man to help him do his praying! We cannot see through it. If the infallible pope needs praying for, ought we not to offer a few prayers for God himself?

THE COMET has come and gone, and done it all so silently, too. While it was the occasion of a prodigious deal of talk in some circles on earth, and of no little curiosity and excitement beside, it held serenely on its way as though conscious of a destiny to fulfil. It came within twenty-six millions of miles of us, was the glory of our night-skies for a few evenings, and then quietly passed on. We thank it for having lifted up our eyes to the calm, deep heavens even for so brief a time, and for stirring up in our minds a wonder about the great mysteries that are concealed in the stellar spaces. We are glad that man does not know everything, and that the universe is full of impressive secrets before which we must ever wonder, and adore, and be humble.

ENGLAND, it appears, has all along been giving aid and comfort to the Carlist rebels against the Spanish republic; even as she did, in the time of our civil war, to the Southern rebels against the American Union. As in the former, so in the present case, her greed combined with her instinctive hatred of republicanism has led her to sell English-manufactured arms and ammunition to the plotters against popular government and free institutions in Spain; and the Carlists have prosecuted the warfare, which lately they have made so inhuman, largely through the assistance received from England. But England's day of judgment will come to her. Bradlaugh is on his native heath, and he means republicanism in England. Let us hope that that may come to pass by a peaceful revolution.

THE Liberal Christian says: "If anything is certain in the Unitarian body, it is that it means to be and is a Christian denomination." What an endless and needless "rumpus" there is about this word "Christian"! It is as hard to define as a white-black-bird. It will not stay defined; but now means one thing, and now another. Some men try in vain to get rid of it, and still some others appear to be in agony (as the Liberal Christian) lest it be taken away from them. The name is as troublesome to many as a mosquito. But for our part we do not intend to lose any sleep by it. If it lights on us, we will brush it off; and if it comes back, we will go about our business all the same. By-and-by it will become extinct, preserved only as a historic fossil; and then nobody will be annoyed by it; but all will observe it with what degree of interest may belong to it. In the meantime, let us be as patient of it, and tender with it, as may be.

THE COMMITTEE of the Agricultural Laborers' Union, in England, are negotiating easy terms of emigration to Canada for the "locked-out" farm laborers. What a suicidal policy is England pursuing in virtually compelling these yeomen of the nation,—its very bone and sinew,—to leave her shores forever! The time must surely come when she will bitterly rue her blind selfishness in this matter. The House of Commons has just voted an annual grant of $75,000 to Prince Leopold, "whose health," the prime minister said, "prevented him from adopting a profession,"—and at the same time hundreds and thousands of these poor farm laborers are in a state of semi-starvation, and are preparing to flee from their native shores to find even a chance to earn their own living! Princes must live in ease and affluence, says Christian England, but poor people may starve and die! Very good; England makes her choice. She chooses pauper princes, and drives from her soil her honest laborers. In the long run, the laborers can stand it better than she can.

IT IS A YEAR, lacking one month, since we have furnished "notes and comments" for these columns. During this time, whatever thought has suggested itself to us as interesting and important we have here put down; whatever has been said or done by others within the range of our observation, which we considered to have any bearing on radical problems, we have here remarked upon; and whatever theme or event we have felt moved each week gravely or humorously to speak of to the circle of INDEX readers, it is here, for the most part, that we have so spoken to them. We confess we have enjoyed this weekly chat with the readers of THE INDEX, and we venture to hope that it has not been wholly uninteresting to them. The making of good and readable paragraphs is a high art which we dare not presume to have mastered in any distinguished degree,—since it requires the rare ability to be brief, and at the same time pointed, lucid, and sententious; but, according to our opportunity and capacity, we have done the best we could. We shall not, however, undertake this task any longer, inasmuch as the increase of our clerical duties in the office will make it inconvenient for us hereafter to give the time to the reading of exchanges, and so forth, which has been required in the preparation of these "notes and comments." But, in occasional editorials, we hope still to keep up our communication with the readers of THE INDEX.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walters; Secretary, E. M. Bridgman.
WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—President, J. B. Bassett; Secretary, Anton Grethen.
NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Deed and Doctrine.

A DISCOURSE GIVEN IN THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

BY WILLIAM J. POTTER.

It is one of the common assumptions of popular theological thought that a special and miraculous revelation of divine truth was necessary, in order to save man from the consequences of his evil doings, and lead him into the path of practical duty. But there is a passage in the Fourth Gospel which says, "If any man will do God's will, he shall know of the doctrine;" and there are a good many other sayings that might be quoted from the New Testament, which imply that it is easier to understand a point of practical duty than a doctrinal truth addressed to the intellect,—that it is by doing the divine will that one may come to understand the mysteries of divine truth. If this saying be true, it reverses the process taught in the popular theology. It says we must do, then we shall know. So far from making a revelation of truth to the intellect a necessary and prerequisite condition for the performance of practical duty, it assumes that man has a knowledge of practical duty prior to the revelation, and teaches that faithfulness to this natural knowledge of what is right is an aid to the knowledge of what is true. In other words, this and kindred passages, which may be found in all religions, teach that the revelation which comes through the conscience, or moral sense, is prior to and more certain than any revelation that is addressed to the intellectual faculty. And it is in the direction of this thought that I would call your attention this morning,—the relation between the law of conscience and the law of reason, between doing and thinking, between morality and intellectual opinion. The subject, indeed, in one of its aspects, touches the questions, at this day discussed with so much energy, between science and faith. But I do not propose to enter these questions in this discourse, nor to go very much into the metaphysics of the subject, but to confine myself rather to a few points of common, every-day interest.

When it is claimed that the law of conscience is prior and superior to the thought or opinion of the intellect, an obvious objection is raised. Whence, it is asked, is conscience itself? Do not its commands imply some knowledge that is gained, or should be gained, through reason? Is not the conscience itself subject to culture, to enlightenment, to progress corresponding to the advance that is made in rational thought and opinion? What, indeed, is a worse guide than conscience divorced from reason, and culture, and knowledge? than conscience that pursues blindly some object which it is bent upon securing, and will not stop to listen to any arguments in opposition that may be derived from human experience, or from the liberal, enlightened, and thinking intellect? What has been more despotic, more cruel, what has caused more misery in the history of mankind, than the religious conscience? What persecutions, wars, malignities, barbarities, tortures, deaths, we may trace to it! And the bitterness of all this cruelty and wretchedness has not been assuaged, because the perpetrators thought they were verily doing God service. Their guilt was doubtless less than it would have been if they had committed the acts in the service of their own selfish ambitions and lusts. But can this fact, that they followed conscience, make their conduct absolutely right and just? Was there not some other standard of right by which their consciences would have to be judged,—if not then and there on the spot, at least somewhere? Do not our consciences to-day—does not the conscience of the civilized world to-day—condemn their consciences? Whence then the light that has made our consciences superior to theirs? Whence the power that thus comes to modify the voice of conscience itself? Does it not come from the increase of knowledge, from the greater supremacy of reason, from more broad and cultivated views? In a word, is it not clear that human conscience changes, progresses, grows, takes its character and gives its commands, according to the condition, as to ignorance or knowledge, breadth or narrowness, rationality or superstition, of the human intellect?

It is evident from these questions, and the argument included under them, that when it is said that the law of conscience is prior and superior to the thought or opinion of the intellect, the statement cannot be made in any such absolute sense as that conscience is, and ought to be, wholly independent of reason and culture. There is certainly no such thing in human history as an absolutely infallible conscience. Conscience is changeable, progressive, subject to light and darkness, like all other human faculties. We may say that conscience is the highest guide that man has, and that whatever the voice of any man's conscience may dictate, that voice, for the time, to that man is supreme, and must be followed,—we may say this, and yet not say that any human conscience is the highest guide in the universe. The best human conscience, the finite moral sense that voices itself under the best possible conditions, can make only an approximation to the absolute and eternal right. Whatever opens the intellect, emancipates reason, enlarges the bounds of knowledge, widens the sympathies, broadens the vision, quickens the heart, that also elevates, refines, improves the conscience. Conscience is no immutable, everlasting law, pronouncing the same commands yesterday, to-day, and forever, subject to "no variableness nor shadow of turning"; but conscience in man, both in the individual and in the race, is a progressive, improvable, growing faculty. This must certainly be admitted. And when it is said that, "if we do the will of God, we shall come to know the doctrine," it must not be understood that knowing has nothing to do with our doing; that acting does not depend at all on thinking; that morality may be safely divorced from reason; that, if a man says he must follow his conscience, and his conscience directs him thus and so, he has no further responsibility for his conduct, but may let his conscience remain uncultivated, narrow, bigoted, so only he follow it. There is at least one kind of knowledge that a man must have before he can do the divine will. He must know something of what that will is. He must have some perception of the divine thought and purpose. And, though it may not require so much close thinking and reasoning to understand a divine purpose and aim as it does to grasp some definite doctrine of the divine nature, yet who will venture to say that a good many kinds of knowledge do not enter into our perception of what we call the Divine Will; in other words, into our perception of those laws, tendencies, moral gravitations, which we observe in Nature and humanity, and which embody for us the Supreme Aim of the universe? Conscience is a faculty that says do the right,—and go otherwise at your peril. Yet, to determine what is the right, knowledge, culture, reason, thought, must be called to the aid of the moral sense. Conscience must govern, but the other faculties must bring the help of their wisdom that the government may be enlightened and just in the broadest sense.

The statement, then, that the law of conscience is prior and superior to the law of intellect, must be thus explained and modified. If in one sense doing is a necessary condition of knowing, in another sense knowing is a necessary condition of doing. There is a mutual relation between the two—between doing the right and knowing the truth—between correct conduct and correct knowledge; and we cannot say that either is absolutely independent of the other.

Yet there is a very important sense in which this statement of the supremacy of the moral sentiment remains true,—its supremacy, not its absolute independence; a very important sense in which it is true that the perception of the right precedes and commands intellectual perception, and in which the doing of the right opens the way to a clearer understanding of truth. And in the principle which we here touch lies one of the most assuring and comforting facts connected with the history and experience of mankind.

Let me, then, illustrate what I mean by the supremacy of moral perception over intellectual perception. Take, for example, the moral sentiment of human brotherhood,—the sentiment that fraternal love and good-will should be the bond of human society. The first important fact to note is that we find some expression of this sentiment under the most diverse forms of thought, philosophy, religion, race. This central principle of society, though it may not yet have anywhere come to full fruition, does not seem to have been dependent on any specific doctrines of religion or system of philosophy. You find it in the far East where Confucius said that "in the word reciprocity we have a rule of practice for all one's life," and one of his disciples added, "The chief thing is in having the heart right, and in loving one's neighbor as oneself." Pythagoras proclaimed "the love of all to all." Zoroaster thought the same in Persia. The old Hebrew lawgiver wrote, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and Jesus endorsed, emphasized, and specially illustrated the same truth. Cicero taught it, when he said, "The law imprinted in the hearts of all men is to love the members of society as themselves;" and Seneca, in the declaration "that Nature planted in us a mutual love, and fitted us for a social life. We must consider that we are born for the good of the whole." So this grand, moral sentiment of human brotherhood appears in connection with the most various theological beliefs, in connection with the most various intellectual conceptions of the universe,—appears ages apart, and in countries separated by thousands of miles; in heathenism, Judaism, Christianity, in monotheism and polytheism; in connection with dreadful idolatries and superstitions, and in connection, also, with pure spiritual faiths. There may be a good deal of difference, looking at different countries and ages, in the practical application of the sentiment. We may trace an advance, historically, in the realization of the idea of human brotherhood. But the idea itself has found expression, in some shape, among every people, and in connection with every form of belief of which we have any historical record. Here, certainly, is one point where a moral sentiment can claim supremacy over intellectual perception,—a larger domain, a more ample following than any theological dogma, or so-called special revelation, can command.

But there is another very instructive fact in connection with this same moral sentiment of human brotherhood. It might be illustrated by other moral sentiments, but more clearly, perhaps, with this. In the last two or three hundred years various and rival systems of philosophy have appeared, professing to account for this and other of the moral sentiments. There is the Utilitarian theory, advocated by Hume, and represented to-day, in a modified form, by the late John Stuart Mill, which affirms that this social sentiment of human brotherhood, as the moral sense in general, rests at bottom on the experience of what has been found useful to human welfare. Then there is the theory which Adam Smith once advanced, and which Darwin appears to take up to-day, by which the obligation of philanthropy and brotherhood is made to grow out of "social sympathy,"—social sympathy being now referred back again to the necessity, in the human and ante-human struggle for existence, that individuals should band together for the common defence. There is also the pure intuitional or transcendental theory, which supposes the philanthropic sentiment to be the direct inspiration or indwelling of divinity in the human soul; and again the ecclesiastical theory, which alleges that the command, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," rests upon an outward, miraculous revelation; and still again, there are the followers of Comte, who believe in no God and no revelation, who acknowledge themselves atheists, and who yet believe so firmly and preëminently in the sentiment of human brotherhood, which they hold to have been developed through experience and reason, that on this sentiment they construct a religion, and in collective humanity find a supreme being for worship. Now, the point that I would make is, that in all these differing and contradictory philosophies, striving in such various ways to account for the sentiment of human brotherhood, the sentiment itself exists. It is prior to the philosophies. It helps furnish them their sustenance; it brings the food of their speculations. And, what is more, though the sentiment has been so critically analyzed, and so differently, and, as we may think, irrationally, accounted for, it has never been denied. There have been philosophers who thought religion only a superstition, and who have denied the existence of God; there are schools of philosophy that reject the doctrine of intuition, and deny that metaphysical theories can have any basis in truth; but not a sect, nor school, nor a man among them, has denied the sentiment of human brotherhood, and sought theoretically to overthrow it. So surely established is this article of moral faith, so supreme on its throne, so independent of this or that theological faith, or this or that intellectual mode of interpreting the facts of the universe! Comte, and Mill, and Spencer, dreadful heretics as they are deemed, have been as vigorous advocates of measures that concern the well-being, and promise to promote the more equal fellowship, of humanity, as they could have been had they held to the most Orthodox creeds.

And what I have here said for the sake of illustration of the sentiment of philanthropy may be said with equal truth of the moral sentiments in general. The sentiments of purity, of justice, of honor, of integrity, of generosity, of sincerity—the very bulwarks of character,—appear essentially the same, though associated with the various phases of belief or of non-belief. You expect to find these moral traits accompanying what is commonly regarded a sound and safe religious faith, but you find them no less among sceptics, doubters, and disbelievers,—a revolution in theological opinion working little or no change in the moral nature. Nay, it may truthfully be said that those who are latitudinarian in opinion, if they are so not merely from indifference, or by inheritance, but through their own earnest inquiry and thought, are more apt to possess a vigorous moral nature than are those who depend for acceptance with God on the soundness of their creed. Believing that nothing but character can stand, it behooves them to make character sure,—knowing that they have no cloak of opinion to wrap about them to cover up a faulty life.

And so I am not concerned if I see people, even the young, going down into the valley of doubt, becoming sceptical of old and established beliefs, and inclined to probe all the great religious problems to the bottom,—provided only that they hold, as such earnest inquirers almost invariably do, to the great sanctities of the moral law. Faithfulness to duty, sincerity of heart, truthfulness in conduct, fidelity to conviction at whatever sacrifice,—these are articles of a practical faith that will do more to save a man's soul than will all the articles of the ecclesiastical creeds traditionally held, however piously they may be repeated. And, on the other hand, the doubt and infidelity that is really a dangerous element in modern society is infidelity to the law of virtue; the infidelity that may piously repeat every morning the Ten Commandments for their ecclesiastical antiquity, and break every day the moral obligations contained in them; the infidelity that violates purity, human confidence, domestic honor, the sanctities of truth and justice, love and charity. It is infidelity like this that the young—and, alas, too many of the old—need to be most warned against to-day. To lose faith in Providence may be sad; to lose faith in the moral law is ruin.

As a recent specimen of the faith that puts knowledge of the doctrine first, look at this: When the American consul at Santiago de Cuba was trying to stay the barbarously cruel execution of the prisoners captured in the Virginius, his efforts were baffled by his inability to get any reply to his communications to the Spanish general in command at the port. At length, after three letters had been sent, and twenty-four hours of the most painful waiting had passed, that officer answered, with an apology which was also a rebuke, that the consul ought to have known that it was a day of religious festival, and that he (the general) and all other servants of the government were given up to "meditation on the divine mysteries," so that no secular business could be performed. And since saving men from hanging was secular, they were not saved. Here, certainly, was a case where the natural humanity of mankind would agree to say that it were better to postpone the attempt to know the "divine mysteries" for an effort to do an act of human justice and mercy. By the side of this case put another—the case of one who doubted all knowledge of the "divine mysteries," but had an intense desire to do something good for his fellow-men,—and see to which of the two pictures our hearts will give their preference. While writing this discourse, my eye chanced to rest upon the written confession of one who had been passing through the depths of mental doubt, going down to the very bottom of the most sacred beliefs to test them all over anew. And out of it all there was pressed the utterance of this noble thought: "The nearest that I come to any definition of what 'faith' is, I think I can state in these words,—consecration of character to the noblest and best there is in us, to real interest and real endeavor in the great work of humanity. And I, even I, weak and doubting, and so blind I can scarcely see a step before me—just a little glimmer here and there, just a faint knowledge of the universal call to human freedom,—why, it is painful to me to think I should do nothing for humanity. And so I am trying to think how I can work, what influences I can send out and upward, and how, by doing for others, I shall myself come into clearer light.' There, in the tremulous confessions of doubt, we may detect the accents of an earnest, strong, and fruitful faith; and there is the very doctrine of my discourse,—that, by doing the right, one shall come to know the truth.

And this leads me to the closing thought of the theme,—that, not only does the moral sense have a supremacy over intellectual perception, but simple, faithful obedience to moral duty actually clears the mental vision, and enables one to obtain larger views of truth. I do not mean, of course, that goodness can take the place of thinking; that virtuous intentions can do the work of knowledge; that a philanthropic heart can atone for narrowness of thought and bigotry of creed. On the contrary, I believe no little practical harm is done both to religion and morality, and also to philanthropy, by a class of persons who have the utmost amiability of heart, but whose amiability is combined with weak-mindedness and intellectual short-sightedness. What I have said of the importance of thought and culture in the education of the moral sentiment must still be borne in mind; and, also, that benevolence needs knowledge for its guidance. At the same time, it is true that to enter sincerely and heartily into any field of earnest labor for human welfare; to give oneself to any humane work; to become interested in others' good; to allow the benevolent sentiments of one's nature full freedom to shape the character and conduct,—this surely tends to enlarge the intellectual vision, and to clear up many problems in metaphysical speculation that have been dark and puzzling. Again and again we may have seen the intellectual doubter, the theological sceptic, come up out of the valley of doubt and despair, by this path of the heart's love and philanthropy, to a higher, broader plain of truth, and to a sweet trust in the universal goodness. It is a bad symptom if the doubter seems inclined to stay with his doubts, to dwell upon them and with them, to confine himself to inquiry and speculation on metaphysical problems, and to let the calls of the moral sentiments pass by unheeded. That betrays morbidness and may end in disease. Yet even then Nature is more likely to bring the true remedy than any art of the ecclesiastical sort. Patience, trust, appeals to the moral sentiments, stimulation of the heart's noblest impulses and aspirations,—these can seldom fail with any ingenuous and earnest soul. We can hardly put too much trust in the native generous sentiments of the heart; they can hardly be appealed to too strongly; and they rarely fail to answer the appeal, especially in youth. However selfish we may be by nature or by breeding, there is yet something in every one of us that responds to a rightly put appeal for magnanimity, for integrity, for chastity, for truthfulness, for generosity, for noble and useful living. And here, after all, are the great safeguards of character,—the great safeguards, also, of faith. Out of the heart, not out of the brain, are the best issues of life. And many a one who has not been able to find God, or to construct any satisfactory doctrine concerning him, through speculations of the intellect, has found him by the path of that old beatitude,—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God,"—have seen him not as a visible being standing before their outward eyes, nor comprehended him, perhaps, as an infinite person by their intellectual faculty, but found him in the inner consciousness of their hearts, through the vitalizing impulses of that energy of goodness which is the fulfilling of every law of duty.

[For The Index.]

"THE PHŒNIX SAYS 'NO.'"

There reverberates in my ears, from time to time, the unique utterance of Dr. Bartol, at the Radical Club last winter, "The Phœnix says 'No.'" It seems to emphasize the truth that the "Nature of Things," which you have presented in your essay upon "Scientific Ethics" as the basis of morals, cannot be trespassed upon with impunity in any of the departments of Nature's domain, whether physical or moral, intellectual or spiritual. The lapse of time between the violation and its penalty, together with many other subtile causes, may conceal temporarily the inexorable law of connection; but yet, though far from being governed by its truth, the common conviction of mankind upon the subject has formed itself into the comprehensive proverb, "Murder will out."

An illustration of the principle is seen in the terrible Mill River disaster, where physical law was disregarded in the construction of the dam. But Nature, true to her eternal laws, was all the time, slowly though unseen, asserting her supremacy, till at last the catastrophe in all its horrors suddenly burst forth, and in this case the innocent were the chief victims. Perhaps it is inevitable that the innocent should always suffer with the guilty in all cases of violated law. So much the greater responsibility for each individual to live and act according to the strictest principles of rectitude. The present miserable condition of South Carolina and other slave States is an instance of the workings of the same principle. The sacredness of personal liberty was long trespassed upon, and in the nature of things it must have its revenge; or, more correctly speaking, it was impossible that, in the long run, injustice should have rule. So, as immutable justice marches on in the reassertion of her rights, it is inevitable that chaos and misery should for the time follow in her train. The same principle applies to all attempts to conceal crime, to profess innocence when conscious guilt is rankling at the heart, or to allow odium to be thrown upon another to screen one's self. A thousand-fold better the truth, whatever it may be, than ignoble and guilty subterfuges to hide it. The Phœnix, true to Dr. Bartol, sooner or later pronounces her emphatic "No."

It seems evident that all efforts at reform, not based on this underlying nature of things, must in the end prove futile. Few, if any, of the benevolent exertions for the improvement of society seem to be grounded on this Foundation Rock. There seems to be a pressing need that attention should be more and more directed into this channel of inquiry, and of action based upon it. The only hope for the realization in time to come of the highest of which mankind is capable lies in the fact that the generations, as they rise, shall be so thoroughly instructed in the principles of universal, unchangeable law, and shall be made to see so clearly the impossibility that transgression should not be followed by evil and misery, that the motives for conformity will far outweigh any temptations to what must of necessity be only a self-deception for mere temporary indulgence; and thus all may come voluntarily to choose, not only as their duty but their pleasure and highest interest, to chime in harmoniously with those perfect laws whose observance would constitute a music of humanity vastly more grand than that imagined of the spheres of heaven.

A. H.

A REMARKABLE CHURCH.

COSMIAN HALL IN FLORENCE, MASS.

A SOCIETY WHICH PERMITS ABSOLUTE FREEDOM OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF—BUT ONE COVENANT OF UNION—UNIFORMITY OF THEOLOGICAL BELIEF NEITHER DEMANDED NOR EXPECTED—A MEDLEY OF SPIRITUALISTS, MATERIALISTS, AND FORMER ORTHODOX CHURCH MEMBERS—ITS LIST OF MINISTERS AND TOPICS DISCUSSED.

About a generation ago, an epidemic of Socialism ran through various parts of the United States. The famous Brook Farm, near Boston, from which Hawthorne took the idea of his Blithedale Romance, is a well-known illustration. But it is not, perhaps, generally known that elsewhere throughout the country were originated many similar movements, less known of course, as they had less celebrated participators; but none the less interesting to one who happens to stumble upon their remains. The associations or communities themselves have almost wholly disappeared, but they have frequently been the progenitors of remarkable children; and, in not a few towns in New England, very many traces of their influence may be seen, either in still existing customs or, as is more common, in the general intellectual and moral tone which pervades the whole society of the place.

A COMMUNITY THAT FELL TO PIECES.

A little more than thirty years ago a community, under the name of "The Association of Education and Industry," purchased a large tract of land in the town of Northampton, Mass., and began once more the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth. In a sheltered valley of this tract of land, on the edge of a small stream, stood a large, ill-looking, brick building, now part of a cotton factory, built originally for the manufacture of sewing-silk. Of this building the community took possession, nearly all the members living within its walls, in one large, happy family, and continuing the manufacture of sewing-silk, while a few of the members lived outside, carrying on farming, and others experimented in the raising of mulberry trees for silk-worms. A very few years only, not more than four or five, the association lasted. Then the serpent, or more properly a number of serpents, in the form of various dissensions, entered the garden, and the community went to pieces. When we consider how brief was its life, it is astonishing to learn how widely spread now are the nerves of influence which proceeded from this association. Talking with the half-dozen elderly members who still linger on the spot, they will tell you of other still living members, scattered from New York to California. Noted clergymen in metropolitan pulpits, well-known physicians, teachers, bankers, were once members, or children of members, of the association; and not a few celebrated names once belonged to little boys who slept in the loft of the old community building. The casual visitor to-day would learn nothing of these things. The thriving manufacturing village of Florence now covers the land of the former association. A cotton factory, a silk factory, a sewing-machine factory, and other like establishments, combine to give the general appearance of the ordinary factory village of New England. It is a village of the town of Northampton (Beecher's Norwood), the thickly-settled part of the town being about two and one-half miles distant, and appropriating to itself, naturally, the name of the township.

Northampton, once the scene of the labors of Jonathan Edwards, is a typical New England town in every respect. It is proud of its aristocracy, proud of its intelligence, proud of its traditions, and proud of its Puritan theology. Its busy little neighbor, to which it presents so strong a contrast in many respects, is, it is to be feared, very much like a thorn in the side of its staid and respectable elder sister. Taking a horse-car in front of the old Edwards Church, a short ride between rows of noble elms places the main part of the town behind us; crossing an open meadow, and slowly climbing a long, steep grade to a level plain, we are abreast of the shops of the Florence Sewing Machine Company. Then for the first time we notice, some distance in front of us, admirably situated in a fork of the road, and apparently blocking the way, so that it unavoidably attracts attention, a large, fine-looking, brick building. As we approach a well-proportioned tower, with bell and clock, a noble porch and vestibule, are distinctive features; and on a still nearer approach we read, on a brown-stone tablet across the front wall, the name—Cosmian Hall. Enter the village from almost any direction and this building first attracts attention as the most prominent object there. Indeed, it would attract attention anywhere. I am told, on good authority, that with the exception, perhaps, of the opera house at Pittsfield, this is one of the finest and most noticeable buildings in Western Massachusetts, while internally it is fitted up in a style which surpasses anything in the neighboring city of Springfield. That which makes it more remarkable is the apparent loneliness of the situation.

AN ORIGINAL CLASS OF THINKERS LEFT.

When the old community broke up, a number of the members remained on the spot, and engaged in various occupations. Being generally persons of marked though eccentric individuality, it is their leaven which has leavened the now flourishing village which has gradually grown up around them. On the principle that "birds of a feather flock together," there probably came into the place, by natural attraction, an unusual number of persons of similar temperaments to those already there. Despisers of conventional manners and conventional ideas, thoroughly convinced that they were right and the rest of the world all wrong, they have always been inclined to take extreme positions on all political, social, and theological questions. Universally abolitionists, they gave asylum to all runaway slaves, and an unusual number of colored people, in proportion to the population, is still to be found there. Absolute social democrats and ready recipients of new ideas, all reformers, or pretended reformers, have been welcomed and listened to. In fact, I suspect, from guarded admissions made by some with whom I have talked, that Florence was at one time a sort of stumping-ground for all people with "bees in their bonnets," who could not find hearers anywhere else. Phrenological lecturers, abolitionist orators, temperance haranguers, socialistic reformers, transcendentalists, materialists, spiritualists,—all were made welcome and thanked, and paid alike for profit or imposition. But wisdom has come by much experience, and though the people are ready as ever to receive a new idea, or listen to a new speaker, there are probably few places where a quack or pretender of any kind would be sooner recognized at his true value than in this little village.

I cannot learn that there has ever been the slightest attempt, or even desire, to revive practically the former millennial dream. The failure seems to have been too complete. But about ten or twelve years ago a society was regularly organized, which elsewhere would be called a religious society, or church; but just what to call it, without offending some of its members, I really do not know. Some consistent come-outers have always objected to the use of the word "church;" others have conscientious scruples against employing the word "religion," contending that it has too long been associated with superstition to be free from taint. All, however, have signed the following article of agreement, upon which the organization is based, and which may be taken as the theological or religious creed of the present society:—

"Respecting in each other and in all the right of intellect and conscience to be free, and holding it to be the duty of every one to keep his mind and heart at all times open to receive the truth and follow its guidance, we set up no theological condition of membership, and neither demand nor expect uniformity of doctrinal belief, asking only unity of purpose to seek and accept the right and true, and an honest aim and effort to make these the rule of life; and, recognizing the brotherhood of the human race, and the equality of human rights, we make no distinction as to the conditions and rights of membership in this society on account of sex, or color, or nationality."

This does not read much like the Westminster Confession, or the Thirty-nine Articles; but on this creed, if creed it can be called, was organized "The Free Congregational Society of Florence," the society which, after a successful decade of life, has just completed the handsome building spoken of above. The above article of agreement is inscribed on a slab of white marble, and inserted in the wall within the porch and just over the large entrance doors.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL WHERE SCIENCE IS TAUGHT.

But the practical working of the society is, of course, the point of real interest. And this is truly more peculiar than anything else about it, and stamps the society as the only one of its kind, in many respects, in the country. Two sessions, or services, or meetings, are held each Sunday—one in the morning, a Sunday-school for the children, and one in the afternoon for the older people. Upon a recent visit to the Sunday-school, I could not see that it differed greatly in appearance from many other Sunday-schools which I have seen elsewhere. The superintendent, a lady, a teacher in one of the town schools, played upon the melodeon, led the singing of the children, read lessons, and attended to the other usual duties of a superintendent. The children sang hymns, repeated moral sentiments in unison, declaimed pieces, etc. But the class exercises are unlike those of other schools. There is no catechism, or other lesson-book, anywhere in use. The teachers read stories to the younger scholars, and talk with them, while among the older scholars I found one class of girls reciting in physiology, and another in botany; a class of boys studying phonography, under the tuition of a lawyer; a large class of young ladies and gentlemen reading Shakspeare, under the leadership of a lady; and another large class of ladies and gentlemen, called the adult class, the members of which discuss all kinds of social and theological questions, especially the latter. The teacher, or chairman, of this last class is a gentleman whose philosophy evidently borders closely on materialism, and I think most church members would probably call him an infidel. To a casual visitor the most striking feature of the school is a negative one,—the absence of any prayer or benediction in form.

In the afternoon meeting, however, we find the real society. Here all its peculiarities come out in full force. As seated, awaiting the beginning of the exercises, it cannot be said that the congregation presents any external peculiarity to distinguish it from the average New England audience. Quiet, orderly, wide-awake, well-dressed, "eminently respectable" in every particular, it might be deposited in any Evangelical church, and would seem perfectly in keeping with the surroundings. But a knowledge of the persons present would develop many curious facts. Here, for instance, is a white-haired, venerable looking man (the father of a judge and of a college professor), who is a most enthusiastic believer in modern Spiritualism. Near him, on the same row of seats, is another white-haired, good-looking man, who is also an advocate of the same faith, while sandwiched between the two is a gray-bearded man, a cross between a merchant and a poet in appearance, who utterly scouts the idea of the existence of any spirits whatever, ancient or modern—a thoroughgoing materialist. It is curious to see men whose philosophy is so far apart sit together, take part together in the same exercises, and apparently enjoy together the same discourses. I am informed that in twelve years of membership in the same society there has been no jar on account of difference of opinion, but that the privileges of all are equally respected. But it would be a great mistake to suppose that the congregation is made up only of Spiritualists and Materialists. Were this the case, it would hardly be worth writing about. In fact, these are in a minority. Unitarians, Universalists, and Theists are sprinkled about; Methodists, Baptists, and Orthodox Congregationalists are frequently to be found present, and quite recently, I am told, it was remarked that all the Orthodox deacons in the place were in attendance at a special service. Of course the regular members of the Society are none of them thoroughly Evangelical. In reply to my inquiry whether there were any such in regular attendance, I was told of one lady who had come steadily for seven years, but she, it was charitably supposed, must be slightly insane. Quite largely, however, the present members have been formerly connected with Evangelical churches, and have been excommunicated for various heresies of belief. Of the older members this is true with hardly an exception.

A SOCIETY OF THE UNORTHODOX.

Many were thus cast out, or came out, thirty odd years ago or more, when Anti-Slavery sentiments first began to invade the quiet of the churches. Largely, of course, they were members of the Orthodox Congregational churches of Massachusetts and Connecticut, but many were Baptists—the President of the Society is an ex-Baptist deacon,—others were Quakers, some of the Church of England, a few Roman Catholics, and one couple, at least, were brought up by, and ran away from, the Shakers. Eccentric characters abound, quite as a matter of course. A brisk, shrewd-looking old gentleman is a fanatic on the subject of tobacco. The remotest allusion to tobacco in a public meeting is sure to bring the old man to his feet with a ready fling against the weed. Another rather curious character is a man who was imprisoned in Kentucky for seventeen years, for assisting a fugitive slave. When released by the coming of the Northern army, he naturally gravitated to Florence, where he opened a baker's shop. One of the leaders of the Society is a vegetarian, who for many years has not tasted meat, tea, coffee, cocoa, or alcoholic drink of any kind. His children have been brought up in harmony with the teachings of vegetarianism, and in his household is dispensed a charming hospitality, which if not spiritual is certainly not animal. These and other eccentric characters, of course, do not represent the average member of the Society, who is, for all the world, just like the average member of any other society.

The officiating minister enters and takes his seat in the desk, as in any church, and here we note at once a peculiarity. He may be the regular minister of the Society, or a stranger from any part of the country. The regular minister of the Society, or resident-speaker, as he is called, does not speak regularly; formerly he did not speak more than one-quarter or one-half the time, but lately this proportion has been increased to about three-fourths. The remaining Sundays are given to any person who has, or who is supposed to have, something to say which the Society may desire to hear. Although the speakers are engaged by an Executive Committee, chosen annually, yet an intimation from any member that he or she would like to hear a certain person is usually sufficient to secure the presence of that person, provided he is willing to come. In connection with this, I cannot do better than give an extract from a published report of the Executive Committee of a few years ago:—

"During the past year our resident-minister has occupied the desk on twenty Sundays. The Society has also been favored with the services of the following speakers:—

"A. T. Foss, J. V. Blake, James F. Lyman, Susannah L. Kilburn, Frederic Frothingham, John Savary, A. Bronson Alcott, Henry C. Wright, Francis E. Abbot, Lucy Stone, Aaron M. Powell, Edward C. Towne, Theodore D. Weld, Fanny B. Felton, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Horace Seaver, Wm. Wells Brown, John T. Sargent, Wm. H. Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, William Denton, Josiah P. Quincy, Sallie Holley, Olympia Brown, John B. Marvin, Josephine A. Ellery, Wm. L. Jenkins, and John B. Beach."

It will be noticed at once that there are very few obscure names in the above list, while some of them belong to the really great men and women of America. The average speaking to which regular attendants listen is certainly far above the average of our ordinary churches, in intellectual quality at least. It will be noted also that only a portion of the above names belong to ordained ministers.

RESIDENT-MINISTERS, MEN AND WOMEN.

The first resident-speaker of the Society, Chas. C. Burleigh, who occupied that position for many years, was never ordained as a minister at all. Brother of the poet, Wm. H. Burleigh, educated for a lawyer, a man of remarkably logical mind, a ready speaker and good scholar, he forsook law in early years to join the Anti-Slavery movement, and became one of the pioneer leaders of the Abolitionists, coming to Florence first to speak on his favorite subject. A man of strong sympathies, thoroughly respected by all who know him, he might nevertheless well head the list of eccentric characters to be seen here. By his slovenly inattention to the requirements of civilized dress he has doubtless done much to injure his own influence and increase local prejudice against the Society. He adds to this misfortune another eccentricity in the style of wearing his hair, which he parts in the middle and allows to flow down to his shoulders in a profusion of ringlets which many a young belle might envy. As he is a tall, large man, his appearance at times is singularly striking. When washed and dressed, it is claimed by his friends that he presents a remarkable resemblance to some of the old pictures of Christ, and his enemies, of course, accuse him of aping the resemblance. A year ago Mr. Burleigh went West, and is now preaching for an independent society in Bloomington, Ill. Associated with Mr. Burleigh for a year, as assistant resident-speaker, was Miss Powell, formerly a teacher in Vassar College, who, before her year was out, lost her heart to a young lawyer, and forsook the pulpit for matrimony. Miss Powell was of Quaker education. She still lives in the place, but has retired into the oblivion of private life. The present resident-speaker is a young man named Rowland Connor, brought up in New York City, and a graduate, I believe, of the College of the City of New York. He was at one time associate minister of the large and wealthy School Street Society of Boston, being colleague of the Rev. Dr. Miner, President of Tufts College; but he became heretical in his theological views, was excommunicated by both church and denomination, and after preaching for a few years over an independent society in Boston came to Florence about two years ago.

INFORMAL WAY OF CONDUCTING SERVICES.

The exercises begin in any way the speaker may choose. This is literally true. There is no such thing as a regular order of services. Of course the resident-speakers have had their ways, from which they did not as a rule greatly depart. But, nevertheless, it is true that any order of exercises is wholly in order which may be agreeable to the speaker. It is the favorite boast of the Society that it maintains an absolutely free platform, and any speaker whom they consider worthy to invite to occupy it is considered to understand best what he may wish to say or do, and is free to prepare his own order without direction on the part of the Society. To illustrate this, the present resident-speaker relates the following: When he visited Florence for the first time, a number of years ago, he arrived in the village late Saturday evening, having accepted an invitation to speak the following day. Accustomed to the formality of Sunday observances in Boston, he naturally inquired of his host concerning the order of Sunday service. "Whatever you may desire," was the puzzling answer. "But have you no regular order?" "No, none at all." Not quite satisfied, as may well be imagined, the visitor pushed his questions further. "You have reading from the Bible, I suppose?" "Sometimes we do; you will find a Bible in the desk, if you wish to use one." "Do you have prayer offered?" "You can offer prayer if you wish." "You have hymns sung, certainly?" "We have a choir who will sing if you wish." This conversation illustrates literally the position of the Society with regard to Sunday services to-day. The speaker may read from the Bible, or from some other book, or not read at all; he may offer prayer, or omit prayer entirely; he may select hymns to be sung, or not do so; he may pronounce a benediction, or do nothing of the kind. Sometimes a speaker will simply enter the desk, deliver his discourse, and walk out again. With men not originally educated for the ministry this procedure is quite common, and the choir, in these cases, will generally prepare an introductory anthem to relieve the speaker from the embarrassment of opening the meeting. As any other reading may be given in place of the usual Scripture reading, it is not uncommon to hear selections read from Whittier, Lowell, Martineau, Spencer, Mill, the sacred books of the great Eastern religions, etc. Even monthly magazines and newspapers are not wholly discarded. In the discourses there is a wide departure, of course, from the usual run of Sunday topics. Immediately following the list of names which I quoted from one of the annual reports of the Executive Committee of the Society is this paragraph:—

"Among the topics discussed by these speakers may be named Physiology; France, its Government and Policy; Temperance; Origin and Antecedents of the African Race; Woman Suffrage; National Affairs; Spiritualism; Revivals; The Evils of Indiscriminate Suffrage; Cause and Cure of Poverty; The Defects of our Common School System; The Church, the Bible, and both sides of the great question of Immortality."

When we remember the names of the men and women by whom these questions were discussed, it is evident that strong intellectual digestion must be needed to attend regularly the weekly meetings of this Society.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND OF DEBATE.

Another marked peculiarity of these meetings must not be omitted. As every speaker is understood to exercise unlimited freedom of speech, logical consistency requires him to accord the same privilege to those who listen. And this privilege is frequently used. Strange indeed does it seem to one accustomed only to church formality and deference, when the minister has finished his sermon, to see some one rise in the audience and formally approve what has been said, or decidedly object to certain positions, or proceed to question the minister with regard to some of his statements. This privilege of reply, strange as it may seem, I am told has never been abused. Sometimes the debate which follows a sermon will be of far more interest than the sermon itself; sometimes only a question or two will be asked, or a suggestion offered; sometimes, for many weeks together, nothing will be said on the part of the audience. This feature of the exercises has been strongly objected to by many friends of the Society, but nothing could induce the members to give it up. "It makes ministers more careful," they say, "does away with a great deal of dogmatism," "and is in full accord with every principle of true democracy." No minister need ever fear that he will be discourteously treated, whatever he may say, but he may well consider carefully his intended address to people who have had years of practice in critical listening. The criticism is not captious, but frequently encouraging, especially in the case of young men.

The above must suffice at present for a description of the peculiar people who have just finished the handsome building named Cosmian Hall. I have already referred briefly to the external appearance of the building. Passing up a flight of broad steps, through the porch and vestibule, we enter the main audience room. The walls and ceiling of this room have been heavily and elaborately frescoed in every part, while rich stained glass windows add to the effect of the coloring. The painting on doors and balcony is in light colors, contrasting with the frescoing. Portraits, real and ideal, adorn the walls, and one may remark Humboldt and Rubens side by side on the lower arch of the ceiling, while directly opposite to them, in curious juxtaposition, are Shakspeare and John Brown. But, after all, this curious medley is typical of the living medley on the floor below. Pews have been discarded, and the seats, arranged in curves and on a slight incline, are exceedingly comfortable chairs, of a pattern between an arm-chair and an opera-seat. A heavy maroon curtain falls behind the pulpit, and when this is raised the church is, as by magic, converted into a cosy and charming theatre. This arrangement has been perfected for the accommodation of a dramatic association connected with the Society, so that the church on Sunday may become a concert-room or theatre on a week-day. Below this main audience-room is another large room, having a separate entrance on the outside of the building, intended for the use of the Sunday-school and for social entertainments. Opening from this room are large class-rooms, also intended for the school and for singing societies. In the opposite direction, on the same floor, are handsome parlors for the ladies' sewing and benevolent societies, while a large kitchen is fitted up with every convenience for the preparation of supper and entertainment of guests. Closets, pantries, etc., complete the arrangements of this floor, below which is an enormous cellar, with furnaces, gas-works, etc. The building is certainly unique, and almost perfect of its kind, whatever may be thought of the kind.

Curious questions unavoidably arise when we reflect upon this strange society. Is it only Puritanism gone to seed?—or is it the legitimate outcome of Protestant free thought and religious liberty? This last is the claim of the Society itself, a claim, of course, which will be derided by an immense majority of the religious people of the country. Whatever it is, it seems to be now a strong, earnest, active existence, which cannot be blown away by ridicule. I commend this religious curiosity to the attention of those competent to deal with the problems it presents.

R. W. L.

FLORENCE, Mass, July 11, 1874.

—N. Y. Tribune.

THE PLACE OF SENTIMENT IN PHILOSOPHY.

BY G. H. LEWES.

Our survey of the sources and limitations of knowledge would be manifestly incomplete if it omitted the element of sentiment, or emotion, which obviously plays a considerable part in the construction of social and religious theories, and less obviously, but yet demonstrably, in the construction of even common perceptions. It cannot, therefore, be excluded from the data of a philosophy which aims at explaining the world, man, and society. The purpose of knowledge being to regulate conduct, and the nature of knowledge being that of virtual feeling, the importance of sentiment, both as regulative and representative, is indisputable. None but shrivelled souls, with narrow vision of the facts of life, can entertain the notion that philosophy ought to be restricted within the limits of the logic of signs; it has roots in the logic of feeling, and many of its products, which cannot emerge into the air of exact science, nevertheless give the impulse to theories and regulate the conduct.

While thus proclaiming the necessity of its inclusion, we must be careful to assign the limits of its range. Appeals are often made to sentiment, and questions peremptorily decided by it, which are wholly beyond its proper jurisdiction. Rhetoric and prejudice are thus called upon to do the work of reason and demonstration, in cases where verification, and not conviction, is the immediate object of research,—where we are not inquiring into the fact of whether a certain conviction exists, but into the ponderable evidence for its truth,—not whether some men or many men feel disgust or admiration, wrath or compassion, but whether this sentiment, which has its personal grounds, has also impersonal and rational grounds, such as must coerce every impartial mind desirous of ascertaining the truth. Hence the facts of sentiment need to be interpreted with the same caution as the facts of external order; and this interpretation is never complete, until we reach those limits which are the ultimates of all research.

We live encompassed by mysteries; we are flooded by influences of awe, tenderness, and sympathy, which no words can adequately express, no theory thoroughly explain. These are ultimate facts of feeling which we simply accept. For instance, we have moral instincts and æsthetic instincts, which determine conduct and magnify existence; but of these desires for the welfare of others, and this enjoyment of beauty, we can give no better account than that we find them as facts of human nature; and no better justification, when questioned, than that their influences are beneficial. We can give no better reason why we ought to care for the welfare of others—suffering from their sufferings and rejoicing in their joys,—than why sugar is sweet to the taste; they are facts of the human organism; which facts psychology and physiology may approximately explain by exhibiting the factors, pointing out the observed reactions of the organism under certain conditions; but which, in a last resort, can only be justified by asserting that the facts are so. To use Cicero's pregnant phrase, "Nature has inclined us to love men; and this is the foundation of the law." If a man is insensible to the welfare of others, we can no more convince him that he ought to feel for them than we can convince the blind man that he ought to see the glories of color. If a man is insensible to the mystery of the universe; if his soul, like that of an animal, is unvisited by any suggestions of a life larger than his own, and of any existence where his feelings have no home; if he is blind to the visible facts of evolution manifest in the history of the world and the progress of his race; deaf to the cries of pain and struggle which deeply move his fellows; dead to the stirring impulses of pity which move others to remedy the sorrows and enlarge the pleasures of mankind,—by what array of argument could we hope to make him feel what his nature does not feel?

Happily there is no such man. There are only men who feel less vividly than others; none are wholly without the feelings. And it is on this foundation that a moral science is possible; which proceeds, like physical science, by an exact classification of the observed facts, and their coördination. The facts are more complex, the coördination is more delicate and difficult; but their analysis and sympathies, if accurately performed, must yield results of equal validity.

All depends, therefore, on the interpretation of the facts.

The inconsiderate way in which sentiment is suffered to mingle with and pervert rational research, in matters beyond its jurisdiction (as when geological or biological inquiries have been arrested or perverted by alarmed theology or national prejudice), has given rise to an impatient distrust of its admission anywhere in philosophy. Not only is the physicist justifiably indignant at the idea of his procedures being controlled by appeals to feelings which are not directly implicated in his researches—not only does he reject all personal considerations as irrelevant to the impersonal relations he is considering,—but by the violence of reaction against this foolish interference he is swung into the opposite foolishness of altogether denying a place to sentiment in philosophy. He insists that sentiment be excluded from the laboratory; and this is wise. But he also often insists that it be excluded from the teacher's chair; and this is unwise. Limiting his conception of science to its procedures, and not taking into account its social inspiration and its social purpose, he divorces it from religion, and from all connection with sentiment; although such a divorce at once abdicates the highest position, converting science into the sheer occupation of an unsocial curiosity, and leaving religion to teachers who pretend to explain the universe without the aid of positive knowledge.

MARGARET FULLER.

Sitting on the girls' benches, conspicuous among the school-girls of unlettered origin by that look which rarely fails to betray hereditary and congenital culture, was a young person very nearly my own age. She came with the reputation of being "smart," as we should have called it, clever as we say now-a-days. This was Margaret Fuller, the only one among us who, like Jean Paul, like the Duke, like Bettina, has slipped the cable of the more distinctive name to which she was anchored, and floats on the waves of Margaret. Her air to her schoolmates was marked by a certain stateliness and distance, as if she had other thoughts than theirs, and was not of them. She was a great student, and a great reader of what she used to call "nawvels." I remember her so well, as she appeared at school, and later, that I regret that she had not been faithfully given to canvas or marble in the day of her best looks. None know her aspect who have not seen her living. Margaret, as I remember her at school, and afterward, was tall, fair-complexioned, with a watery, aqua-marine lustre in her light eyes, which she used to make small, as one does who looks at the sunshine. A remarkable point about her was that long, flexile neck, arching and undulating in sinuous movements, which one who loved her would compare to those of a swan, and one who loved her not to those of the ophidian who tempted our common mother. Her talk was affluent, magisterial, some would say euphuistic, but surpassing the talk of women in breadth and audacity. Her face kindled, and reddened, and dilated in every feature, as she spoke; and, as I once saw her, in a fine storm of indignation at the supposed ill-treatment of a relative, showed itself capable of something resembling what Milton calls the viragonian aspect. Little incidents bear telling when they recall anything of such a celebrity as Margaret. I remember being greatly awed once, in our school-days, with the maturity of one of her expressions. Some themes were brought home from the school for examination by my father, among them one of hers. I took it up with a certain emulous interest (for I fancied at that day that I, too, had drawn a prize, say a five-dollar one, at least, in the great intellectual life-lottery), and read the first words. "It is a trite remark," she began. I stopped. Alas! I did not know what trite meant. How could I ever judge Margaret fairly after such a crushing discovery of her superiority? I doubt if I ever did; yet oh, how pleasant it would have been, at about the age, say, of three-score and ten, to rake over these ashes for cinders with her,—she in a snowy cap, and I in a decent peruke!—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

IT IS NOW SOME five years since the Irish Church was disestablished, but it was only recently that the Protestant Episcopal Synod came to a decision about the Cursing Creed, or rather the damnatory clauses of that creed. . . . It appears that the Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin were not quite pleased with the voting upon this question. The idea of putting the question of eternal punishment to the vote seems to have struck them as verging, if not on the absurd, at least upon the foolish. With them this is one of their fundamental principles, and they expressed their sense of the incongruity of their position, when those principles were to be adapted to every change of majority and minority. However, the whole question of the Athanasian Creed was reopened, and finally it was resolved that it should be left intact in its present position in the Prayer Book, and at the same time to omit the damnatory clauses in the creed when it is used in public service. The prelates had a right of vote upon this, but as only three out of seven exercised it, the motion was carried.

We fear that this example of putting eternal damnation to the vote will lead to results scarcely anticipated. As we understand the matter, the dear old thing—that blessed means of converting the "untutored savage" to the full comprehension of the beauties of the Christian faith, as Bishop Selwyn would have us believe—is to be placed intact in the Prayer Book, unstripped of its rich vocabulary of denunciation; but the clergyman, when he comes to it, may damn or not as he pleases. The choice of a clergyman may, therefore, turn somewhat on the question whether or not he is in favor of cursing. And if the whole question of a fundamental principle has been thus put to a vote, and as a result left an open question, why should not the election of a minister thus turn upon the same principle? "Vote for the Rev. Mr. Grimstone and eternal damnation," or "Vote for the Rev. Mr. Honyman and universal charity," would be good election cries, though we confess the spectacle would not be an edifying one.—London Inquirer.

A LITTLE BOY IN Georgetown ran into the house the other day, crying at the top of his voice because another little boy wouldn't let him put mud on his head with a shingle. Some children are just like their parents; no accommodation about them.—N. Y. Observer.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

SIXTY-SEVEN:

JUNE 14, 1874.

Three score and seven! What unguessed thoughts of love
Pursue thy steps to-day—
From lips thou see'st not stir, what blessings move
To crown thy tresses gray!

While on far memories of early years
Thy musing spirit dwells,
And, in the inward closet hid, with tears
Love's sacred rosary tells:

While, lone with thy dear dead, thou dost no more
Commune with things of sense,—
Reverent and still, I stand outside the door,
To greet thee issuing thence,

And be a messenger of living love,
That circles thee about,
And whispers of a Tenderness above
That finds each weeper out.

The human loves that blossom into life
In these poor souls of ours,—
Father and mother, husband, child, and wife,—
These are God's garden flowers;

And one, full-blown and vigorous and sweet,
Dew-laden to the brim,—
The Gardener bids me lay it at thy feet,
A message mute from Him!

ASTERISK.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 1.

John W. Sullings, $23; Chas. Putnam, $3; Harmony Club, 25 cents; E. Hammar, 25 cents; Wm. S. Camp, $2; Ella Groot, 20 cents; A. O. Perkins, 14 cents; J. E. Wight, 10 cents; R. G. Macgill, $10.75; Wm. J. Carleton, $25.36; A. M. Howland, $400; John C. Haynes, $210; W. Q. Mansfield, $3; Geo. H. Young, 50 cents; Phebe B. Dean, $3; Jas. Woffindin, $1; Alfred Warren, 70 cents; Jas. Mackenzie, $1.50; A. F. Hervey, $3; J. Fisher, $3; Geo. C. Davis, $3; A. W. Kelsey, $3; S. E. Sewall, $350; Emma Phipson, $3.89; L. M. Thurston, 25 cents; T. F. Neville, 25 cents; Geo. Soule, 50 cents; A. K. Loring, 40 cents; Geo. H. Foster, 56 cents; Cash, $1.10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Peoria, Illinois: 1874.

IN HIS NAME. A Story of the Waldenses, Seven Hundred Years Ago. By E. E. Hale. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1874.

THE CLERGY A SOURCE OF DANGER TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC. By W. F. Jamieson. Second Edition. Chicago: 1873.

SCOTTISH CHAP-BOOKS. By John Fraser. Part II. New York: H. L. Hinton. 1873. [$1.25: for sale by Estes & Lauriat, Boston.]

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS IN NATURAL HISTORY. Insects of the Plant House. By A. S. Packard, Jr. Boston: Estes & Lauriat.

ORTHODOXY FROM THE HEBREW POINT OF VIEW. Part II. By the Rev. T. P. Kirkman.——THE REIGN OF LAW IN MIND AS IN MATTER. Part II. By Charles Bray.——PLEAS FOR FREE INQUIRY. Part IV. By M. A.——THE CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY: its professed principles and actual policy.——ANTITYPICAL VIEWS.——All published by Thos. Scott, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey.—"Hospital Sunday," June 14, 1874.—"Animal Suffering," June 21, 1874.—"Human Suffering," June 28, 1874.—Preached at St. George's Hall, London.

AMENDMENTS to School Laws. Passed by the Kansas Legislature, Session of 1874.

A DEFENCE OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM. By Alfred R. Wallace, F. R. S. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1874.

MRS. WOODHULL AND HER "SOCIAL FREEDOM." By Austin Kent, Clinton, Mass. 1873.

MYSTERIES OF HIERARCHY. By Isaac P. Noyes, Washington, D. C.

REDPATH'S LYCEUM, July, 1874. Boston.

PROCEEDINGS of the Pennsylvania Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends, at Longwood, Pa. 1874.

OPHTHALMOLOGY and Other Modern Sciences. By T. P. Wilson, M.D. Cincinnati: 1874.

CATALOGUE of Richmond College. 1872-3.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION, together with the By-Laws of the Tompkins Square Homœopathic Dispensary, 265 East Fourth Street, New York. [President, Morris Altman; Secretary, E. P. Orrell; Treasurer, Peter Kehr.]

ATLANTIC MONTHLY, August, 1874. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co.

UNITARIAN REVIEW, July, 1874. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

BRITTAN'S JOURNAL OF SPIRITUAL SCIENCE, April, 1874. New York: Standard Spiritual Library Association.

PENN MONTHLY, July and August, 1874. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut St.

MEDICAL MIRROR, July, 1874. New York: A. K. Butts & Co.

HERALD OF HEALTH, July and August, 1874. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

THE SANITARIAN, August, 1874. New York: 234 Broadway.

OLD AND NEW, August, 1874. Boston: Roberts Bros.

The Index.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

BY

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

Toledo Office: No. 35 Monroe Street. Julius T. Frey, Agent and Clerk.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, ... Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, ... Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

BOSTON, AUGUST 6, 1874.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

FOR THE LAST FOUR WEEKS, we have had nothing whatever to do with editing THE INDEX, and now return to the harness with a greatly improved physical condition; also with a suspicion that our readers would vote us a permanent vacation, if they could thereby secure the continued services of the same able substitutes.

THE PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY of the "Sauk County Freie Gemeinde," in a communication dated Sauk County, Wisconsin, July 23, state that they "are instructed to report to you [THE INDEX] that association as a Liberal League." We are very glad to add it to our standing list of Liberal Leagues. We take this opportunity of requesting notice of all changes of officers that may occur in any of these Leagues, as well as information regarding any active work they may undertake. A Liberal League is worthless unless it works.

THE Free-Thinker, a "leaflet published semi-occasionally" (as it states in its own words) formerly at Eau Clair and now at St. Paul, announced the formation of two new Liberal Leagues in its issue of June 1. One was at Augusta (Wisconsin?), with Mr. Davis Jackson for President and Mr. George P. Vaux for Secretary. The other was at Vanville, but no names are given. When authorized to do so by the receipt of fuller information, we shall be glad to add these new Leagues to our standing list. The Free Thinker is a spicy and able little sheet.

"UNBELIEF IN Boston," says the Independent, "has not for years been so weak as to-day; the Parker Fraternity and the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society are feeble enough; the Horticultural Hall meetings have been abandoned; and if THE INDEX influences anybody at all, it is only the unlettered sceptics of the West." The Horticultural Hall meetings are only held in the winter and spring for a special course of lectures, and will be resumed next season as usual. The other statements of the Independent are equally ignorant and untrue.

MRS. J. R. WALKER, of New Orleans, who has several times contributed excellent articles to THE INDEX, informs us that she has now ready for publication a volume in memory of Captain Joseph Fry, commander of the ill-starred Virginius. The book is to be published and sold exclusively for the benefit of his destitute widow and seven children. It includes a biography of Captain Fry compiled from family papers, letters, journals, etc.; a review of Cuban history; and a sketch of Perry's expedition to Japan drawn from Captain Fry's private journal of the cruise. Mrs. Sarah A. Dorsey, an author of some repute, communicates to the New Orleans Bulletin a very favorable notice of Mrs. Walker's book, which she describes as "a work of purely disinterested friendship on the part of Mrs. Walker, which she hopes may realize something for Mrs. Fry and her children." We venture to commend it in advance to our readers, both on account of the laudable object for which it is published and also of the high anticipations we have formed of its intrinsic character. Mrs. Walker may be addressed at Napoleon Avenue, New Orleans, La.

A THOUGHTFUL and cultivated lady, renewing recently her subscription to THE INDEX, wrote as follows: "In conversing with Orthodox people, I am continually met by the assertion that the divine origin of Christianity is proved by the superior enlightenment of the countries where it prevails. To me the reading of history proves that religion is far more the product of surrounding civilization than the latter is the product of the former, though each depends measurably upon the other. I wish a few succinct articles making this somewhat clear could be written for the paper; they would enlighten some. I am often told that the religious books of the Hindu and Mohammedan systems are many of them such that 'no decent man will translate them.' I should like to know if there is really very much more in them of this questionable tendency to impurity than there is in the Hebrew Scriptures. With a warm heart for THE INDEX and its work, I am truly yours." To the last inquiry only a profound oriental scholar could give a trustworthy answer. To the earlier suggestion we would reply that the first three essays (editorial) of the second volume of THE INDEX were specially devoted to the relation between Christianity and civilization, and that till the first of September we will send this volume as a premium to any one who will forward the name of a new subscriber and three dollars at the same time.

THE NEW YORK Liberal Christian of August 1, in an editorial article on the late communication of Dr. Bartol to THE INDEX, regards it as "common sense" that he advises "those who desire to take a non-Christian or extra-Christian or anti-Christian position to leave the Unitarian denomination." The Boston Christian Register of the same date, commenting on the same communication, thinks Dr. Bartol inconsistent because he many years ago blamed Theodore Parker, who claimed to be a Christian, for not withdrawing voluntarily from the Unitarian denomination, while he praises Mr. Potter, who does not even call himself a Christian, for the very same thing; though we are not aware that Dr. Bartol has surrendered the right to change his opinions in the light of fresh experience, or that he has praised Mr. Potter in this matter for any other reason than that he so manifestly obeys his own conscience. But this is plain, that both of the Unitarian journals consider Dr. Bartol's advice to the radicals to "quit" as wise and manly; and in this we agree with them, having acted on the same plan more than six years ago. If the radicals, however, decline still to "quit," we shall have no reproaches for them; it is as much as we can do to direct our own course, without aspiring to direct that of others.

SOME TIME AGO we referred to the court-martialling of General Howard for alleged misconduct of a grave nature. We take our earliest opportunity, though somewhat late, to republish the following paragraph from the Nation of July 9, which shows that he was too severely condemned at first on the discovery of mismanagement and knavery in matters under his responsible charge:—

The findings of the court-martial in General Howard's case have been published. They declare that the General did not knowingly violate any law of Congress, or rule of the army or of the navy, and did devote all his time and energy to the work entrusted to him, and has made a satisfactory accounting to the Treasury, and that in those cases in which improper investments had been made of the funds of the Bureau, it was done under the advice and opinion of the Second Comptroller, and General Howard was therefore not to be blamed for it. The court was not unanimous on all the points, but was on the main conclusion. General Holt, the Judge-Advocate, has, however, reviewed the finding in a way which General Howard will hardly enjoy. He holds that, though it could not be said that he violated laws or rules with bad intent, yet he did violate them in point of fact, and, if in ignorance, it was ignorance for which there is no excuse; that, when General Howard took charge of the funds of the Bureau, instead of adopting proper precautions for their safe management, he laid aside some safeguards already in use; that he adopted systems of account which did not explain themselves; that he converted public money into bonds, in violation of positive law, on the advice of a subordinate officer of the Treasury, and without referring his action, as in duty bound, to the Secretary, his superior officer; that he also failed to inform this officer that a sum of $300,000 had been for a whole year invested in these bonds until two years after it had been reconverted into money, and then failed to account for the year's interest; and that he presented one account in which a charge of $16,000 was made against the Treasury which had already been paid out of other public money. These and various other omissions, errors, and disorders, General Holt admits, were doubtless the results of ignorance or carelessness; but he would not have it go forth that such ignorance or carelessness in an officer of General Howard's standing is excusable. The President, who seems to have a never-failing tenderness for a man on whom an investigation of any kind has fallen heavily, at once appointed General Howard to the command of the Department of Columbia.

THE GREAT PREACHER'S ORDEAL.

When (according to the ancient legend) King David had been guilty of adultery with Bathsheba and of murderous treachery towards her husband, he repented bitterly on being charged with his crimes by the prophet Nathan; and he poured out his sorrow and contrition in strains that have thrilled the world's heart with pity from that day to this. "I acknowledge my transgressions," he cried, "and my sin is ever before me. . . . Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts. . . . Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. . . . The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

Notwithstanding the atrocity of his deeds, David has conquered forgiveness from mankind by the depth and intensity of his repentance, and the mighty vehemence with which his better nature struggled out of the mire that was polluting it. That his subsequent life was a saintly one, at least by modern standards, no one claims; but it is true, nevertheless, that he has kept a marvellous hold upon the human heart by the passionate contrition with which he confessed and repudiated his own evil acts. Mankind have justly compassionated and pardoned him, because he turned away from his own past with loathing and hatred and gigantic wrestlings against the enemy in his own soul; and when some moral pigmy, incapable doubtless of David's great crimes, but equally incapable of his magnificent penitence, sneers at this "man after God's own heart," and throws it at the Christian Church as a reproach that his splendid poems are still its most precious and prized outbreathings of the religious sentiment, disgust and contempt must contend for mastery in the mind of every magnanimous anti-Christian. "Non tali auxilio." The great battle of freedom with Christianity can never be won by spiritual obtuseness: the arrow that bears death to Gesler will fly from the bow of no squint-eyed Tell.

Why we have thus alluded to David requires, unhappily, but little explanation. Henry Ward Beecher and Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton have been publicly charged with adultery by the husband of the latter; and they have both publicly denied the charge. Until the case has been tried by a proper and legal tribunal (not by a committee of six appointed by one of the parties accused from among his warmest personal friends), the truth or falsehood of this accusation cannot be judicially determined; yet it must be admitted that the heaviest and most distressing evidence against the accused is their own published and not disavowed letters, which contradict flatly, in spirit and tone, their formal denials. The fifty-first Psalm is not more pervaded by a consciousness of guilt than are these letters; it, too, contains no formal confession of any particular act. The piteous undertone sighing through them cannot be drowned by the horrid uproar of the "Scandal;" and he who reads them, not in idle curiosity or in pruriency, but with intense and painful anxiety to learn whether the greatest living preacher of America, the patriot, the reformer, the utterer of grand and searching truths, is still entitled to be respected as a pure and truthful man, will rise from the perusal with the sad conviction that Henry Ward Beecher does not state the truth in his "Card" of July 22, when he says: "My published correspondence on this subject comprises but two elements,—the expression of my grief and that of my desire to shield the honor of a pure and innocent woman."

If that is all,—if the language he uses in describing the "power of the great darkness in which [he] spends much of [his] time," and in portraying with profound pathos his own life as passed "on the ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear, despair," has in it no consciousness of sin,—if his letters testify to no overwhelming sense of having committed some great wrong against others which bows him down with contrition as well as sorrow,—then we are devoid of all delicacy of spiritual perception, and confound simple grief with bitter self-reproach. The cause of this consciousness of sin may be other than that alleged; this remains to be proved. But that a most pathetic consciousness which reminds one irresistibly of the penitential Psalms, and which is neither grief nor concern for another, runs through Mr. Beecher's letters, seems very clear; and it must be explained before confidence can be restored. Unless some real offence against morality lies back of the letters both of Mr. Beecher and of Mrs. Tilton, then both of them must be credited with an excess of morbid exaggeration and over-statement which is scarcely credible on the part of any person; and the necessity of assuming such an exceptional excess on the part of two persons more than doubles the difficulty of the assumption. Be this offence what it may, it is improbable in the highest degree that none exists; and the case must seem grave to any one whose spiritual experience has not been very shallow.

Moreover, while Mr. Beecher, in his "Card," disclaims all passionate regard for Mrs. Tilton, she, in her letter of June 29, 1871, confesses a love that grew to a "passion," which love she "felt and received;" and when she declares that her father's "head would be bowed indeed to the grave," if her "life was to be made known" to him, how are we to reconcile her language with Mr. Beecher's?

